Jets Too Zippy, Further Hamper Film Exhibition in the Sky

Impending jet age in air transportation has thrown another obstacle into the path of Movies En Route Inc., which has been studying ways and means of showing films aboard planes.

Outfit since 1930 has been booking features aboard passenger and other ships touching U. S. ports and is in an expansionist mood. Its biz volume now runs to around $1,000,000 annually.

According to George Barnett, prez of Movies En Route Inc., practically every one of the larger passenger liners today is equipped to show 35m CinemaScope, and 16m installations are proceeding rapidly. His outfit also services cruise ships and a fleet of freighters and tankers.

Writing off the showing of films on trains as "impractical, unless they'd want to add an extra car," Barnett said his company had been intensively studying possibilities of installing projection equipment aboard planes. Some time ago, KLM and Air France ran some experimental showings on their overseas flights, and they were most successful.

However, complained Barnett, a host of problems remain, not the least of which is the oncoming of jet planes which will tend to cut flight skeds in half, leaving barely enough time to bother with pix.

Study of the problem has brought up the following difficulties: Location of the washrooms in planes makes it difficult to place

257,000,000 Radios In World, Tops Copies Of Daily Newspapers

In the world today there are 257,000,000 radio receivers, 44,000,000 video sets, 130,000 motion picture theatres and 255,000,000 copies of the daily newspaper. Tallies are taken from a new United Nations Educational, Scientific, Cultural Organization report, "World Communications," which is the latest international info available on news and entertainment media.

For the first time, a "sharp increase" in the number of radio sets puts the audio medium ahead of the number of copies of daily newspapers in circulation. Nevertheless, world press circulation has risen 14% over the last five years. Radio sets has jumped by 41%.

In the same five-year period, the number of video sets has tripled around the world. However, "World Communications" points out that "cinema has retained its leading role in the world of entertainment, its weekly total of spectators equalling one-tenth of the world's population."

There is no equality from coun-

Hamp's Israeli Trek

Lionel Hampton has again put Israel on his overseas itinerary. Orch leader, now touring Europe, had previously cancelled out his Israeli trek but a special bid from President Ben Zvi was instrumental in getting Hampton to put it on the agenda again.

The Hampton orch will leave for Tel Aviv from Paris May 8 and will tour Israel until June 12. The dates will be promoted by Moshe Wallin. Other jazz units touring Europe and the Near East have been bypassing Israel because of the war tension there. President Zvi said that the Hampton tour was important as a "morale builder." The orch toured Israel for the first time last year.

East Germans Flip Over U. S. Music In AFN-Berlin Coup

Berlin, May 1.

The popularity of the seven German Armed Forces Network (AFN) stations seems to grow bigger and bigger. If it can be measured by the large amount of request letters coming daily from Germans, then the AFN people have really good reason to be proud of their work. Besides their main job, namely to inform, educate and entertain U. S. servicemen in this country, they have contributed to better understanding between Americans and Germans. And that also applies to the East German population. Although many people in East German territories will hardly understand English, they too have taken a fancy to these sta-

Music Cuts One Day From RKO's 'Eternity'

Music hath charms to beat a savage schedule, producer-director John Farrow has decided. He credits music with letting him bring RKO's "Back from Eternity" in one day ahead of schedule.

Ordinarily, cast members wander about the set, or even outside the soundstage, between takes, causing delays that mount up during the shooting of a picture. To avoid it, Farrow hired an accordion team, Dan Borzage and Tony Travers, and had them play between takes. Cast hung around to hear the music—and was always available when needed.

CHESLER GROUP NEARS CONTROL

By GENE ARNEEL

Sale of Warner Bros. Pictures at a whopping price of $66,960,000, in a deal by which Harry, Jack L. and Major Albert Warner would bow out of the corporation they've reared during 50 years, is on the verge of being wrapped up. That's the report from highly-placed Wall Street and banking sources.

Dangling that tall coin before the Warner freres, and all other stockholders of the company, is Lou Chesler, Toronto industrialist who, with his Canadian associates, a short time ago bought out the WB pre-1948 library of pictures in the studio vaults for (a) theatrical reissue and (b) television exposure.

Teamed with Chesler's syndicate is Charles Allen, stock broker of 30 Broad Street, who has a reputation for engaging in blue-chip financial maneuvers.

It's almost five years ago to the day that Allen was a part of a group headed by Louis R. Lurie, San Francisco realtor, which had an arrangement spelled out right down to everything but the signature for the acquisition of WB. At that time Harry Warner, president of the company, had a last-minute change of heart. According to insiders, his attachment to the operation was too strong to permit him in 1951 to sell out. Jack L. Warner, production chief, and Maj. Albert Warner, who's in charge of the New York end, went along with their sibling.

Harry Warner reportedly still is Only 4 Pix Nixed; H'wood 'Purer' Or Church Easier?

Is the Catholic Legion of Decency beginning to "ease up," or is Hollywood conforming more carefully to Legion morality?

Breakdown of Legion ratings since the first of the year indicates that the group, despite its "get tough" line late last year, has been taking it comparatively easy on the product. Out of a total of 106 features reviewed, it classed 28 (26.5%) as A (Unobjectionable for General Patronage) and 50 (47.1%) as A-II (Unobjectionable for Adults).

Another 24 (22.6%) films drew a B (Objectionable in Part for All) rating, and four (3.8%) were tagged C (Condemned). All of the condemned pix were foreign imports.

Comparing the ratings from January through the first two weeks of April with the ratios of 1955 (the Legion year runs from

Broadway Again Pushing Northwards With $35,000,000 Coliseum as Magnet

By JOE COHEN

Opening of the New York Coliseum on Saturday (28) at Columbus Circle is regarded as the start of the uptown shift of the Broadway entertainment centre from Times Square. The move is deemed as inexorable as the northward climb of the entertainment industry in former years from Union Square to Herald Square to Longacre (now Times) Square. A Circle now becomes a new locate of show biz with the cutting of the tape of the new $35,000,000 exhibition and convention centre by Gov. Averell Harriman in the presence of national, state and city dignitaries.

The old objections to the northward shift are rapidly disappearing now that Federal, state and city funds are entering the construction picture by making available huge sums for slum clearance and condemnation of properties.

Another step in the northward move is the announced plans for the Lincoln Square project which will move the Metropolitan Opera House to a new and modern location, along with plans for four theatres, hotels, restaurants, ecc.

Showmen, for years, have prophesied that the future of the Broadway type of show biz is away from Times Square, which many now regard as a blighted area, with its "Coney Island atmosphere" a showcase for juvenile delinquency. New York City made the first move when it repealed outmoded laws which forbade construction of liv-

Japs 'Get' Damon Runyon

San Francisco, May 1.

Opening of "Guys and Dolls" in Tokyo was a vast success, according to producer Sam Goldwyn who arrived here on the S.S. Cleveland last Thursday (26) after a six-week tour. He reported that "the Japanese laughed at all the right places" despite the fact they were following Damon Runyon through subtitles.

Turning to his own future plans, he said he's wavering between an historical and a modern film but wouldn't elaborate.

Raleigh Cigs' $1,000,000 Quiz Set For CBS-TV

Raleigh Cigs has been wrapped up as sponsor of "20 Steps to a Million," Ed Wolf package, with an alternating backer being sought. Quizzer will be launched on CBS-TV within about a month under present plans, since the network is said to be high on the show after looking over the pilot and wants to rush the preem date. There's no slot yet, but at least three spots are being ogled for the $1,000,000 jackpotter.

Half-hour show, embracing five contestants, will be emceed by Monty Hall, Canadian who's made a big rep for himself in the neighbor country. He's been in New York for some months as the emcee on WRCA-TV's daytime "Sky's the Limit." A tax-saving or cap gains device is being worked out by Wolf with Internal Revenue authorities, it's understood.

Wolf is packager of "Break the Bank" and "Masquerade Party." With him on "20 Steps" will be Herb Wolf and Jack Rubin as associate producers, with each involved in the other quizzers.

Shuberts Eye Liberace Nitery Show for B'way

Hollywood, May 1.

A deal is reportedly almost set for a Shubert presentation on Broadway next fall of Liberace's current "Come As You Were" package now at the Riviera in Las Vegas. Show stars the pianist, his brother George and Vampira.

Projected deal would bring the show to Broadway at a $5.50 top for a regular run at a legit house, delaying a planned tv spectacular version. Mounted at cost of $35,-

New 'Rock' Explosion Of Hot Youth; Branch Mgr. Discounts Morals TNT

Minneapolis, May 1.

After witnessing "Rock Around the Clock" at the local suburban Hopkins Theatre, many juveniles on the second night of its run marched out and snake danced down the leading business thoroughfare, breaking store windows. Police quelled the youthful rioters.

Although the picture was doing big business and had been booked for additional nights, the management pulled it when local authorities claimed that the youngsters reacted to the jive music in disorderly fashion.

This was the territory's second riot of juveniles in connection with the film's presentation, the other having occurred at the Hollywood in La Crosse, Wis., where policy intervention also was necessary.

At the same time, according to Hy Chapman, local Columbia branch manager, numerous theatre engagements have been without incident and the picture continues to be a big grosser. He calls the Hopkins and La Crosse incidents "isolated."

Ted Collins' Views on Those Comm'ls And P.A.'s on Chicken-Flickin' Time!

By BOB CHANDLER

It's only a matter of sheer coincidence that Kate Smith's first television appearance in several months Sunday night (29) on "The Ed Sullivan Show" came just as she and manager-partner-producer Ted Collins celebrate their 25th anni in radio and tv. There was the matter of an agreement with NBC-TV not to work for a year after departing that network, plus Collins' near-fatal heart attack a couple of months back that extracted the declaration from Miss Smith that she wouldn't work until he was fully recovered.

So Kate Smith's return to television two days before her silver jubilee (actual date was yesterday, May 1) doesn't take the form of a one-shot jump out of retirement to celebrate the event. In fact, Collins' return to work (fully recovered) and Miss Smith's first of three appearances (remaining from a scheduled six set before Collins' illness) presage a fulltime return to the medium for the pair. The ever-energetic Collins, always a dealer, is working over a trio of possibilities for the fall, which include a half-hour film series starring Miss Smith, a series of eight guest shots on the Sullivan show, and a brace of spectaculars.

Collins, as partner and spokesman, is leaning toward the Sullivan deal as of the moment. After 10,342 hours on radio and 1,040 hours of television over the quarter-century, he'd like to drop some of the headaches and worries that go with a booming business enterprise, the production and ownership of Miss Smith's own shows. "We used to have a staff of 84 when we were doing the program for NBC-TV in the Hudson Theatre, and every minute was a problem. It wasn't so bad in radio; a staff of five did the whole show, and when we were on the air one guy was responsible for getting us out to the public. But in television, I never went home without a problem to Easy Does It: N.Y. to L.A.

Hopping back and forth between New York and the Coast has become about as difficult for actors as sending around the corner to the delicatessen for a container of coffee during rehearsals. Legit actress Leora Dana discovered that a fortnight ago when she went to Hollywood to appear in a vidfilm.

After attending the Broadway preem of "Waiting for Godot," in which her husband, Kurt Kasznar is featured, Miss Dana went to Sardi's restaurant, N. Y., for a snack with several friends and then, shortly after midnight and still in evening gown, she taxied to Idlewild airfield and boarded a sleeper plane for Los Angeles.

By the time she'd arrived on the Coast she'd slept, changed into street dress and breakfasted. She reported at the Republic studio at 10 o'clock that morning in time for the first rehearsal of the telepic.

Ingrid Bergman Doing Only 'Joan' in Mexico

Mexico City, May 1.

Ingrid Bergman will play only one performance of "Joan at Stake" in Mexico, according to Celestino Gorostiza, chief of the theatre department of the government-administered Institute of Fine Arts. He had announced earlier that the inking of Miss Bergman would be for possibly 10 shows. But the final signing allowed for only one performance, to be played at the Palace of Fine Arts (National Theatre) in September, at a date not yet set.

Original statement said Bergman, husband Roberto Rossellini and company of 20 would get $20,000 for the 10 shows, plus $4,000 traveling expenses, and that the show would open here June 12. This time, Gorostiza made no mention of just how much she will get or other financing had been agreed upon at the ultimate inking. The theatre chief disclosed that if the public still clamors for more after the one performance another show might be given.

WMCA Last of Indies To Desert B'way For Poshier Huckster Row

WMCA has quit Broadway after 30 years (18 of them over Lindy's) in order to "go Madison Avenue." The N. Y. radio independent has no kick with Lindy's but figured that sharing space with a penny arcade and a beauty school wasn't the kind of glamor it needed to romance agencies and advertisers, so it moved last week into a new building at 48th St., on agency row.

WMCA, helmed by Nathan Straus, has given up 27,000 square feet of "diffuse" space to pay approximately three times the rental for "functional" headquarters-studios that cover one-third the space it has had since 1938. With the removal of WMCA to poshier East Side environs, it became the last of the indies to shed the one-time center of Gotham radio. (Only WOR, the Mutual network key remains on Broadway, off 41st St.).

The building, in which WMCA relinquished two-floors and 10-studios, in order to gain that all-important sales atmosphere, has a long show biz history. Originally, it housed the Friars' Club. Today, besides Lindy's, it has the Nola Sound Studios. Before moving to 52d and Broadway, the station was located in the Hotel McAlpin, 19 blocks below on the same avenue. (The McAlpin location inspired the call letters WMCA).

Ten studios were built in the hop from the McAlpin, made to accommodate the short-lived five-city network, called Inter-City Broadcasting Network, which WMCA fed. Also, in the mid-

Cantor's Israel Speech

Boston, May 1.

"You don't tell a kid after its born, 'You're out on your own'," declared Eddie Cantor at a press conference for the Greater Boston Defend Israel Dinner at Hotel Statler, where he was guest speaker, Saturday night (28).

The comedian was referring to the refusal of State Dept. to okay sale of $60,000,000 in defense materials to Israel. Cantor and Reuven Dalni, Israeli consul in New York, were chief speakers.

"Our good President Eisenhower and our secretary of state, Mr. (John Foster) Dulles, believe a mighty arsenal is a deterrent to war," Cantor said at the dinner. "If that's good enough for the U. S., then it's good enough for Israel too."

'Let's Be Kind To Germans & Wives Week' at Cannes

Paris, May 1.

Baffling nature of Gallic cinema censorship has again come to the fore following rejection of two films for screening at the current Cannes Festival. Ban overruled the Festival Selection Committee which had chosen a short, "Nuit et Brouillards" (Night and Fog), and recommended the full-length feature, "Cela S'Appelle L'Aurore" (That Is the Dawn).

Exclusion of "Brouillards" was apparently due to its story of German concentration camps. Ministerial officials decided that although the films was done in an objective, aesthetic sense, rather than in one of condemnation, it would be best to eliminate the picture as an entry to prevent any difficulties with Germany.

Likewise, "Aurore" was turned down as "too anarchic" for an international manifestation such as the fest. Principal objection was that it condones a murder and has a man more at ease with his mistress than with his bourgeois wife. Thus, some observers believe, a paradox is apparent when scrutinizing French film censorship.

Though France may have the least interference with moral and social daring in film subjects, its bureaucratic setup and mode of film monitoring give it a heavy political censorship. This inspires sombre treatments of the facts of life but rarely motivates attempts at more topical and graver treatments of contemporary human problems.

While the industry has been fighting for a self-regulatory body, the law at present is administered by the Commission De Controle Du Cinema. This government agency, which works through the Centre National De La Cinematographie, is charged with checking on all films "to safeguard public morals and maintain the public order."

Pre-Censorship, Too

Despite the Commission's "final authority," actually the Minister of Commerce and Industry has the last say and can override Commission decisions. There's also a pre-censorship setup of two commissions which pass on scripts to enable producers to avail themselves of Film Aid funds. Here, too, political censorship can take place since the head of these commissions is also on the Controle Du Cinema.

With the various ministries having a say, via their members on the Commission, it's only too obvious that they exercise their scissoring rights when a subject threatens to impinge upon their respective spheres. This situation barred H. G. Clouzot from fulfilling a desire to make films on the touchy Indo-Chinese and North African problems. Andre Cayatte wasn't allowed to film "L'Affaire Seznec," which concerned a miscarriage of justice.

Also harassing both producers and exhibs is local censorship. Many mayors are pressured by various cultural groups, both social and political, with axes to grind about films. If a mayor resists, then the minority bodies frequently resort to demonstrations to achieve their demands. Recent example is "Le Rouge et le Noire," which military and Catholic groups

The N.Y. Coliseum

Following World War I realty interests envisioned "moving Broadway uptown." Martin Beck in the 1920s dramatized it by building a legit theatre on the west side of 8th Ave. William Randolph Hearst, Arthur Brisbane, Marion Davies and allied interests placed their sights on Columbus Circle and eastward to 6th Ave., in the neighborhood of 54th St., where today's Hotel Warwick and Ziegfeld Theatre stand. But not until the opening last Saturday (28) of the new $35,000,000 Coliseum, on Columbus Circle, 58th to 60th St., has New York seen so vividly dramatized an opportunity for "moving" show business uptown.

It is already on the record how dramatic and vivid is this new colossus on the Manhattan scene, so this treatise will not gild the lily any further. (A news story herewith tells it in detail).

But if ever the Broadway Assn. has a challenge, the opening of the Coliseum is it. It is unquestionably an important forward step in improving the blowzy Lincoln Square via the planned new Metropolitan Opera House, plus a civic and art centre, plus a branch campus of Fordham U., and other rehabilitation projects.

It is to be hoped that the traditional gripes about Orange Juice Gulch and kindred stock complaints which were part of the Broadway Assn.'s periodical "script"—but nothing was ever done about it—will not flood over to the environs of the new Coliseum.

It so happens that, as of now, some fringe hotels and restaurants have been somewhat on the dubious side. Some already have gone in for facelifting in anticipation. Some which happen to be contiguously and fortuitously situated in the environs are making a new pretence of respectability. (Even the outlanders will find out tain't so.)

Back to the Broadway Assn.—there is an opportunity there for a little commonsense in that Columbus Circle detour and the routining of Broadway one-way southward. After-theatre traffic, which would normally wend its way home northward up the Main Drag, finds itself detoured to 8th Ave. or 7th Ave., the latter now a particularly awkward and overloaded artery, bottle-necked as it approaches 59th St., yclept Central Park South. Any attempt to take it via 6th or 5th Ave., is equally abortive. What Traffic Commr. T. T. Wiley and his aides think they accomplish at a post-10 p.m. theatre hour is something the Broadway Assn. could explore to advantage. As for that Columbus Circle ring-around-the-rosy, any Gotham cabdriver has some choice language appraisal of that ignoble—to date—experiment.

But that's nothing to deprecate the Coliseum. It is a noble monument in the world's greatest city, which now has a convention meeting place to match all the other artistic, cultural, economic and entertainment values which only the Big City can boast.

Girl Theatre Mgr. Makes Nudes Don More Clothes

Bradford, Eng., April 24.

Gwladys Laidler, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, objected to draping of nudes in "Paris After Dark," a Paul Raymond revue, so she made her own alterations to the garb. The terms of contract, she said, gave her the right to object to any of the songs, speeches, dialog, business or costume which she considered unsuitable or displeasing.

She said she made the alterations "with a view to bringing the production more into line with the tradition of the theatre."

"As the show stood, it was not suitable," she said. "Some of the acts were quite clean and good variety, but the nudes were not artistic—and while here would certainly have to be draped."

TOM O'NEIL CHEERS 'AGE OF PROGRESS'

Television and the film industry can get together profitably and there is plenty for everybody in the entertainment field, Thomas F. O'Neil told an overflow crowd at the Poor Richard Club, the town's top advertising organization.

O'Neil, chairman of the board of RKO Radio Pictures and president of the Mutual Broadcasting System, believes the technological revolution is "the distinguishing mark of our age" "From the factory to the kitchen automation has taken over," he said "and if there is one area, which above all others can be counted upon to employ people's free time—it is entertainment."

Ridiculing the prophets of gloom, O'Neil predicted that technology would shorten the work week to 37 hours by 1960 and foresaw a 30-hour week by 1980. He scouted the idea that new entertainment forms, such as television, would kill off the parent forms, and declared that all would prosper even more in the advances made.

O'Neil pointed to the survival of the phonograph and the motion picture after temporary setbacks due to radio, which in turn was hit

Scott Fitzgerald Heir, Sally Benson Quarrel Over Rival TV Bids

A dispute over two alternative television offers for the rights to the legit play, "Young and Beautiful," has developed between Sally Benson, who dramatized the original F. Scott Fitzgerald story, and Mrs. Frances Scott Fitzgerald Lanahan, the late novelist's daughter and heir. The matter is expected to go to arbitration.

Both the Robert Montgomery show and ABC-TV have made bids for the single-time video rights to the property. Mrs. Lanahan, who controls the basic rights, reportedly favors the Montgomery offer, which is understood to involve a higher fee. Miss Benson prefers the ABC-TV pitch, however, on the theory that despite the lower payment, it would presumably involve a more ambitious production and thereby enhance "Young and Beautiful" as a prospect for film sale.

Mrs. Lanahan's agent on the original Fitzgerald stories is Harold Ober, while Miss Benson's agent is Barron Polan. "Young and Beautiful" had a 65-performance run on Broadway last fall, losing approximately $65,000.

LOEW'S OWN CINEMA IN ALL REICH BURGS

With the opening of the Waterloo Theatre in Hamburg, Germany, Loew's International has accomplished the first step in its aim to operate a theatre in every key city of Western Germany. Prexy Arthur Loew disclosed the opening of the Waterloo in a post-meeting report to the stockholders of Loew's Inc.

Film company topper also revealed the company's acquisition of its first foreign drive-in theatre—in Salisbury, the largest city and capital of Southern Rhodesia, Africa. This, too, represents the first move of a longrange plan "to lease, buy or construct drive-in theatres in areas particularly suited to that type of operation." The company's new Metro Theatre, a 2-800-seater in Buenos Aires, Argentina, will be opened this spring, Loew reported.

OFF-TYPE GETS VERY TYPICAL

Vexed Germans Scram Cannes; Hayward May Cop Top Actress; Hail Non-Hollywood Hungarians

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 1.

Illustrative of current "tact" of French authorities, German "Sky Without Stars," previously exhibited in Switzerland, has been banned for the Cannes Film Festival. Reason: might offend Russia. But Russians quickly denied making any protest. German delegation expressed its ire by walking out of Festival.

Columbia's "Harder They Fall" drew very good critical response when shown here and Metro's "I'll Cry Tomorrow" did fair in reactions. Film's star, Susan Hayward, however, ran away with kudos and is rated a likely winner of best acting award.

Alfred Hitchcock's "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) was shown to a big turnout and was liked but is not deemed a candidate for an award.

Festival's kickoff April 23 was to the three C's which make or break a film fest this side: celebs, climate and cinema values. Big migration of newspapermen from the Kelly-Rainier wedding at Monte Carlo gave this year's gathering a special heft.

Hungary, which supplied a backbone to Hollywood filmmaking and ribbing, suddenly presented a worthy entry of its own in a surprisingly lyrical, moving comedy-drama reminiscent of the best in pre-war love stories. Called "Khorinta" (Little Fairground Swing), directed by Zoltan Fabri, it brightened jaded critics and swung into fest conversation. Subtle direction made this tale of two lovers separated by social and political barriers a taking pic with its centimentality never mawkish. Its political aspects were not overstated

German Co-Production May Have Advantages By 1958—Schellkopf

German-American coproduction has a great future, but not before next year, says Anton Schellkopf, German producer-director, head of Oskar Film (Munich) and on the board of the German Export Union.

Schellkopf said that, for the moment, he could see little advantage in coproduction from the U. S. point-of-view. "When we have succeeded in establishing our stars, then it will be more useful," he commented.

He said one of the prime problems facing the German industry was the introduction of international stories, done in a way that would appeal in the world market. "Our German writers have a tendency to be too provincial," he declared. "They can see only the German market. What we need is a broader point-of-view."

Schellkopf thought that there had been considerable improvement in technique in German films, but that—in relation to the U. S. market—the need remained to intro German personalities to the American public. "We should introduce our best pictures here in dubbed form," he said.

In this connection, the German

Film and theatre companies are continuing with purchases of their own common stock issues on the open market.

As of over the past few weeks, Universal led the list with acquisition of 58,050 shares of its common stock. Warners bought in 10,500, Stanley Warner 15,468, National Theatres 600, and Columbia picked up 450 share of its $4.25 cumulative preferred.

Foreign Press Lines Up World Film Festival, Seeks Video Auspices

Hollywood, May 1.

Hollywood Foreign Press Assn. has completed plans for a five-day world film festival to be held here in October, with stars of several foreign countries in attendence. If successful, project would become an annual event.

Negotiation is underway for a network television show as a highlight of the proceedings.

Stars who will come here, it's asserted, will be top names familiar to U.S. audiences. Some already have accepted. They will represent Italy, France, Germany, England, Spain, Mexico and Japan and HFPA also expects to have two stars here from Soviet Russia.

20TH IN SO. AFRICA

$4,900,000 in Yank Dollars, Plus —Ozoner Expansion, Too

Acquisition of African Theatres, Ltd., in South Africa by 20th-Fox will cost the company $4,900,000 in American dollars in addition to funds borrowed from South African banks and running so far to $2,800,000.

This was disclosed last week in the 20th annual report which said "present indications are that our offer to purchase the entire capital stock of African Theatres, Ltd., will be accepted." Acceptance is conditioned on 20th obtaining 100% of the outstanding shares. Report said the takeover, which includes other properties apart from the 140 theatres, should take place in June.

20th plans to build several drive-ins in South Africa, the report stated.

Subsidiary formed by 20th, which made the offer to the stockholders of African Theatres, has deposited some $4,200,000 in escrow as part of the purchase price. Of this amount, $1,400,000 was advanced by 20th and the rest was obtained via a South African loan.

"Upon consummation of the purchase, additional advances of $3,500,000 in United States funds ultimately will be required," the report stated.

Extras Resume Talks

Hollywood, May 1.

Negotiations between the Screen Extras Guild and Assn. of Motion Picture Producers and the Alliance of Television Film Producers have been resumed, SEG prexy Richard H. Gordon reports.

Talks were broken off by the guild March 31 when a deadlock was reached. But Gordon said he is in hopes agreement on a new, fair pact can be reached soon.

Plato Skouras Buys Novel

Hollywood, May 1.

Plato Skouras has bought "Sierra Baron," novel by Thomas Wakefield Blackburn, and plans to film it as an indie. Blackburn also wrote last year's hit tune, "Ballad of Davy Crockett."

Dick Hyland of Frank Cooper Associates repped the writer in negotiations.

Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis, now on the Coast, will be coming east at the end of next month with a sked including an appearance before the state governors' convention in Atlantic City, June 26 and a local DuMont telethon from Carnegie Hall June 29-30 for Muscular Dystrophy.

STARS ON KICK FOR 'NEW' ROLES

Hollywood, May 1.

Income tax started it. Widescreen with its fewer-but-more-unusual pictures abetted it. The emancipation of the old studio slaves chained to "type" has now been completed. For umpteen decades Hollywood performers complained bitterly of their inability to get away from stale roles with their hamming. No more. Today they are free as their agents' imaginations.

Not only is it comparatively easy to slip out of the handcuffs of type in the Hollywood of the present what'll-we-do-next-to-pop-people's-eyebrows-off era, but an alert actor who is unable to think of a sufficiently offbeat assignment for himself may develop an inferiority complex again and have to go back to his psychoanalyst. Off-type casting is currently almost the expected thing and rapidly becoming no novelty. Heroes become heavies and a heavy like Ernest Borgnine cops an Oscar for mushing up a wistful wallflower. Who's astonished anymore?

The present kicking-over-the-old traces kick among performers points to Frank Sinatra in Columbia's "From Here to Eternity." It blasted him out of rut and into a new boom and probably has done more to influence actor psychology in recent semesters than any single other event.

Not Everyone's 'Switch'

However, many in Hollywood feel that it is a mistake to abandon type-casting entirely. Some performers are so perfectly suited to what they are doing that it would be a mistake to take them out of their natural element. Some of the best action stars, for example, shouldn't be thrown into comedy merely for the sake of exploiting a "switch."

But new atmospheres prevailing at the major studios are definitely conducive for the present to offbeat casting and since independents have always been willing to take longer gambles, prospects are dim for type-casting.

According to one producer, Robert Goldstein, studio practice was always the villain in the problem

Gold Medal Premise: Use Gotham's Writers & Directors, Rate Video Only as 'Sketch' of Scenario

Gold Medal Productions, the new firm established by Martin A. Poll, aims to utilize New York talent—including writers, directors and actors—for its feature film program. Poll's idea: writer, director or performer can bring a project to the company and if it meets the approval of the board, Gold Medal will arrange for the financing and the subsequent release. A majority of the feature pictures would be filmed in Gotham.

Gold Medal expects to get rolling in about three months. Mel Goldberg's "Circle of Guilt," originally a Studio One teleplay, is under consideration as teeoff effort. Poll stressed that his company "would not compete with the Hollywood $1,000,000 pictures," but it would concentrate "on the quality of writing and direction."

In discussing the possibility of converting tv scripts to the screen, Poll emphasized that the teleplays would only serve as the "nucleus" of the story and would not be "stretched" into a full-length motion picture. Gold Medal, he said, would use the basic idea of the tv script, start from scratch, and develop it completely along motion picture lines.

Alfred W. Schwalberg, former president of Paramount Distributing Corp., is a director of the company and will serve as "consultant," sales representative, and general adviser." Gold Medal shares office space with Schwalberg's Artists-Producers Assn., a producer's representative outfit.

Reich Foreswears Any Discrimination Vs. Yank Films for 20 Months

Washington, May 1.

U. S. and West Germany signed an agreement at Bonn last week under which there will be no German discrimination against foreign films for the next 20 months.

The U. S. agreed to a revision of German tariff schedules, elimiating a section under which Germany had been barred from reserving more than 27% of exhibition time for domestic pix.

In exchange, the Germans agreed there would be no discrimination until after Dec. 31, 1957. If the pact is not denounced by either side before then, it is to continue until Dec. 31, 1958.

UNLEASH JEFF CHANDLER

He'll Start Earlier As Indie Producer Thanks to U

Hollywood, May 1.

Universal has rewritten Jeff Chandler's existing contract with the studio to permit him to launch his own independent production plans next month, beginning with "Drango," a $1,000,000 budgeter which will be produced by Hall Bartlett, who wrote the screenplay. It will be made under the banner of Chandler's Earlmar Productions, firm in which he's partnered with his agent, Meyer Mishkin.

Existing contract has three months to run, after which Chandler begins work under a two-films-a-year basis for three years. To permit him to start "Drango," U is granting him a leave of absence for several months, in return for which he will do two more films before the two-a-year pact is activated.

Earlmar has a three year releasing deal with United Artists calling for two pictures annually. Chandler will appear in only one of the two annual Earlmar entries.

Biz Stays Spotty; 'Swan' Still Champ, 'Suit' Again Second, 'Jubal' 3d, 'Holiday,' 'Okla.' Next

Milder weather which sloughed weekend trade in many key cities is making firstrun biz uneven to sluggish in most spots covered by VARIETY this stanza. Also, there is a dearth of fresh product to hypo the take, many exhibs waiting until later in the month for important changes of pictures.

"The Swan" (M-G), which was No. 1 last session, again is finishing first with important takings in some 14 keys. It is closely followed by "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th), which also was second last week. "Jubal" (Col) is copping third place as against fifth spot last round.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) is finishing fourth, although playing in fewer key cities than in recent weeks since "7 Workers of World" (Indie) has replaced it in some four spots. "Oklahoma" (Magna) is winding fifth.

"Harder They Fall" (Col), which comes into the N. Y. Astor soon, is taking sixth money, though just getting started out in the keys. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) is pushing up to seventh position. "Cry Tomorrow" (M-G), long high on list, is taking eighth spot.

"Alexander the Great" (UA) will capture ninth place while "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) rounds out the Top 10 list. "Serenade" (WB), "Creature Walks Among Us" (U), "Diabolique" (UMPO) and "Lady-killers" (Cont) are the runner-up films.

"Birds and Bees" (Par), with results from three key cities this stanza, so far is uneven. It is fair in N. Y., nice in Toronto and pleasing in L. A. "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col), also new, shapes good in Cleveland, modest in Philly and mildish in L. A.

"7 Wonders of World" (Indie) is displaying amazing strength on tee-off engagements, some keys reporting its showing as best of all "Cinerama" pix. It is great in Pitt, socko in St. Louis, solid in Philly and capaci'y in N. Y., where it is beating the opening week figure in its second round.

"Touch and Go" (U), another new entry, okay in N. Y. and Chi, is rated big in Boston and fast in K. C. "Hilda Crane" (20th) is not getting far on its initial dates. "Mohawk," from same company, however, is fancy in Buffalo and good in Boston. "Rack" (M-G) looms stout in Washington and fair in St. Loo.

"Kettles in Ozarks" (U) shapes good in Denver. "Comanche" (UA), big in Chi, looms good in Detroit. "Conqueror" (RKO) shapes fine in Balto and N. Y.

"Doctor At Sea" (Rep) continues smoothly in Balto, N. Y., Frisco and L. A. "Carousel" (20th), big in Philly, is not so strong in L. A.

Other Majors Mull M-G's C'Scoper In B&W, 20th Still Favors Tint

Metro's decision to pioneer with black-and-white in the CinemaScope field is being watched with considerable interest by all other companies, including 20th-Fox.

There has long been a feeling among company execs that the indiscriminate use of color in C'Scope pix was a mistake and, in some instances, uneconomical. It's an argument with which even some 20th execs go along privately.

Officially, 20th is still sticking to the theory that CinemaScope can't be at its best unless it's tinted, and that color is a b.o. stimulant, whether it's needed in any particular picture or not.

First Metro release in b & w CinemaScope will be "The Power and the Prize," starring Robert Taylor. M-G decision to give b&w a try was reported in VARIETY on April 18.

One of the economic advantages of b&w C'Scope is the much lower cost of prints. In the instance of 20th, its print bill—aggravated by the fact that it continues to supply stereophonic and optical sound—runs in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. It's a load which some in the company feel could be lightened without any particular harm done to the value of certain pictures which, in fact, might be even more effective in black-and-white.

Metro some time ago wanted to make a b&w C'Scope feature, but was dissuaded by 20th. It's pointed out, however, that the b.o. value of color is debatable and that some important films in b&w have done very well, mostly because their subject matter didn't require tint effects.

There are some directors who feel—and have said so—that b&w can actually be a boon on certain types of films.

Short-Sellers Off AB-Par

Short interest on the New York Stock Exchange, meaning those investors whose gains derive from a decrease in the stock's trading price, are easing off on American Broadcasting-United Paramount. In other words, they don't look for a drop in AB-PT values.

There were 3,784 short interest shares of AB-PT in March. This fell to only 584 shares in April.

Freres Gilbert Press For Restored Cumulative Voting at 20th-Fox

Annual stockholders meet of 20th-Fox on May 15 will have before it a resolution by Lewis D. and John J. Gilbert to restore cumulative voting. Latter procedure was eliminated at a special stockholders meeting in May of 1953, ending a proxy fight initiated by Charles Green against the management.

Gilbert brothers' resolution, if passed, would allow each stockholder to cast all of his votes for a single director or to distribute them among as many as he chooses. The Gilberts are owners of 10 shares each and are put down as repping an additional family interest of 10 shares.

Proxy proposed all 10 directors for reelection. It put the total remuneration of 20th officers and directors (25 persons) at $1,622,426. Highest salaried exec in 1955 was production chief Darryl F. Zanuck with $265,000. He was followed by prexy Spyros P. Skouras with $249,858 and Al Lichtman, former director of distribution, with $210,940. Of the officers, Skouras is the only one not participating in the company's retirement plan. Zanuck's estimated annual retirement benefits on reaching age 65 would be $12,455 a year.

Majority of British Producers Oppose Any Eady Benefits for Yanks

By HAROLD MYERS

London, May 1.

A majority of British producers are opposed to the principle of films made in this country by American companies being able to qualify for quota and being eligible for a share of the Eady coin. That is one of the most important decisions taken at a series of secret meetings during recent weeks by the British Film Producers Assn.

The sessions were called by the BFPA in order to draft a reply to a questionnaire received from the National Film Finance Corp. The questionnaire is the first stage of the latest governmental inquiry into the British picture industry, and the replies received from all sections of the business will govern future policy on renewal of legislation.

At the final meeting held last week, at which the draft reply was approved, the BFPA carried out the principle of sending minority reports, where justified, on the more controversial issues. Such a minority report has been sent to the NFFC in regard to American production in Britain.

Indies Resent U. S. Horn-In

It has been no secret that an active faction of independent producers have resented the way in which chunks of Eady money have been diverted from their own immediate needs into the pockets of prosperous U.S. majors. VARIETY reported some months ago that a move was afoot to end this diversion, either by an alteration to the Eady rules or by amendment of the Quota Act. So far this is the only positive action that has been taken.

It is understood that the BFPA majority viewpoint concerns only productions made exclusively by Hollywood majors. It doesn't refer to films made in association with local outfits or to co-productions. A separate formula for dealing with these is being advocated.

Another major issue, which called for a majority-minority reply, concerned the question of monopoly. A move to advocate the complete severance of the two Rank circuits was defeated.

The minority viewpoint on this subject is being expressed, however. Under the present arrangement, the two circuits are operated by Circuit Management Assn. Ltd. and their programs are booked by one person, Richard Hamer. The minority objects to the principle of one man having the final say-so on bookings in two major theatre groups. They feel there is too much power there for one person to have.

Test of Title Registry System

American Pictures Does Burn as RKO Wins 'Similarity' Okay—Purposely Floods Bureau

Hollywood, May 1.

Marking the first open challenge of the powers of MPAA's Title Registration Bureau, American Pictures Co. has purposely registered a flock of titles that "conflict" with titles of already completed top-budget films. Avowed purpose of the move is to test an arbitration decision in which the indie lost out to RKO some months ago.

Titles registered by American are "The First Conqueror," "First Jet Pilot" and "The First Ten Commandments." RKO, of course, has "The Conqueror" and "Jet Pilot" canned, while Paramount has the Cecil B. DeMille production, "The Ten Commandments."

Tangle between the two factions stems from RKO's recently-completed Ginger Rogers starrer, "The First Traveling Saleslady." American, it seems, has a property titled "The Traveling Saleslady," has priority on the handle with the MPAA and once, some years back when the indie company was releasing through RKO, even submitted the vehicle to RKO as a possible release.

When first learning of RKO's contemplated "The First Traveling Saleslady," American protested to the Title Registration Bureau of a "harmful similarity," and felt that RKO shouldn't be allowed merely to insert the word "first" in the front.

The matter went to arbitration, and RKO won.

American, via its "first" takeoff registrations on "Conqueror," "Jet Pilot" and "Ten Commandments" and the planning of one or all of the subjects for filming, feels that its registration stand is the only way, without going to court, to prove to and convince MPAA it gave a wrong decision in the "Saleslady" arbitration. Indie company, of which Ruth Zugsmith is the head, feels that a principle must be established, that "calling the bluff" of MPAA is the best way by which it can be done.

Technically, of course, one cannot, under U. S. copyright law, keep others from using the same song or book title. MPAA, at the behest of the majority engaged in the film industry, years ago set up the Title Registry to protect those who first conceived certain, distinctive titles. Indies as well as major company members of MPAA regularly have used the Bureau and abided by its decisions.

New York Sound Track

While on a recent holiday in Puerto Rico the always-controversial writer J. B. Mathews amused himself writing his N. Y. Congressman about the numerous prognostications of the extinction of film theatres or their drastic reduction in numbers and came up with a satirical plan to cope with the problem. Wrote Mathews:

"What this country needs to correct this economic imbalance in the entertainment industry is a ticket-bank program. Let us take the year 1946, with 5-billion movie tickets sold, as parity. Your bill establishing the Ticket-Bank Administration (TBA) will authorize movie theatres to print that number of tickets, with the understanding that the government will buy up whatever tickets are not sold. It is obviously not the fault of the movie-house operators if 2 or 3 billion movie tickets remain unsold because people like to stay home and watch TV.

"I strongly urge that these surplus tickets not be stored in a cave where moth and mildew would be sure to attack them. Instead, let us provide for their distribution to the people behind the Iron Curtain. This will give an incentive for these people to visit the United States, and these visits will make for cultural exchange."

Arthur Hornblow Jr. went to London for the avowed purpose of signing a British director for his screen production of "Witness for the Prosecution." So he signed Billy Wilder . . . Edward A. Golden registered "Josef Stalin" as the title for a feature. He's serious ? . . . And RKO has "Around the World in 90 Minutes" upcoming, whereas Mike Todd's globe-girdling film saga is "80 Days" . . . George Brest, producer, distributor, bought "In the Park," Marcel Marceau one-reeler, which he'll package with "Geordie," feature he acquired from Lion Films International . . . A. W. Schwalberg closed for the U. S. and Canadian rights to "Barber of Seville," made by Filmitalia in Rome . . . Lou Bunin, who produced the "Alice in Wonderland" feature and released it in conflict with Walt Disney's production of the same property, has formed Harlequin Productions. He's partnered with cameraman George Pickow and folk singer Oscar Brand in the outfit, which is to produce shorts for both theatres and tv.

Lacy Kastner, prez of Columbia Pictures International, in Hollywood for two weeks of studio powwows on product, etc., along with Nate Spingold.

Serge Semenenko, v.p. of First National Bank of Boston and a familiar figure in show business financing, has purchased an additional 13,000 shares of American News Co. common stock, bringing his total ownership to 33,000 shares. He's a director of ANC.

Metro crew, headed by director David Miller, in Manhattan to film sequences for "The Opposite Sex" . . . Another MG unit off for Danville, Ky. for "Raintree County" locations . . . Edgar Rosenberg, formerly with Box Office Television, on the mend after a long illness.

Well, she finally made it and she'll make one picture. Most aggressively camera—hungry actress of the season, Jayne Mansfield, emerges as the star of "The Burglar," a feature film of Philadelphia locale by Jack Harris . . . Universal's casting director Jack Baur in from the Coast to o.o. New York talent . . . Cornell Borchers returned to her home in Europe Monday (30) after completing "Istanbul" for Universal, the German actress' second U. S. film . . . Ben Goetz, formerly head of Metro production activities in England, sailing for Naples on a vacation trip . . . F. Hugh Herbert planing out to join Mark Robson in England for production of "The Little Hut" . . . Universal "sneaked" "Away All Boats" last night (Tues.) at the RKO 86th Street . . . In an indie deal with Metro, Gene Kelly will produce, star and co-direct with Noel Howard "Happy Journey," original screenplay by Arthur Julian and Joseph Morhaim . . .

Eric Johnston has Spain on his itinerary as soon as his Washington commitments allow him to get away. U. S. boycott of Spain continues . . . There wasn't any actual commitment on the part of the MPEA companies to do a specific amount of color printing in Italy. The American outfits agreed, individually, to do as much local processing as practicable. The Italians had asked that 50% of all color pix released in Italy be printed there, too . . . Price 20th-Fox paid for "10 North Frederick" by John O'Hara was $175,000, not $300,000. Deal involves a percentage arrangement on the gross, so O'Hara's take could go up another $100,000 . . . Erich Pommer has lost a leg and is in a Coast hospital . . . Newsreels gave less footage to Grace Kelly's religious wedding ceremony than to Margaret Truman's nuptials, Kelly coverage in one reel ran only 100 feet. Assumption was the public was being bombarded with too much Kelly material.

It's Delbert (not Daniel) Mann who's been signed to direct "Desire Under the Elms" for Don Hartman. . . .

Herbert Bayard Swope Jr. has been assigned producer chores on 20th-Fox's remake of "Jesse James," which the studio first made in 1936, with Tyrone Power and Henry Fonda starring. First version was produced by Darryl F. Zanuck, with Nunnally Johnson screenplaying. Russell Hughes is scripting the remake.

Boris Vermont, in charge of foreign versions at 20th-Fox, won one of the American Film Assembly's Golden Reel awards in Chicago for his "The Man I Never Saw," dealing with American-sponsored Athens College in Greece. Film was a gift by 20th to the college. Vermont, in 1953, won an Academy Award for producing the art short, "Light in the Window," and he rated a nomination in 1954 . . . Richard Gordon of Renown Films to London and probably also Germany . . . Motion Picture Export Assn. may have to decide on which U. S. films should go into the Berlin film fest. Too many nominations.

Foreign billings of 20th-Fox are still outrunning the domestic take. Company last week racked up $1,100,000 in overseas rentals whereas domestic continued at around $850,000. Situation is expected to change as "Carousel" and "Man in the Grey Flannel Suit" make themselves felt.

White Cloud, Mohawk Indian touring upstate New York on a presell for "Mohawk," is a real motion picture veteran having appeared with Pearl White in "Perils of Pauline" 43 years ago, White Cloud is estimated to have stunted and played small parts in about 4,000 films. He does a knife-throwing act, with Lillian Walker also a Mohawk Indian, as target, on the present swing, part of bally for the 20th film.

Didn't Metro's News-of-the-Day nix a savings bond trailer starring Grace Kelly in which she urged all and sundry to save their pennies, etc., etc.? Pitch didn't sound right from Her Serene Highness . . . Emile J. Lustig due back from Germany . . . John G. Frayne at the SMPTE luncheon Monday (30): "The Russians did invent television, but we had to import a Russian to make it work." . . . Donald Henderson, 20th-Fox treasurer, to South Africa after the stockholders meet May 15 . . . TV distribs (three of 'em) continuing their talks with 20th re the company's film library.

Richard Carlton, eastern sales topper of UM & M, tv film distributing outfit, to become v.p. of Trans-Lux Television. He'll head up sales. T-L TV has the Encyclopedia Britanica library for tv. Carlton will work under Richard Brandt . . . Anyone remember Eidophor, the color theatre-tv system? 20th says it'll be shown to the trade "soon."

A producer, so the gag goes, got the disastrous news: his new picture opened in Chicago to a gross of $6 for the day. He had recovered by the time a friend asked how things were going. "Not bad," said the epic-maker. "My new picture opened in Chicago and we grossed $9" . . . David O. Selznick office taking "A Bill of Divorcement" out of mothballs for a run at the 72d Street Playhouse. John Barrymore and Katharine Hepburn topped the cast of the 1931 entry.

Lyall Stewart appointed distribution officer and U. S. rep in the N. Y. office of the National Film Board of Canada. He's been with the Board since 1951.

UA veep Max E. Youngstein may sneak a week in Israel following his Rome and Madrid powwows on current productions abroad.

FILM FANS' FACTS FACTORY

Men Top Buyers of Film Tickets

Ridley Park, Pa., May 1.

A recent analysis of market trends in the United States, conducted by Sindlinger & Co., shows that males are buying tickets to theatres more than females. For years theatre audiences were 60% femme and 40% men. But since the middle of last October, with the exception of one week, the ratio has switched the other way, according to Albert Sindlinger.

The researcher stated here that Holy Week and Easter Week brought the lowest femme attendance ever recorded since his organization began in the survey field in 1941.

The male frequency of theatre-going hasn't stepped up; it's simply that the femmes aren't buying films the way they used to. How come? Sindlinger was asked.

He said he found that the lady of the house is getting an overdose of product that has its emphasis on raw-boned material and she's rebelling. Scenes of brutality and other harsh subject matter are discouraging the femme patronage, according to Sindlinger.

Check of 49 Dailies Proves Special Film Sections Rare Tho Quite Common in Video

Special television sections are bustin' out in newspapers throughout the country while only on rare occasions do the papers carry special moving picture sections. Film news is generally confined to regular Sunday amusement sections in contrast to the separate VIP treatment accorded tv in specially-edited supplements.

The tv sections, in the main, are issued weekly. They contain comprehensive program listings for the week as well as news and features of current and upcoming video entertainment. The sections, in many cases, are so devised that they can be pulled out and held in the home for ready reference during the week.

Out of 49 newspapers surveyed by the field press representatives of major film companies, as many as 37 carried weekly tv sections. Many newspapers, the survey indicates, also carry special promotional tv sections tied in with dealer and department store ads for tv sets. Motion pictures seldom are involved in similar tieups. A local film premiere or sectional location shooting occasionally brings about a film company alliance with the local business community.

In addition to the special sections, television is obtaining considerable additional support by an increase in advertising either by the local station or by the sponsors. Tv advertising confined specifically to calling attention to programming as contrasted to set sales has increased by as much as 200% in some cities, according to replies received from the field press reps. The increase in tv advertising is general throughout the country, varying in percentage from city to city.

During Wilk Era WB Bankrolled 50 B'way Legits

Film companies are moving into legit production, Metro's move in that direction having been disclosed last week. But no precedents are being set.

Jacob Wilk, eastern story editor for Warners until he resigned in 1952, notes that WB financed upward of 50 plays over the years. Exec was a party to the so-called (John) Wharton-Wilk plan under which, via negotiations with the Authors' League, a film company could open the door to screen rights to a legiter prior to its production. Before this, there could be no such advance understanding concerning screen adaptation.

WB practice was to provide the financing and take over 50% of the show. Company's most remarkable experience was with "Three Men on a Horse," in 1935. Cost of opening, with Shirley Booth and Sam Levene in the leads, was $9,200. WB's share of the profits ran to nearly $400,000.

CROWDED STAGES 1956 RULE AT PARAMOUNT

Hollywood, May 1.

Paramount, which currently has touched its own postwar record, six films shooting, is continuing high level production with 12 more films slated for lensing in next seven months.

Five will start in June which, with two carryovers, will give studio new activities record of seven films before cameras at one time. No May starters.

SINDLINGER & CO. SEEN 'AT HOME'

Ridley Park, Pa., May 1.

Housed in two pint-sized, low-overhead buildings in this suburb of Philadelphia is Sindlinger & Co., a statistical company aiming to solve the mysteries of the box-office and convince the film industry that such an objective can be achieved. With an office staff of 38 and 129 interviewers in the field, Albert Sindlinger, president of the organization, operates on the theory that the person-to-person approach to the public can provide information about pictures that the trade hasn't had through the years but that could be converted into dollars.

He offers a set of answers, for example, to these questions: —

Who among the public are going to the film theatre frequently and infrequently? What have they heard about any particular picture, and do they want to see it? Which are the influencing factors?

Has 600 Theatres

Sindlinger's clients include Columbia, Universal, Paramount, branches of the United Paramount chain, Rembusch Theatres, H. A. Cole Theatres, various outfits in the screen advertising field and the Council of Motion Picture Organizations. The exec is in the red but hopes to operate profitably shortly. He reports his 600 present theatre clients should be increased to 1,500 or 2,000 within the next six weeks.

Sindlinger & Co., visited by this home office VARIETY reporter over the past week, is a mass of coded index cards teeming with data,

Manhattan Tent's Apathy Rapped; 'Host' to Variety Clubs Convention, But Strictly Not on the Job

With the Variety Clubs International holding its annual convention in New York May 9 to 12, the N. Y. unit—Tent 35—is making a last ditch effort to enlist support for the confab among the metropolitan area membership. The Go'hamites, although associated with the host unit, have so far given the cold shoulder to the annual get-together. Out of 600 registrations received, barely a handful are from N. Y. A total registration of 1,000 is expected by convention time.

Martin Levine, convention chairman, and Harold Klein, chief barker of Tent 35, rapped the membership for its apathy at a luncheon Friday (27) and made an impassioned plea to the New Yorkers to support the convention. Both had an assist from Myron Cohen, who after finishing his comedy stint, turned serious in urging members to back the annual meeting.

Unlike out-of-town Variety Clubs, usually the focal point of local show business activities, the N. Y. unit has had difficulty in obtaining year-round support. Except for a few dedicated industryites, the majority of the members take little part in Tent 35's program. Lack of support forced Tent 35 to relinquish its permanent headquarters in the Hotel Piccadilly and to resort to monthly luncheons at Toots Shor's. The luncheons, for the most part, are poorly attended. Only a special one—such as the recent one honoring the N. Y. film critics—brings out a crowd and this is accomplished via the aid of the film companies who feel obligated to take a table for certain functions, particularly ones honoring newspapermen.

Despite the many handicaps, Tent 35 has not lagged in supporting its pet charity, the Variety Club Foundation to Combat Epilepsy. The local Tent has raised beaucoup coin and is actively involved in aiding research in epilepsy, supporting a clinic at Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital, and fighting for the rights of epileptics.

HAPPY FELLA ROBSON; ABOUT M-G INDIE DEAL

Metro's "welcome mat" for independent producers was described as a "healthy sign" by Mark Robson, who in association with F. Hugh Herbert, represents the latest outside package to enter the M-G orbit. With Metro providing the complete financing, Robson and Herbert will co-produce "The Little Hut," which will begin shooting in England July 1.

Robson, who will direct the film, termed Metro's acceptance of the indie as an example of "new blood" being introduced "by the last of the giants" to hold out against outside deals. He felt in general that an indie's stake in a film results in a better finished product, citing, as examples, the recent successes of pictures emanating from independent sources.

The film version will star Ava Gardner, Stewart Granger, and David Niven and will be filmed in Spain as well as London. Robson left for London Monday (23) following a press luncheon at Sardi's, N. Y. Herbert leaves for London this week to assist in the pre-production chores. Under the deal with Metro, Robson and Herbert share the profits 50-50 after recoupment of the production and distribution costs.

'Commandments' Stratospheric Sights

[Barney Balaban Talking of Possible $50,000,000 Gross for DeMille]

By GENE ARNEEL

About to emerge as the costliest enterprise in film industry history, if not all show business, is Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments." When the final tally is in (the producer is now polishing off the epic and figures on a public unveiling next November) the budget will be in the area of $12,000,000, give or take a half million. It reportedly started out as a $6,000,000 production.

Paramount, partnered with DeMille in the project, is making with the big talk about gross potential. At least $50,000,000, says Par prez Barney Balaban. Disinterested economists who haven't onceovered any of the footage can't agree or disagree but they're intrigued by the scope of the investment and will be keeping a sharp lookout on the outcome. For while the economics involved so far are unprecedented, they want to know just how much the global market can yield. "Gone With the Wind" has reaped close to $50,000,000 in worldwide film rentals. But this has taken 15 years. And nothing else has come close to it, the second being 20th-Fox's "The Robe" at $30,000,000.

DeMille started rolling "Commandments" in September, 1954, and expectations were that the price tag would be about $6,000,000. But the producer-director is a stickler for for accuracy and his standards are high. Literally thousands were employed during location work in Egypt and Israel. The entire Par studio was taken over when the lensing shifted to Hollywood; other production companies had to suspend operations or move elsewhere. The costs mounted.

Next: The Jury

With "Commandments" now being readied for the ticket-buying jury, Par is pulling all sorts of switches in the sales and promotion departments designed to assure a moneywise sound verdict. A separate department has been established under Charles Boasberg, former worldwide sales head of RKO, to lasso theatre dates. Seven so far have been set, including New York's Criterion and the Warner Beverly on the Coast. Film will be shown on a roadshow policy with intermissions between each performance and at admission prices of at least $3.50. In the case of "Commandments," pictures will cease as the poor man's entertainment, the tall tariff being required if Par is to come out on top.

As for reaching the public, Par has drawn an elaborate program that will reach, it's hoped, everyone with the exception of those out of contact with the world. Coordinator of the operation is Maxwell (Mack) Hamilton, a public relations specialist who is new to the film industry. As explained by Jerry Pickman, Par's ad-pub v.p., the fact that Hamilton hasn't been acquainted with the business is significant for, it's believed, he ought to come up with a fresh approach and avoid the traditional bally cliches. "We want to hit all of the public and not just the regular motion picture-goer," states Pickman.

Actually, the "sell" on "Commandments" began when the feature went into work with staffers instructed to work on it alone. Now Par is moving into the homestretch with a four-part blueprint for the campaign, each in elaborate detail, and personnel additions are being taken on in New York and the Coast to handle the follow-through.

Part 1 is public relations, comprising, a speaker's bureau, house organs, editorial and news column in the lay press, public service and radio-television news programs, direct mail, special features in selected publications, displays of research, trade and technical publications and the labor press. All are to be used, it's said, to get across the message.

Part 2 is the prestige and cultural phase. Under this, the U. S. State Department and foreign governments will be asked to assist in the global pitch, as will churches and synagogues, women's groups, foreign cultural groups, libraries, museums, etc.

Part 3 is the entertainment world with Samuel J. Friedman as director of the promotion. The outlets include the national and fan magazines, the amusement pages, radio and tv generally, film trade press, theatres, industry crafts and unions, Coast and N. Y. correspondents of the foreign papers, review boards and syndicates.

Part 4 embraces theatre merchandising.

All of this is a tall order, of course. How much can be accomplished remains to be seen. One of the great film campaigns of recent years was the one conducted by Charles Einfeld for CinemaScope and "The Robe." Par is out to top it.

DeMille at 75

Anent the cash outlay for the "sell," this can't be measured at this time. But if the ads are to be commensurate with the production budget, and the anticipated gross, well, they'll be "colossal," too.

"Commandments" was produced in the double-frame Vistavision process, meaning two frames of film exposed instead of the usual one in the photography and ditto in the projection. Charlton Heston plays Moses and others in the cast are Yul Brynner, Anne Baxter, Yvonne De Carlo, Debra Paget, Nina Foch, Edward G. Robinson, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Vincent Price, John Carradine, John Derek and Olive Deering, Henry Wilcoxon is associate producer.

As for DeMille, he'll turn 75 soon but it's not time to retire. He's already set plans for another picture to follow "Commandments," this to be "The Buccaneer" in association with Wilcoxon, who'll be given full producer's credit, and Brynner, who's to be star and director. This will be the first time DeMille will not be his own producer and director in his 43 years of film-making but "Buccaneer" will be made under his aegis.

Home Vs. Visiting Ballyhooligans Stir Up Mad

Increasing antagonism is mounting between film company pub-ad departments and independent publicists hired by outside producers releasing through the major distributors. The feeling is especially high in companies which have only recently started to handle the product of indie film-makers.

Accustomed to formulating their own pub-ad campaigns without outside interference, the veteran staffers of the major outfits resent the intrusion, advice, and second-guessing of the indie flacks. They're burned, too, at the duplication of effort and the lack of coordination. It's charged that the outside drumbeaters, rather than contributing new ideas or aiding the overall campaign, "do more harm than good" in their roles as watchdogs for the indie producers.

One pub-ad exec went so far as to term the outside ballymen as "parasites" whose only contribu-

Outside Public Relations Work on 'Commandments'

In addition to hiring Maxwell Hamilton as coordinator of "Ten Commandments" promotion, Paramount is set to employ three, and possibly four, outside public relations firms to work on the picture.

Cost to Par will be about $100,000.

The Man Who Knew Too Much
(V'VISION—SONGS—COLOR)

Hitchcock pulling suspense strings. Good thriller with James Stewart, Doris Day. Strong b.o. prognosis.

Hollywood, May 1.

Paramount release of Alfred Hitchcock production. Stars James Stewart, Doris Day; features Brenda de Banzie, Bernard Miles, Ralph Truman, Daniel Gelin. Directed by Hitchcock. Screenplay, John Michael Hayes; based on story by Charles Bennett, D. B. Wyndham-Lewis; camera (Technicolor), Robert Burke; editor, George Tomasini; score, Bernard Herrmann; "Storm Cloud Cantata" by Arthur Benjamin and Wyndham-Lewis; songs, Jay Livingston, Ray Evans. Previewed April 25, '56. Running time 119 MINS.

Ben McKenna	James Stewart
Jo McKenna	Doris Day
Mrs. Drayton	Brenda de Banzie
Mr. Drayton	Bernard Miles

Police Inspector	Yves Brainville
Cindy Fontaine	Carolyn Jones

With Alfred Hitchcock pulling the suspense strings, "The Man Who Knew Too Much" is a good thriller of boxoffice potential. Star team of James Stewart and Doris Day means wicket business, too. Playoff should be profitable.

Hitchcock backstops his mystery in the colorful locales of Marrakesh in French Morocco and in London. While drawing the footage out a bit long at 119 minutes, he still keeps suspense working at all times and gets strong performances from the two stars and other cast members. Incidentally, Hitchcock did the same pic under the same title for Gaumont-British back in 1935. However, VistaVision, Technicolor and plot updating give it a brand spanking new look for present-day audiences.

Stewart ably carries out his title duties—he is a doctor vacationing in Marrakesh with his wife and young son. When he witnesses a murder and learns of an assassination scheduled to take place in London, the boy is kidnapped by the plotters to keep the medico's mouth shut.

Stewart's characterization is matched by the dramatic work contributed by Miss Day as his wife. Both draw vivid portraits of tortured parents when their son is kidnapped. Additionally, Miss Day has two Jay Livingston-Ray Evans tunes to sing, "Whatever Will Be" and "We'll Love Again," which are used storywise and not just dropped into the plot. Same goes for "Storm Cloud Cantata" by Arthur Benjamin and D. B. Wyndham-Lewis, conducted by Bernard Herrmann in an Albert Hall scene in which the assassination is attempted.

Young Christopher Olsen plays the son naturally and appealingly. Scoring strongly as the kidnappers and plotters are Brenda de Banzie and Bernard Miles. Ralph Truman, Scotland Yard official; Daniel Gelin, the secret agent who is murdered; Reggie Malder, the assassin; Yves Brainville and Mogens Wieth are others doing well. Alan Mowbray, Hillary Brooke, Alix Talton and Carolyn Jones contribute an amusing sequence as London friends who make things difficult for the doctor's search for his son.

John Michael Hayes's dialog stands out in the good script he fashioned from a story by Charles Bennett and D. B. Wyndham-Lewis. Color lensing by Robert Burke is another entertainment factor in the film and the background score by Bernard Herrmann abets the suspense unfoldment. Brog.

Hilda Crane
(COLOR-C'SCOPE)

Soap opera pitched to wide-screen and femme audience. Indifferent b.o. outlook marks Herbert Swope Jr. debut as film producer.

20th-Fox release of Herbert B. Swope Jr. production. Stars Jean Simmons, Guy Madison, Jean Pierre Aumont; features Judith Evelyn, Evelyn Varden, Peggy Knudsen, Gregg Palmer, Richard Garrick, Jim Hayward. Directed by Philip Dunne. Screenplay, Dunne; based on play by Samson Raphaelson; camera (Color by DeLuxe), Joe MacDonald; editor, David Brotherton; music, David Raksin. Previewed April 25, '56. Running time, 87 MINS.

Hilda Crane	Jean Simmons
Russell Burns	Guy Madison
Jacques De Lisle	Jean Pierre Aumont
Mrs. Crane	Judith Evelyn
Mrs. Burns	Evelyn Varden
Nell Bromley	Peggy Knudsen
Dink	Gregg Palmer
Dr. Francis	Richard Garrick
Mr. Small	Jim Hayward
Cab Driver	Sandee Marriot
Caterer	Don Shelton
Maid	Helen Mayon
Clara	Blossom Rock
Minister	Jay Jostyn

Since this kind of weepy, agonized romance has paid off handsomely for powdered soap flakes over the years, there's perhaps no doubting "Hilda Crane" as an entry that'll appeal to the femme sector of the audience, though quality-wise it leaves a lot to wish for. It's initial venture of an alumnus of CBS radio and video, Herbert B. Swope Jr. serving as film producer.

In color and CinemaScope, picture has a slick veneer and an attractive cast. Samson Raphaelson's old play, offers only sporadic excitement in a sea of dialog and has been adapted and directed by Philip Dunne with a modified imagination. The so-called Dunne "touch," which has been in evidence in virtually every picture he's made, is unhappily and strangely lacking in this one.

Jean Simmons, looking attractive as a neurotic young woman with a "past" who returns to her small hometown determined to "conform," gives an okay performance that only occasionally catches a sense of realism. She's at her best when slightly tipsy. On the whole it's difficult to extend her much sympathy. Also, her costumes aren't always flattering.

As in the unsuccessful play, the treatment never comes off on the screen. Just about every trite situation in the book has been thrown into the script, and Miss Simmons suffers through a succession of melodramatic situations from being discovered by her husband in another man's hotelroom to attempting suicide. If her behavior on the whole is strange, it's all very conveniently explained by the fact that her mother didn't love her as a child.

None of the characters in "Hilda Crane" are particularly likable or believable. There's Guy Madison as the husband with guilt feeling about his late mother; Jean Pierre Aumont as a French wolf who weaves some sort of strange spell on Miss Simmons; Judith Evelyn as Mrs. Crane, who disapproves of her daughter's way of life, and Evelyn Varden as Madison's mother who wants to stop the marriage. They all try hard without being able to contribute more than just superficial portraits.

Scene where Miss Varden offers Miss Simmons $50,000 not to go through with the marriage borders on farce. Miss Varden altogether can't make up her mind whether she's there as a heavy or for comedy relief. Peggy Knudsen as Miss Simmons' friend is fresh and cute.

Even nonsophisticates may wonder why 20th bothered making "Hilda Crane." Yet, as a repeat on a long line of dated melodramas, it may be appreciated. Some may find Miss Simmons' soul-searing suffering an inducement to wet their handkerchiefs, which rates as enjoyment, too.

Dunne's script, surcharged with frustrated romance in the Helen Trent tradition, is on the soap opera level and the direction matches it. De Luxe color is good and some of the sets are impressive. Joe MacDonald's lensing keeps in mind that this is a tour-de-force for Miss Simmons whose closeups appear frequently. Hift.

Le Couturier De Ces Dames
(FRENCH)

Paris, May 1.

Cinedis release of Cite Film production. Stars Fernandel, Suzy Delair. Directed by Jean Boyer. Screenplay, Boyer, Gerard Carlier, Serge Veber, Jean Manse; camera, Charles Suin; editor, Christian Gaudin. At Paris, Paris. Running time 90 MINS.

Fernand	Fernandel
Adrelenne	Suzy Delair
Model	Francoise Fabian
Count	Robert Fizani
Tailor	Berval

Since the unprecedented success of Fernandel in "The Sheep Has Five Legs," U. S. distribs have been looking for the likely followup. This does not seem to be it. Tailormade to suit the comic's talents, it casts him as a cutter who inherits an haute couture establishment and runs it without his jealous wife's knowledge. Basically a bedroom farce, this leads to squabbles as both take up with others. However, face to face in a nitery they realize it is still each other they want and ditch their respective suitors to get together again.

Fernandel and Suzy Delair burlesque their roles of husband and wife while a few comic scenes ensue. Plenty of pulchritude is trotted out during the model sequences. However, the clowning and heavyhanded swipes at Gallic insouciance and at the gayer element in couture circles are rather obvious. On the Fernandel moniker, this could be of value in the U. S. for dualer spots but it lacks the more versatile and unusual comic touches needed to make this an arty possibility. Lensing, direction, editing are just passable. Mosk.

Revolt of Mamie Stover
(C'SCOPE—SONGS—COLOR)

Commercial film about a commercial dame in Hawaii.

Hollywood, May 1.

20th-Fox release of Buddy Adler production. Stars Jane Russell, Richard Egan, Joan Leslie; features Agnes Moorehead, Jorja Curtright, Michael Pate, Richard Coogan, Allan Reed, Eddie Firestone, Jean Willes, Leon Lontok. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Screenplay, Sydney Boehm; from the novel by William Bradford Huie; camera (De Luxe Color), Leo Tover; editor, Louis Loeffler; music, Hugo Friedhofer, conducted by Lionel Newman; songs, Tony Todaro, Mary Johnston, and Paul Francis Webster, Sammy Fain. Previewed April 30, '56. Running time, 93 MINS.

Mamie Stover	Jane Russell
Jim	Richard Egan
Annalee	Jean Leslie
Bertha Parchman	Agnes Moorehead
Jackie	Jorja Curtright
Harry Adkins	Michael Pate
Capt. Eldon Sumac	Richard Coogan
Capt. Gorecki	Alan Reed
Tarzan	Eddie Firestone
Gladys	Joan Willes
Aki	Leon Lontok
Zelda	Kathy Marlowe
Peaches	Margia Dean
Bartender	Jack Mather

Hawaiian Cop	Max Reid
Hawaiian Waitress	Mary "Red" Mifford
Waitress	Eugenia Paul
Hostess	Janan Hart

Even with a Production Code cleanup, "The Revolt of Mamie Stover" still has its naughty implications. Therein lies its prospects. Jane Russell is Mamie and customers will make of it what they will. It's a commercial pic about a commercial lady.

It was no easy matter for scripter Sydney Boehm to tone down William Bradford Huie's outspoken novel about a gal who applied assembly-line, time-card methods to the oldest profession. The story compromises that result are okay. Robust direction by Raoul Walsh keeps the Buddy Adler production on a generally entertaining road. The production is attractively glossed in De Luxe Color and CinemaScope, showing off cast and the lush island locales effectively under Leo Tover's lensing.

After Mamie's booted out of San Francisco for working a confidence game, she hies herself to Honolulu where a dance hostess job awaits. So does a fortune, because Mamie knows how to make her curves grind out dollars. She becomes the belle of the islands. She adds further to the fortune that is in the making by buying real estate unloaded cheaply in the panic that followed Pearl Harbor. That obsession for money doesn't get her love, though, and the compromise ending finds her giving the coin away to return to Mississippi, the state of her origin.

Physically and acting-wise, the Mamie character is a breeze for Miss Russell. Costar Richard Egan, socialite-writer who meets Mamie aboardship enroute to the islands and comes to love her, but not enough to forgive her money drive and the way she earns it, does his work well, too, as does Joan Leslie, in briefly as the society girl who loves him.

Agnes Moorehead is a standout as the tough dancehall proprietor who makes her girls toe the line. Also good are Jorja Curtright, Mamie's friend; Michael Pate, sadist enforcer of Miss Moorehead's rules; Richard Coogan, an officer on the make for Mamie; Eddie Firestone, pint-sized sailor in a running gag through the footage; Alan Reed, Jean Willes, Leon Lontok and others.

Hugo Friedhofer's score is excellent, and there are two good songs, "If You Wanna See Mamie Tonight" by Paul Francis Webster and Sammy Fain, and "Keep Your Eyes on the Hands" by Tony Todaro and Mary Johnston. Former number has been RCA-recorded by the Ames Brothers.

Editing, are direction and other technical assists are firstrate. Brog.

Star of India

Featherweight script and wooden acting, makes indifferent second feature.

United Artists release of Raymond Stross production. Stars Cornel Wilde, Jean Wallace; features Herbert Lom, Yvonne Sanson. Directed by Arthur Lubin. Screenplay, Herbert Dalmas; camera, C. Pennington Richards; editor, Russell Lloyd; music, Muir Mathieson. Previewed April 25, '56. Running time, 84 MINS.

Pierre	Cornel Wilde
Katrina	Jean Wallace
Narbonne	Herbert Lom
Madame de Montespan	Yvonne Sanson
Emile	John Slater
Van Horst	Walter Rilla
Louis XIV	Basil Sydney
Captain	Arnold Bell

In color by Technicolor and scenery by Europe, producer Raymond Stross, via a tieup with Rome's Titanus Studios, has manufactured a swashbuckler that buckles into unintentional giggles. For awhile, "Star of India" could be mistaken for a spoof of other motion pictures about 18th century cavaliers and bosomy heroines—a la "Fan Fan the Tulip"— but at the windup there's no doubt that this Cornel Wilde-Jean Wallace costarrer has to be taken straight.

The Herbert Dalmas script doesn't have anything to say on its hackneyed theme. Wilde, hipbooted, lace-frocked, has his fortune filched and later redeemed. Miss Wallace, as the doll in the case, demonstrates neck-bending cleavage, an innocent map and a steel-trap mind. It turns out that she's a spy for Holland, living among the even-then decadent French nobility. With Wilde tightlipped and troubled in his search for an emerald known as the Star of India, and Miss Wallace perfectly wooden as the femme fatale, it's all very square.

The villain, essayed by Herbert Lom, makes the most sense. He robs, Wilde of his house and fortune, with the full knowledge and consent of the self-indulgent Louis XIV, when the victim is away fighting for France, Lom has an odd love for siamese cats, preferring them to women and in a character portrayal bordering on the psychotic he manages an arch charm that contributes the picture's one characterization dimension.

Chase scenes across the countryside (it might have been either France or Italy) are beautiful and the movement of the horses and actors are nicely conceived though the color sometimes becomes a mite fuzzy. Muir Mathieson's musical score is workaday, exceeding the sentimental scenes in sentimentality and the action in its own brand of symphonic violence. Art.

The Maverick Queen
(NATURAMA—SONG—COLOR)

Introing Republic's anamorphic system. Acceptable Zane Grey western feature for regular outdoor playoffs.

Hollywood, April 30.

Republic release of Joe Kane production. Stars Barbara Stanwyck, Barry Sullivan; Scott Brady, Mary Murphy; features Wallace Ford, Howard Petrie, Jim Davis, Emile Meyer, Walter Sande. Directed by Kane. Screenplay, Kenneth Gamet, DeVallon Scott; based on the Zane Grey novel; camera (TruColor), Jack Marta; editor, Richard L. Van Enger; score, Victor Young; song, Ned Washington, Young; sung by Joni James. Previewed April 27, '56. Running time, 90 MINS.

Kit Banion	Barbara Stanwyck
Jeff	Barry Sullivan
Sundance	Scott Brady
Lucy Lee	Mary Murphy
Jamie	Wallace Ford
Butch Cassidy	Howard Petrie
A Stranger	Jim Davis
Malone	Emile Meyer
Sheriff Wilson	Walter Sande
Muncie	George Keymas
Loudmouth	John Doucette
Peter Callaher	Taylor Holmes
McMillian	Pierre Watkin

Republic introduces its anamorphic process, trade-named Naturama, effectively with this western feature. It shapes as acceptable fare for the regular outdoor market and should give a good account of itself in those playdates. As for Naturama, it's excellent, and the 2:35 to 1 aspect ratio makes it adaptable to present squeezelens projection installations in any theatre.

The familiar Zane Grey story, scripted by Kenneth Gamet and DeVallon Scott, was produced and directed on Colorado locations by Joe Kane, with the scenery coming across as a visual asset to the standard western action that ensues. Barbara Stanwyck, as the wicked lady of the title; Barry Sullivan, the Pinkerton man who poses as a baddie to break up the Wild Bunch outlaw gang; Scott Brady, as Sundance, early-west outlaw, and Mary Murphy, orphaned owner of a ranch, answer up to all requirements of the starring parts and do their work well.

The frontier drama moves along at a good action clip as directed by Kane with, as noted, the ruggedly beautiful location sites doing their share to keep up interest in the plot unfoldment. The title tune, by Ned Washington and Victor Young, is effectively sung by Joni James, first behind the title cards and later as a story bridge.

The Grey story tells of a Southern-born woman who comes to the west and makes a fortune tieing in with outlaws while operating a hotel-saloon. She's doing okay until she falls for an undercover Pinkerton man and sacrifices her life to save his so he can settle down with a pretty orphan who owns a struggling ranch. Wallace Ford, the ranch owner's double-crossing cook; Howard Petrie, leader of the Wild Bunch; Jim Davis, the real outlaw whose identity the Pinkerton man assumes; Emile Meyer, Walter Sande, John Doucette and others provide satisfactory characterizations in the outdoor plot.

Jack Marta uses his TruColor cameras expertly and the other technical support is good. Brog.

While the City Sleeps

Modernized "stop the press" newspaper yarn; intelligence and authenticity plus strong names spell audience favor.

Hollywood, May 1.

RKO release of a Bert Friedlob Production. Stars Dana Andrews, George Sanders, Thomas Mitchell, Sally Forrest, Rhonda Fleming, Howard Duff, Vincent Price, John Barrymore Jr., James Craig and Ida Lupino; with Robert Warwick, Ralph Peters, Larry Blake, Edward Hinton, Mae Marsh, Sandy White, Celia Lovsky, Pitt Herbert, Vladimir Sokoloff. Produced by Bert Friedlob. Directed by Fritz Lang. Screenplay, Casey Robinson from Charles Einstein novel; camera, Ernest Laszlo; editor, Gene Fowler Jr.; music, Herschel Burke Gilbert. Previewed April 26, 1956. Running time, 99 MINS.

Mobley	Dana Andrews
Mildred	Ida Lupino
Dorothy	Rhonda Fleming
Loving	George Sanders
Walter Kyne	Vincent Price
Griffith	Thomas Mitchell
Nancy	Sally Forrest
Kaufman	Howard Duff
Kritzer	James Craig
Manners	John Barrymore Jr.
Amos Kyne	Robert Warwick
Meade	Ralph Peters
Police Sergeant	Larry Blake
O'Leary	Edward Hinton
Mrs. Manners	Mae Marsh
Judith Fenton	Sandy White
Dodd	Celia Lovsky
Bartender	Pitt Herbert
George Pilski	Vladimir Sokoloff

The old-fashioned "stop the presses" newspaper yarn has been updated with intelligence and considerable authenticity, and further brightened with crisp dialog from the pen of Casey Robinson. Presence of an "all-star" cast of 10 good marquee names also helps.

Robinson's screen adaptation of Charles Einstein's novel weaves several story lines together. Among them are the murderous activities of a homicidal maniac, played by John Barrymore Jr.; a "Patterns"-like scramble for power among the top brass of a newspaper empire, after the top man dies; and a good-natured love story between the paper's Pulitzer-prize winning top reporter, played by Dana Andrews, and Sally Forrest, the secretary of one of the contestants.

When the empire's chieftain, played by Robert Warwick, dies, his insecure playboy son, enacted by Vincent Price, decides to set up a new top exec post for grabs. Contenders are three; Tom Mitchell, the canny, tough editor of the keystone paper; George Sanders, suave and ruthless head of the empire's wire service; and James Craig, dapper photo bureau chief, who's also playing extra-curricular footsie with the boss' wife, Rhonda Fleming.

Price lets it be known that the one to crack the wave of murders being committed by Barrymore gets the job. Sanders and Mitchell commence heartily to cut each other's throats, while Craig puts the pressure, literally and figuratively, on Miss Fleming.

Mitchell enlists Andrews' help and Andrews, in turn, enlists boyhood buddy Howard Duff, a shrewd police lieutenant. Andrews and Duff use Miss Forrest as bait, but Barrymore instead almost murders Miss Fleming in what used to be described as a "love nest," across the hall from Miss Forrest's apartment, before he's caught.

Mitchell sends Ida Lupino, Sanders' opportunistic g.f. and the paper's sob sister, to interview the intended victim, and she spots the real identity. With this, Price weakly gives Craig the top spot to quiet the scandal. Andrews tells him off and hies off to a honeymoon with Miss Forrest, whereupon Price reverses himself, puts Mitchell in the top spot, and sends Craig off on a worldwide "good-will" tour. At pic's end, he's paging Andrews at the honeymoon hideaway to make him managing editor, but Andrews, in a twist on "The Front Page," muffles the phone to consummate his marriage.

Plot intricacies are deftly interwoven, with director Fritz Lang doing a topflight job of balancing the ingredients without dragging the pace. Sex is treated humorously and lightly, with patches of sophisticated dialog highlighting the mutual yearnings of Miss Forrest and Andrews, as well as Miss Lupino's harder-boiled approach. Funniest scene in pic has Miss Lupino attempt to seduce a drunken and half-willing Andrews, on Sanders' behest.

Toplining cast works well together, with each in turn getting his inning. All are to be commended equally for skillful acting, but Barrymore, perhaps hampered by comparatively less footage, relies too much on eye-rolling histrionics to get his dramatic points across. In bits, Warwick, Ralph Peters, Mae Marsh, Sandy White and Vladimir Sokoloff are especially praiseworthy.

Lensing of Ernest Laszlo is of fine quality throughout and Herschel Burke Gilbert's music is a definite asset. All other technical credits show careful craftsmanship. Kove.

BLUE MEMPHIS' SUNDAY SHAKE

People Will Be People

In its comments quoted by VARIETY in an adjoining news story, the Boston Herald has wittily pointed up the prevalence in our day of group sensitivity to ridicule and the seeming absurdities to which this sometimes leads. Film producers (and broadcasters) will be the quickest to recognize and appreciate the cracks of the Boston editor. Unfortunately it is never as simple as his piece suggests since people persist in being people and do become offended when they think themselves affronted. Nobody has ever been able to eliminate this quaint form of human pride.

Satire of those who object to satire because they find it objectionable has been going on a long time. It's probably part of the educational process of existence. Still the Boston editorial writer may have overlooked the reason for cops and nurses and others being anxious to be better respected. It could mean more money to them.—Or better treatment in public places!

Group prestige is never divorced from individual prestige. Of course there are flannelmouthed cops but the tendency of "stereotype-perpetuating" authors is to make it seem like all cops are flannelmouthed. Or apply the same thought to a couple of adventure-hungry nurses out on a recess with a couple of medicos.

The sensitivity of human beings is notorious and often a bore. Still the least sensitive about themselves generally turn out to be those who most clearly belong to groups least subject to ridicule. Anglo-Saxon white Protestants turn out, run of mill, to be less aware of group insult than, say, Mexicans, politicians, labor union leaders, housemaids, or you name it.

At one point in the campaign to educate authors not to go on repeating stale racial and group stereotypes, the Writers War Board persuaded a number of radio and film scripters of crime melodramas to discontinue Italian names for their characters which thereupon became Robinson, Jones and Smith. Gangsters were then antiseptic so far as Italian-American complaints went but not one whit less menacing or dramatic.

If it is argued that in real life a lot of hoods are indeed Italian and have Italian names, this is pleading journalistic realism as a justification for dramatic device. Realistically the press outside the Dixiecrat (offensive word that) belt, nowadays generally does not identify the race of the person arrested except under special circumstances. So even the old standards of journalistic realism have had to be modified as a gesture to fellow-citizens. Equality demanded that the prisoner not be a special prisoner, apart from his alleged misdeed.

Ridiculous though individual protests may be, farfetched as the interpretations of scene, character and wisecrack frequently are, there is no avoiding the problem. Where the protest is flimsy, it may perhaps be brushed off. But often enough the racial stereotype is present, though needlessly so due to inept writing and directing.

No law of democracy requires the operation of a system of carte blanche for racial or group ridicule. Events in the suburbs of Boston itself make the moral as to what happens when young showoffs are encouraged to believe it's perfectly okay to rank themselves automatically superior to other group members and to say so in chalk and taunt. Land.

Where Are the Villains of Yesteryear?

Boston Herald Editorial Patly Sums Up Group Sensitivity In Present Day

Many a Hollywood and New York film exec believes a recent editorial in the Boston Herald deserves broader spotlighting than it's had until now. Daily notes that nurses rebelled when "Marty" mentioned some of them as sometime girls and a veterans group howled when vets were shown misbehaving in "Rose Tattoo."

To quote the Herald from that point: "O.K., the movies cross out vets. They cross out nurses. They cross out dumb cops (bad for law enforcement). They eschew waterfront racketeers (give Labor a bad name). They shy away from crooked judges (how can we maintain respect for the courts?).

"And in the end this leaves nothing left to deal with but simple men and women unattached to any vocation, association or institution and having no color or religion or any racial or national origin.

"All very well, but we cannot let these simple men and women go undefended from the wanton vilification of movie moguls interested only in commercializing on possible deviations from the straight and narrow path.

"We say men and women on the whole are engaged in the most thoughtful consideration and planning for worthwhile objectives. Any film that implies anything different is a baseless canard on the human race.

"This leaves sea serpents to the film writers, as long as there is no hint of vivisection."

Catering to 'Affair'

Metro, in an all-out drive to build word-of-mouth for "The Catered Affair," is holding a series of screenings of the picture in all exchange centres during the week of April 30. Each of the local screenings is being held in a theatre between the regular showings of the current picture.

Theatreowners, buyers, bookers, circuit managers, branch managers of rival companies as well as the press, radio-tv contracts, and local personalities and officials are being invited to the special theatre showings.

MOTTO: GO & SIN AGAIN NEXT WEEK

Memphis, May 1.

Memphis, which until the recent retirement of its antiquarian (now 90) censor, Lloyd T. Binford, was famous, or infamous, depending upon the point of view, for its bluenose attitude on film content has another claim to dubious distinction. This, too, is an instance of questionable ethics conducted in the name of morality. Here is the local twist on an old Sabbatarian ordinance:

The no-entertainment Sunday blue law is not enforced but remains on the books and is used to "fine" Memphis film theatres for illegally operating on Sundays. The fine amounting to $75 per Sunday for downtown firstruns and from $25 to $50 for nabe theatres and drive-ins within Memphis borders adds up to some $1,000 a week collected by city officials in city charity's sweet name as a payoff for their ignoring the blue law.

Hypocritical nature of the situation is established by the fact that until the new mayor's recent candid comments, there was a tacit pretense of not "forcing" the exactions but merely "accepting" them for the Welfare Dept.

Theatre men are put and kept in an embarrassingly awkward position. They want to operate Sundays. The law says no. The law is a dead paw on the coattails of progress but in this conservative (outwardly) community nobody has the plain decency or courage to erase the old law cleanly and openly. So the theatres operate illegally and the legal authorities connive in the violations, accepting "fines" in the form of bogus contributions.

As far as known the Memphis situation has no parallel in any other American city.

New Mayor of Memphis, Ed Orgill, is pressuring film houses to pony up funds which by tacit agreement in recent years exhibitors have paid because they are permitted to operate Sundays. So-called "collections" go into Memphis Welfare Dept. which the mayor states is under added necessities because the state of Tennessee has cut down on relief budget.

Orgill speaks of film houses as "delinquent" in their Sunday payments and the city is seeking "back money due us from these theatres." He adds, we plan to revise our collection schedule."

Heretofore the city controller reported to the city Welfare Department only the amount of gross receipts each month not the payments by the individual theatres.

MEMPHIS CENSORING ANEW

Respite Since Binford Ends With 'Borgias' Banning

Memphis, May 1.

Memphis is right back to picture banning. Local Board of Censors, now comprising three femme members in superannuation of Lloyd Binford at 90, put the kibosh on Martine Carol in "Sins of the Borgias," declaring it "unfit for Memphis theatres." This was the first feature vetoed since Binford went to pasture earlier this year with the election of a "liberal" Mayor, Ed Orgill.

Three femme members (Mrs. Walter Gray, Mrs. Elmo Newton, Sr., and Mrs. B. F. Edwards) state that no Memphis theatre had booked the film but it was immediately snared by the Sunset Drive-In across the Mississippi River to open today (1) in Arkansas, traditional haven for all Memphis-banned pics.

Ladies commented that "Hollywood denied this film the MPPA seal and it was also condemned by the Roman Catholic Legion of Decency and it was advertised so sensational even the French censored it."

350 Exhibs Buy 'Trapeze' Blind; Heineman's 'Affidavit' of Merit Puts Him on Spot, Legally, Too

Beef Up the Broth

Publicity isn't what it used to be. Lecturing to students a film handout chappie advised neophyte ballyhooligans:

"If you're going to send out a phoney story, make sure you back it up with solid facts."

United Artists has landed bookings of "Trapeze" in 350 first-run situations for over the July 4 holiday period despite the fact that none of the exhibitors licensing the Hecht-Lancaster production have seen it. William J. Heineman, UA's distribution v.p., viewed the film in London and, upon returning to Gotham, signed an affidavit stating it deserved top terms and preferred playing time. It's on this basis that "Trapeze" was sold to theatre-owners.

To what extent Heineman has placed himself out on a limb, perhaps legalistically, remains to be seen. But it appears clear that this is not the usual endorsement of a film by a distribution exec, the different angle being in the fact that the product is being licensed for unseen. As a matter of fact, neither UA president Arthur B. Krim nor board chairman Robert S. Benjamin have had an opportunity to onceover the Burt Lancaster-Gina Lollobrigida Tony Curtis starrer.

Heineman stated in New York this week that the total number of July 4 dates likely will go up to 375. Company will have 400 prints available but wants to keep 25 in reserve for protection. Most of the openings will be around June 28. World premiere is set for May 29 in Los Angeles and subsequent bows will be June 4 in N. Y. and June 14 in Chicago. All are to carry over beyond the Independence Day holiday, for which the ad and publicity breaks are slanted.

Plan is to have one of the first prints ready for a press preview May 15, probably at N. Y.'s Victoria Theatre.

Another Catholic In Film Becomes An Episcopalian

Hollywood, May 1.

Switching characters' religions to conform with Catholic objections is getting to be a habit with the studios.

Latest instance involved Paramount's "The Leather Saint," who started out as a Catholic priest, but now has ended up an Episcopal minister. John Derek plays the clergyman.

Earlier, the pivotal character in 20th-Fox's "Heaven Only Knows, Mr. Allison"—a Catholic nun—was switched to an Anglican nun when it became clear Catholic might object.

Catholic groups are very sensitive as regards the portrayal of priest and nuns on the screen. Some year ago, in connection with the British "Black Narcissus, they forced a foreword which made it plain that the sisters in the film were Anglican, not Roman Catholic.

Originally, plot hook on "Leather Saint" was that a priest, to raise funds for his poor parish, returns incognito to the fight ring, whence he had sprung prior to ordination. Femme lead (Jody Lawrence) shows a brief romantic interest in him because he reminds her of a fighter she had loved.

Catholic authorities, checked by Par per custom on pix dealing with priests, objected to the romantic flashes. Presto, character's religion was changed.

Erroneously Dismissed, Statute Not Limiting Grengs' Antitruster

Minneapolis, May 1.

U.S. circuit court of appeals has reversed the district court decision dismissing local independent circuit owner Sheldon Grengs' $600,000 antitrust conspiracy suit against 20th-Fox, Warner Bros., Loew's, Universal, Columbia and United Artists on the findings that the cause of action was invalidated under the limitations statute.

As a result, the case will be set for trial, probably this year. Other defendants are Paramount, RKO and Fox Theatres of Wisconsin.

Grengs alleges that his theatre at Wausau, Wis., was discriminated against in the matter of clearance, that a conspiracy existed to favor Fox theatres in availabilities and that the showhouse in consequence sustained monetary damage. Minneapolis attorney S. P. Halpern represents the plaintiff.

Ann Sothern's Summer

Hollywood, May 1.

Ann Sothern may go to England this summer to investigate the Eady Plan, with an eye to producing a theatrical film in London, also starring in it.

Singer - actress - comedienne earned $131,000 on the nitery circuit last summer, playing only Las Vegas, Lake Tahoe and Reno, but is going to skip the saloon belt this year.

'Muenchhausen' Bows in Milw.

First U. S. showing of the German "Muenchhausen" film, the Nazis' "spectacle to end all spectacles," has been set for the Kino Theatre, Milwaukee, starting Friday (4).

According to Sidney Kaufman of Skelus, the distributor, which acquired the rights to the film from the Office of Alien Property, the Milwaukee run is in the nature of a prerelease test and serves to establish his "clear right" to the tinter.

Pic will be shown in the German language house without titles Kaufman said titled prints are coming from Germany.

"Muenchhausen," first released in Germany in 1944 (and since reissued there), was the subject of a lengthy dispute between Skelus and the U. S. Government on one side and a group including Harry Popkin on the other. Judge William C. Mathes in U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District in California recently issued an injunction against the Popkin combo.

Latter, however, still argues that, due to a technicality in German copyright law, all German prewar and war time pix are in the public domain in the U. S. Popkin group once tried to open its dubbed version of "Muenchhausen" in this country, but was stopped via court action.

According to Kaufman, Sol Lesser in N. Y. in recent weeks has been offering "Muenchhausen" to major distribs, including RKO. Comment was that such a move would seem to be in violation of Judge Mathes' injunction which becomes permanent in July, following another hearing.

Kaufman said he chose the Kino run so as not to prejudice possible major interest in the "Muenchhausen" picture.

New Product, Reissues Not Helping L.A. Biz But 'Birds' Rates $12,000; 'Heroes' Mildish 18G, 'Jubal' 15G, 2d

Los Angeles, May 1.

With only three newcomers and a couple of reissue bills, local first-run boxoffice is light in current frame. Pleasant, but not stout, is the $12,000 which looms in initial frame of "Birds and Bees," showcasing at the Hollywood Par. "Cockleshell Heroes" is mildish $18,000 in three theatres.

"Bold and Brave" also is modest with $17,000 in three spots. Two reissue bills are very slow while holdovers and long extended-run bills continue to weaken.

However, "Jubal" looms okay $15,000 in three houses while "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is rated good in third round at Chinese. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" also rated nice $8,000 in fifth week at Downtown Par.

Estimates for This Week

Hollywood Paramount (F&M) (1,430; $1-$1.50) — "Birds and Bees" (Par). Pleasant $12,000. Last week, "Court Jester" (Par) (6th wk), $6,700.

Orpheum, Iris, Uptown (Metropolitan-FWC) (2,213; 816; 1,715; 80-$1.25) — "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col) and "Blackjack Ketchum, Desperado" (Col). Mildish $18,000. Last week, Orpheum, "Trouble Harry" (Par) and "Prisoner" (Col), $4,000; others with units.

Hillstreet, Vogue, Fox Beverly (RKO-FWC) (2,752; 885; 1,334; 80-$1.50)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Way Out" (RKO). Modest $17,000. Last week, Hillstreet, Fox Beverly with Iris, "Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "World My Corner" (U), $12,000; Vogue, "Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (3d wk), $3,200.

Pantages (RKO) (2,812; 90-$1.50) — "Viva Zapata" (20th) and "Broken Arrow" (20th) (reissues). Small $4,500. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Jaquar" (Rep), $2,200.

Los Angeles (FWC) (2,097; 90-$1.25) — "Carmen Jones" (20th) and "Pickup On South Street" (20th) (reissues). Slim $4,700. Last week, with unit.

Warner Downtown, Wiltern, Hollywood (SW) (1,757; 2,344; 756; 90-$1.50)—"Jubal" (Col) and "Timetable" (UA) (2d wk). Okay $15,000. Last week, $29,000.

'Suit' Standout In Prov., Hot 14G

Providence, May 1.

Majestic's "The Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is standout here this round. State's second week of "The Swan" is moderate. Strand is fairly good with "Harder They Fall."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 50-80)—"Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U). Mild $6,500. Last week, "Backlash" (U) and "Kettles in Ozarks" (U), $7,500.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 65-$1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th). Very heavy weekend. Smash $14,000 or near. Last week, "On Threshold of Space" (20th) and "Green Magic" (IFE), $7,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-90)—"The Swan" (M-G) and "Timetable" (UA) (2d wk). Fair $8,500 after $14,000 in first.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 65-80)—"Harder They Fall" (Col). Fairly good $7,500. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col) and "Over Exposed" (Col), $6,500.

'Anything' Goes to 13G, Cincy; 'Space' NSG 8½G, 'Holiday' Big 19G, 45th

Cincinnati, May 1.

Downtown cinemas are racking up better than par grosses this week in the face of the belated arrival of warm weather and baseball season's first home stay of the Cincy Reds. "Anything Goes" paces new bills with a favorable Albee figure. "On Threshold of Space" is only fairish at the Palace and the Grand without complaint on "Killer Is Loose." "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" continues a stylish holdover in third outing at Keith's. Improvement of "Cinerama Holiday" trade is credited to its approaching fadeout.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 84-$1.10)—"Anything Goes' (Par). Pleasing $13,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G), $14,000.

Capitol (Ohio Cinema Corp.) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (45th wk). Boff

'ROCK' STALWART 10G, INDPLS; 'SUIT' 7G, 3D

Indianapolis, May 1.

Off-beat pix are setting pace again here this stanza although biz in general was slowed by rain over weekend. "Rock Around Clock" is drawing big juvenile trade at Circle to lead city. "Forbidden Planet" at Loew's also is profiting from heavy play by younger set for a good round. "Hilda Crane" at the Indiana is tepid. "Man In Gray Flannel Suit" at Keith's is oke for third week.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 50-85)—"Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Flame of Island" (Rep). Big $10,000. Last week, "Kettles in Ozarks" (U) and "Red Sundown" (U), 9,000.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 50-85)—"Hilda Crane" (20th). Poor $6,500. Last week, "On Threshold of Space" (20th), $7,000.

Keith's (C-D) (1,300; 75 $1.25)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (3d wk). Neat $7,000, or totaling about $31,000 for run so far.

Loew's (Loew) (2,427; 50-80)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Hell's Horizon" (Col). Trim $8,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) and "Timetable" (UA), $8,500, but not as big as expected.

Lyric (C-D) (1,600; 50-75)—"Shepherd of Hills" (Par) and "Trail of Lonesome Pine" (Par) (reissues). Oke $4,000. Last week, "Wetbacks" (Indie) and "Wild Dakotas" (Indie), $4,500.

Pre-Derby Hurts L'ville, 'Space' 10G

Louisville, May 1.

Big noise in Derbytown is opening of the Spring meeting at Churchill Downs Saturday (28), with climax upcoming the following Saturday (5) with running of the Kentucky Derby. With racing tension in the air, downtown houses this week are getting the brushoff. Biz is on the dull side. Rialto with "On Threshold of Space," is fairly healthy but the State's "Tribute to Bad Man' and "Inside Detroit" is only mild.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.) (United Artists) (1,000; 55-85)—"Patterns" (UA). Looks slow $3,000. Last week, "Carousel" (20th) at $1.25 top, $3,500 in third week.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,100; 55-85)—"Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Crashing Las Vegas" (AA). Fairish $5,000. Last week, "Kettles in Ozarks" (U) and "Square Jungle" (U), $6,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 55-85)—"Hot Blood" (Col). Modest $5,000. Last week, "Serenade" (WB), same.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 55--85)—"On Threshold of Space" (20th). Headed for good $10,000 or near. Last week, "Conqueror" (RKO) (2d wk), $9,000.

State (United Artists) (3,000 55-85)—"Tribute to Bad Men" (M-G) and "Inside Detroit" (Col). Moderate $8,000. Last week, "Swan" (M-G) (2d wk), $10,000.

'World' Lofty 10G Frisco; 'Fall' 15G

San Francisco, May 1.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" continues powerful here in third round at the Fox. "World Without End" looms fine at the United Artists while "Harder They Fall" shapes just good at Paramount, the two standout newcomers currently. "Richard III" is rated lively at arty Stagedoor. "Oklahoma" is socko in 10th stanza at the Coronet.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 80-$1)—"Come Next Spring" (Rep) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep). Very bad $6.000. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Glory" (RKO), $9,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (3d wk). Oke $13,500. Last week, $16,000.

Warfield (Loew) (2,656; 65-90)—"The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk). Light $8,500. Last week, $17,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Over-exposed" (Col). Good $15,000. Last week, "Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Uranium Boom" (Col), $13,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1-$1.25)—"Miracle In Rain" (WB). Okay $9,500. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Steel Jungle" (WB), $7,500.

Orpheum (Cinerama Theatre Calif.) (1,458; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (39th wk). Trim $14,500. Last week, $16,200.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 70-$1)—"World Without End" (AA) and "Indestructible Man" (AA). Fine $10,000 or near. Last week, "Comanche" (UA) and "Timetable" (UA), $9,400.

Stagedoor (A-R) (440; $1.25-$1.50) — "Richard III" (Indie). Lively $6,000. Last week, "Guys and Dolls" (M-G) (23d wk), $5,800.

Larkin (Rosener) (400; $1)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (18th wk). Nice $4,400. Last week, $4,700.

Clay (Rosener) (400; $1)—"Sea Shall Not Have Them" (UA) (2d wk). Hep $2,100. Last week, $3,300.

Vogue (S. F. Theatres) (377; $1) —"Dance Little Lady" (Indie) and "Day To Remember" (Indie). Passable $1,800. Last week, "Prisoner" (Col) (8th wk), $1,600.

Bridge (Schwarz) (396; $1-$1.25) —"Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (5th wk). Hep $2,600. Last week, $2,800.

Rio (Schwarz) (397; $1)—"Teckman Mystery" (Indie). Modest $2,000. Last week, "Paris, 1900" (Indie) (2d wk), $1,800.

Coronet (United California) (1,250; $1.10-$2.75) — "Oklahoma" (Magna) (10th wk). Socko $21,400. Last week, $24,100.

'SUIT' SHARP $14,000 PACES DULL OMAHA

Omaha, May 1.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is head-and-shoulders above the field at downtown firstruns this week, being rated sharp at the Tri-States flagship, the Orpheum. Holdover seems probable. Other new entry, "Slightly Scarlet," is only mild at the Omaha. "Golden Arm" at the Brandeis, and "I'll Cry Tomorrow" at the State, both are offish.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Golden Arm" (UA) (5th wk). Drab $2,000. Last week, $3,700.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 70-90) —"Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Hidden Guns" (Rep). Mild $5,500. Last week, "Swan" (M-G), $7,500 at 85c-$1 scale.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,890; 75-$1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th). Excellent $14,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col), $9,500.

State (Goldberg) (860; 80-$1.25) —"I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (5th wk). Softening to $3,200 after $4,500 fourth stanza.

Detroit, May 1.

Tornado warnings and heavy rains over the weekend put a severe crimp in downtown biz. Best of the newcomers looks to be "Comanche" which is fairly good at the Palms. "Hilda Crane" is slow at the Fox. "Come On" shapes average at the Broadway-Capitol. Holdovers hold fairly steady, but below normal pace.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; $1-$1.25)—"Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Swamp Women" (Indie). Slow $16,000 or near. Last week, "Carmen Jones" (20th) and "Pickup on South Street" (20th) (reissues), $12,400.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; $1-$1.25)—"The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk). Down to okay $16,000. Last week, $21,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; $1-$1.25)—"Comanche" (UA) and "Manfish" (UA). Fairly good $17,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) and "Stranger at Door" (Rep) (2d wk), $13,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1-$1.25)—"Picnic" (Col) (8th wk). Down to $7,000. Last week, $8,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; $1-$1.25)—"Come On" (AA) and "Crashing Las Vegas" (AA). Average $13,000. Last week, "Unconquered" (Par) (re-release) and "Deadliest Sin" (Indie), $12,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,667; $1.25-$2.75)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (11th wk). Steady $19,000. Last week, $18,900.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; $1-$1.25)—"I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (8th wk). Down to $8,500. Last week, $10,100.

Music Hall (Cinerama Productions) (1,194; $1.40-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (64th wk). Up slightly to big $16,300. Last week, $15,500.

Spring in Balto, B.O. Shows It; 'Fall' Solid 9G, 'Suit' Big 14G, 2d

Baltimore, May 1.

Balmy weather and mild, new product makes for unexciting grosses here this week. Second week of "Man In Gray Flannel Suit" is tall at the Century. "Harder They Fall" looks brisk at the Hipp, top newcomer. "Scarlet Hour" is limp at the Stanley and "Comanche" is also weak at the New. "Swan" slipped fast in second round at the Town.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,000; 50-$1.25)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk). Tall $14,000 following $20,000 opener.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1) —"Night My Number Came Up" (Indie). Fairish $3,500. Last week, "Hill 24 Doesn't Answer" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,000.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; $1.25-$2.50)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) 9th wk). Still staunch $16,000 after $15,000 in eighth.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,100; 50-$1)—"Harder They Fall" (Col). Solid $9,000 or better. Last week, "Hot Blood" (RKO), $6,500.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 50-$1.25)—"Conqueror" (RKO) (5th wk). Still potent at $5,500 following $6,500 in fourth.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 50-$1) —"Comanche" (UA). Drab $4,000. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (4th wk), $5,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (410; 50-$1) —"Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (3d wk). Okay $4,000 after $4,500 in second.

Stanley (WB) (3,200; 35-$1)—"Scarlet Hour" (Par). Sparse $3,500. Last week, "Serenade" (WB), $8,000.

Town (Rappaport) (1,400; 50-$1) — Cockleshell Heroes" (Col). Starts tomorrow (Wed.). Second week of "The Swan" (M-G) was nice $8,000 after $15,000 opener.

'Vegas' Virile 13G, Denver; 'Kettles' 11G

Denver, May 1.

Generally biz is off among first-runs, with only one pic holding over. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" shapes lofty $13,000 at Orpheum while "Harder They Fall" looks fast at the Denver. Neither is sock enough to win a second round. Same applies to "Kettles in Ozarks" which looms very sturdy at Paramount. "Letters From My Windmill," fine at Vogue, is lone h.o.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 60-85)—"Heartbreak Ridge" (Indie) (2d wk). Fair $2,500. Last week, $3,000.

Centre (Fox) (1,247; 60-$1)—"Hilda Crane" (20th). Fair $10,-

'Wonders' Tops St. Loo, Sock $24,600; 'Bad Man' Good 14G, 'Suit' 11G, 2d

St. Louis, May 1.

"Seven Wonders of World" is off to a flying start and looks to grab a smash $24,600 opening round at 1,400-seat Ambassador. Otherwise, film biz is slow here currently, with rain and unseasonable cold keeping natives indoors over the weekend. "Tribute To Bad Man" looms as best newcomer at normal scale, with good take at Loew's. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" still is trim in second session at the St. Louis.

"Wonders" preem netted Knights of Columbus $4,000. "Cinerama Holiday" ran 62 weeks at Ambassador and played to 1,086,000 patrons.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders Of World" (Indie). Socko $24,600. Last week, "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (62d wk), $8,000.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 51-75)—"Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "Stranger At My Door" (Rep). Opened today (Tues.). Last week, "Threshhold of Space" (20th) and "Come Next Spring" (Col), slow $8,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 50-85)—"Tribute To Bad Man" (M-G) and "Dance Little Lady" (Indie). Good $14,000 or near. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G), $6,500.

Missouri (St. L. Amus.) (3,500; 51-75)—"Whispering Smith" (Par) and "Streets Of Laredo" (Par) (reissues). Nice $7,000. Last week, "Body Snatchers" (AA) and "Atomic Man" (AA) (2d wk), $5,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (1,600; 50-85)—"The Rack" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (UA). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Lawless Street" (Col) and "Let's Make Up" (UA), $4,500.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 50-90)—"Sins of Borgias" (UA). Oke $3,000. Last week, Touch And Go" (U) (2d wk), $2,500.

Richmond (St. L. Amus.) (400; $1.10)—"Romeo and Juliet" (UA). Sock $3,500. Last week, "Doctor At Sea" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,000.

St. Louis (St. L. Amus.) (4,000; 51-90)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk). Neat $11,000 after $16,500 initial stanza.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus.) (800; $1.10)—"Return of Don Camillo" (Indie). Fine $3,000. Last week, "Tempest In Flesh" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,500.

Few New Pix, Chi Off; 'Magic' Hot $8,000, 'Vegas' Wow 20G, 'Comanche' 18G, 'Swan' Bright 23G, All in 2d

Chicago, May 1.

With few exceptions, firstrun biz continues slow here this round. Abundance of holdovers and onset of mild weather are keeping many away from Loop situations. "Magic Fire" should do a nifty $8,000 in first Monroe week. "Simba" is fine $3,500 at Carnegie.

"Comanche" and "Killer Is Loose" combo stays sturdy in second Roosevelt round. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" continues sock in same week at Loop. "The Swan" is fairly good in second United Artists week. "Touch and Go" looks good in second Esquire stanza, "Harder They Fall" shapes fair in third Woods round. "Forbidden Planet" also is strong in third Grand frame.

"Alexander the Great" is modest in fourth at the Chicago. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is off in same week at the Oriental. "Oklahoma" is smash in the 18th stanza at the McVickers.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (480; 95)—"Simba" (Indie). Neat $4,000. Last week, subsequent-run.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.25)—"Alexander the Great" (UA) (4th wk). Mild $23,000. Last week, $27,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,400; 85-$1)—"Touch and Go" (U) (2d wk). Fat $6,200. Last week, $7,000.

Grand (Nomikos) (1,200; 98-$1.25)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Day of Fury" (U) (3d wk). Swell $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.25)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (2d wk). Socko $20,000. Last week, $18,000.

World (Indie) (430; 98)—"Too Bad She's Bad" (Indie) (3d wk). Dull $2,800. Last week, $3,000.

Ziegfeld (Davis) (430; 98)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (19th wk). Stout $3,600. Last week, $3,800.

'Oklahoma' Boff $14,000, Toronto; 'Birds' Hep 11G, 'Serenade' Rousing 13G

Toronto, May 1.

Canadian preem of "Oklahoma" got off to a hefty start in refurbished Tivoli, only spot in Canada equipped with new Todd-AO. Opening biz of "Oklahoma" is not entirely sellout, with management reluctant to sell some 100 side seats on possible word-of-mouth complaints. However, sale is big for ensuing four weeks, with heavy advance from out-of-town points. Only other newcomers are "Serenade" for big biz, with "Birds and Bees" also nice. "Court Jester" is leader in second frame.

Estimates for This Week

Christie, Hyland (Rank) (877; 1,357; 75-$1)—"Ladykillers" (Rank) (5th wk). Steady $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Circle, Towne (Taylor) (750; 693; 60-$1)—"Geordie" (IFD) (5th wk). Nice $5,500. Last week, $6,000.

Colony, Danforth, Fairlawn, Humber, Odeon (Rank) (839; 1,330; 1,165; 1,204; 2,318; 60-$1)—"Golden Arm" (UA) (3d wk). Holding at big $20,000. Last week $30,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Wonders' Wham $18,000, Philly

Philadelphia, May 1.

Weekend biz was slaughtered by summer weather change plus arrival of daylight savings. "Seven Wonders of World" was very strong on getaway at the Boyd. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" was another to successfully battle the downbeat, holding with a great figure in second stanza at the Viking. "Cockleshell Heroes" got good notices and plenty of bally but sparse attendance at the Stanley.

"Killer Is Loose" apparently is scaring away the patrons judging from the slim attendance it is getting at the Mastbaum. "The Swan" still is in the chips in the third round at the Randolph.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) 99-$1.80)—"Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (14th wk). Just oke $6,000. Last week, $6,500.

Boyd (SW) (1,430; $1.25-$2.60)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie). Solid $18,000 in 8 days. Last week, "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (63d wk), $25,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 99-$1.80)—"Carousel" (20th) (8th wk). Big $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,250; 65-$1.35) — "Serenade" (WB) (5th wk). Oke $9,000. Last week, $10,500.

Mastbaum (SW) (4,370; 99-$1.49)—"Killer is Loose" (UA). Drab $8,500. Last week, "Invasion Body Snatchers" (AA), $10,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; 99-$1.80)—"Picnic" (Col) (10th wk). So-so $8,000. Last week, $11,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,250; 99-$1.80)—"Swan" (M-G) (3d wk). Okay $14,000. Last week, $22,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 99-$1.49)—"Cockleshell Heroes" (Col). Disappointing at $15,000. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par), $9,500.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.49)—"Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G) (4th wk). Oke $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 90-$1.80)—"Rose Tattoo" (Par) (14th wk). Fair $4,000. Last week, $5,500.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 75-$1.49)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk). Great $22,000 or over. Last week, $29,000.

Trans-Lux World (T-L) (604; 98-$1.50)—"Too Bad She's Bad" (Indie) (2d wk). NSH $3,000. Last week, $4,500.

Studio (Goldberg) (450; 85-$1.49)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (5th wk). Big $4,500. Last week, $5,500 after three great weeks ahead of this fourth stanza.

'WONDERS' WOW 26G, PITT; 'SWAN' 12G, 2D

Pittsburgh, May 1.

"Seven Wonders of World" at Warner is the big noise downtown, and in first full week hung up the biggest take of all three Cinerama pictures with exception of Christmas-New Year's session for "This Is Cinerama." "The Swan" is holding up okay in second stanza at Penn but "Bold and Brave" at Stanley and "Jubal" at Harris are only doing so-so. Nothing much for "Backlash" at Fulton. "Diabolique" continues to do big at Squirrel Hill.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1)—"Backlash" (U). Small interest in Richard Widmark starrer and shapes only fairly good at $6,000. Last week, "Carousel" (20th) (5th wk), $5,000.

Boston, May 1.

This frame the holdovers are getting the biggest play. Only three new entries, "Serenade," shaping fairly smooth at Metropolitan; "Creature Walks Among Us" okay at Memorial; and "Mohawk" passably good at the Paramount and Fenway. "Swan" leads the holdovers, with an explosive $30,000 in second round at the State and Orpheum. Pilgrim, with "Jubal" in second stanza, is still sock. "Ladykillers" in third week at the Kenmore is smash. "Touch and Go" at the Exeter is frisky in second week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; $1-$1.80)—"I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (8th wk). Nice $7,500. Last week, $10,000.

Beacon (Beacon Hill) (678; 90-$1.25) — "Diabolique" (UMPO) (11th wk). Solid $6,000. Last week, $6,000.

Cinerama (Cinerama Productions) (1,354; $1.20-$2.85)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (36th wk). Fancy $18,000. Last week, $17,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 60-$1) — "Touch and Go" (U) and "Helen Keller in Her Story" (Indie) (2d wk). Torrid $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 60-$1) — "Mohawk" (20th) and "Red Sundown" (U). Fair $3,500. Last week, "On Threshold Space" (20th) and "Dynamiters" (Indie), $4,500.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; 85-$1.25) — "Ladykillers" (Cont) (3d wk) Wow $12,000. Last week, ditto.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 75-$1.25) — "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U). Good $12,000. Last week, "Conqueror" (RKO) (4th wk-4 days), $8,000.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,357; 75-$1.25) — "Serenade" (W) and "Scarlet Hour" (Par). Smooth $18,000. Last week, "Man Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk), $13,000.

Pilgrim (ATC) (2,100; 65-95) — "Jubal" (Col) and "Killer's Kiss" (UA) (2d wk). Sock $11,000. Last week, $15,000.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 60-$1)—"Mohawk" (20th) and "Red Sundown" (U). Fine $12,500. Last week, "Threshold Space" (20th) and "Dynamiters" (Indie), $14,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Swan" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (UA) (2d wk). Smash $18,000. Last week, $28,000, over hopes.

State (Loew) (3,000; 60-$1) — "Swan" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (UA) (2d wk). Socko $12,000. Last week, $16,000.

'Suit' Stout 15G In Laggard Mpls.

Minneapolis, May 1.

Continuation of unseasonable cold and snow probably should be favorable to the boxoffice although householders are confronted with unforeseen further fuel expenditures. However, aside from "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" none of newcomers is cutting much of a boxoffice swath. "Suit" is off to a flying start, but "Serenade" and "Hilda Crane" are weakies, especially the latter. "Tribute to a Bad Man" shapes fairly good.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (40th wk). Racking up another profitable stanza at $12,500. Last week, $12,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G). Good $5,000. Last week, "Kettles in Ozark" (U), $4,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 65-85)—"On Threshold of Space" (20th) and "Bowery Boys Crashing Las Vegas" (AA). Neat $5,500. Last week, "Carousel" (20th) (3d wk), $4,000 in 3 days at $1.25 top.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85 $1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th). Stout $15,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk), $5,000 in 3 days after $12,000 initial stanza at 85c-$1.25 scale.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-$1)—"Serenade" (WB). Moderate $7,500. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col), $8,000.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,600; 65-85) — "Wyoming Renegades" (Col) and "Gun That Won West" (Col) split with "Joe Macbeth" (Col) and "Crooked Web" (Col). Tepid $3,500. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) (2d wk), $5,000 at $1 top.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-$1)—"Hilda Crane" (20th). Sold solidly but poor $4,500 looms. Last week, "Miracle in Rain" (WB), $5,500.

World (Mann) (400; 75-$1.20)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (3d wk). Hefty $4,200. Last week, $5,300.

B'way Down Albeit 'Swan' Smash 160G, 'Jubal' OK 15G, 'Godzilla' Fair 18G, 'Birds' $30,000, 'Suit'-Stage 77G, 3d

A mild weekend which included two successive days of spring-like weather put a dent in total Broadway film business this session. The weather last Saturday and Sunday which drew thousands out of doors plus daylight savings time's arrival Sunday (29) naturally hurt. Many firstruns were badly hit on the Sabbath, with the following Monday also a weak one box officewise. Arrival of a brace of new bills helped cushion the dip.

Pacing the field is "The Swan" with stageshow, with a socko $160,000 opening week at the Music Hall, especially big for season of year. It stays on. "Jubal" ended its first session with an okay $15,000 at the Mayfair, which, however, was a big improvement over recent takes at this house.

"Godzilla" also shapes oke with $18,000 in prospect on initial stanza at the State. "Creature Walks Among Us" looks only mild $7,000, and won't hold at the Globe. "Star of India" with vaudeville is headed for a good $15,000 opening week at the Palace.

"Birds and Bees," first George Gobel starrer, wound up its first week with a disappointing $30,000 at the Paramount. It is being held over. "Madame Butterfly" went to a terrific $12,000 opening week at the arty Baronet.

"Seven Wonders of World" proved amazing by topping the first full week's figure by pushing to a capacity $63,200 in second session at the Warner. This third "Cinerama" subject is now in its third week.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" with ice show onstage is holding with a great $77,000 or close in third round at the Roxy. It is continuing. "Alexander the Great" is heading for an okay $22,000 in fifth stanza at the Capitol. "Oklahoma" is holding firm around $25,000 in 29th session at the Rivoli.

"The Conqueror" looks to hold with a fine $17,000 in fifth frame at the Criterion. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" continued fairly good with $13,500 in seventh stanza at the Astor, with "Harder They Fall" due in May 9. "Hilda Crane" moves into the Victoria today (Wed.). Final (4th) week of "Man Who Never Was" dipped to $10,000 in eight days.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (8th-final wk). Seventh round ended last night (Tues.) was fair $13,500. Sixth was $15,000. "The Harder They Fall" (Col) due in May 9.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Naked Night" (Times) (4th wk). Third frame finished Sunday (29) was lively $7,800. Second was $8,200.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"Madam Butterfly" (IFE) (2d wk). Initial stanza ended Sunday (29) was great $12,000, biggest opening week in three years here. In ahead, "Return Don Camillo" (IFE) (4th wk), $3,000.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; $1-$2.50) — "Alexander the Great" (UA) (5th wk). Current round ending today (Wed.) is heading for okay $22,000. Fourth was $28,000. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) announced as opening May 11.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20) — "Conqueror" (RKO) (5th wk). Present week winding tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to get nice $17,000. Fourth was $22,000.

Bijou (Lopert) (603; $1.50-$1.80)—"Richard III" (Indie) (8th wk). The seventh week completed Sunday (29) was down to okay $6,000 after $8,200 in sixth session. Two shows have been dropped from weekly schedule.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"French Cancan" (UMPO) (3d wk). Second session finished Sunday (29) was big $12,000. First was $16,000. Stays indef.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Creature Walks Among Us" (U). First week ending today (Wed.) looks to land mild $7,000, and won't be held. In ahead, "Threshold of Space" (20th) (4th wk), $5,200, but winds up nice run. "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) opens tomorrow (Thurs.).

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)—"My 7 Little Sins" (Indie). Opened yesterday (Tues.). In ahead, "Touch and Go" (U) (6th wk-8 days), okay $4,000 after same in regulation fifth week.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Jubal" (Col) (2d wk). Initial round completed Monday (30) was oke $15,000.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Lovers and Lollipops" (T-L) (2d wk). Initial holdover session ended yesterday (Tues.) held with sturdy $9,000. First was $11,000.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Star of India" (UA) with vaudeville. Week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to reach good $15,000. Last week, "Backlash" (U) and vaude, $18,000.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; $1-$2)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) (2d wk). First stana completed Saturday (28) was fair $30,000. Initial week was helped, at least opening day, by four personals by George Gobel, star of pic, onstage that day.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Ballet Romeo and Juliet" (Tohan) (5th wk). Fourth round ended Sunday (29) was smooth $7,000 after $9,800 in third.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75)—"The Swan" (M-G) and stageshow. Initial session ending today (Wed.) is headed for socko $160,000, especially big for this time of year. Holds, natch! In ahead, "Serenade" (WB) with Easter stageshow (5th wk), $125,000.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.25-$3)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (29th wk). This round winding up today (Wed.) looks to hit lively $25,200. The 28th week was $25,500.

Plaza (Brecher) (525; $1.25-1.80)—"A Kid For 2 Farthings" (Lopert) (3d wk). Second week ended Monday (30) was fancy $11,500 after big $13,600 opener.

Roxy (Nat'l. Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) with iceshow onstage (3d wk). Current frame finishing up tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like great $77,000 or near. Second was $87,500. Continues.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75)—"Godzilla" (Indie). First session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit fairly good $18,000 or close. Last week, "Miracle in Rain" (WB) (4th wk-6 days), $9,500, aided by preview of "Godzilla."

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80)—"The Ladykillers" (Cont) (11th wk). The 10th frame ended Monday (30) was sturdy $7,400 after $8,300 in ninth week. Continues indef.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50)—"Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (10th-final wk). The ninth round ended last night (Tues.) was good $4,000 after $5,000 in eighth week. "Gaby" (M-G) opens with benefit preem the night of May 9.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$2)—"Hilda Crane" (20th). Opens today (Wed.). In ahead, "Man Who Never Was" (20th) (4th wk-8 days), was fair $10,000. Third regular week was $12,000.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) (1,600; $1.20-$3.50)—"7 Wonders of World" (Indie) (3d wk). Second full week (house winds its week on Saturdays) ended Saturday (28) climbed to $63,200, capacity, and topping first full week's $62,200. Looks in for a very long run.

World (Times Films) (385; $1-$1.50)—"Last 10 Days" (Col) (4th wk). Third round ended yesterday (Tues.) was okay $3,300 after $5,000 in second week. Likely will wind this up in fourth week.

Holdovers Hit D. C. Biz; 'Jubal' Bangup $13,500, 'Swan' 16G, 'Suit' 14G

Washington, May 1.

General holdover situation has slowed up mainstem biz this week. Of the new bills, "The Rack" looks strong at Columbia. "Jubal" also is showing well in two spots. "Adorable Creatures" is solid at Plaza, a small arter. The hardy perennial, "Cinerama Holiday" continues to amaze with its business in 29th session. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" and "The Swan" also are holding nice at the boxoffice.

Estimates for This Week

THE IMPOSSIBLE TAKES LONGER

Tolstoy's "WAR AND PEACE"—The story that couldn't be made into a motion picture—is nearing completion.

During the sixty years that span the history of the motion picture screen, "WAR AND PEACE" has haunted the dreams of producers as the vehicle for the perfect motion picture. Yet its sublimity and scope somehow eluded the possibilities and resources of those who sought to transfer the crowded canvas of man's hopes and aspirations to the screen.

Italy's Ponti-DeLaurentiis devoted years to distilling Tolstoy's thousand pages into a story line as true to the original as it is straight to the point. In association with Paramount Pictures, they have succeeded in translating into dramatic form the nuances and subtleties of one of the greatest prose writers of all time. With a "dramatis personae" (sixty speaking parts) of such skill, imagination and variety as to encompass the entire gamut of human personality—from saint to slave to sinner—they have brought "WAR AND PEACE" to life!

The problem of casting—which alone took over a year to accomplish – was complicated by an embarrassment of riches. From among the galaxies of the talented who longed to help interpret this story a cast headed by Audrey Hepburn, Henry Fonda and Mel Ferrer was finally and ideally selected.

King Vidor was retained as director, to project the vastness and humanity of the story on the screen. The result? An all but incredible mirror of history reflecting thousands of horses and tens of thousands of troops as the Imperial Armies of Napoleon conquer Russia—and lose the world. The burning of Moscow by the retreating Russians reveals the entire grandeur and complete horror of war!

Tolstoy told the effect of these events on the human beings who lived through them in three of the most deeply felt and fully realized love stories that it has ever been the joy of mankind to live and the privilege of art to record.

Now, this seemingly endless expenditure of time, money and creative talent is represented by rolls of motion picture film. Skilled craftsmen are giving it final form in the cutting room.

The tide of expectation rises higher as their knowing eyes select, compare, choose. Weeks will go by before their task is finished, for like great wine, great works of art take time.

"WAR AND PEACE" will be with you in the near future. It will be a Paramount Picture in VistaVision and Technicolor. These words herald a major experience in your life.

Having waited for "WAR AND PEACE" will prove to be well worth while.

Paris Legit Season Nears End As Light Fare Comes In for Spring

Paris, May 1.

With the legit season winding using the usual entries of lightweight spring and summer caliber, a looksee at the past Paris season shows the usual hits. Newcomers currently are a reprise of Roger Ferdinand's "Le Mari Ne Compte Pas" (Husband Doesn't Count) at the Theatre Edouard VII, and an adaptation of a 1918 U. S. comedy of Clare Kummer by Nico, "Ce Soir Je Dine Chez Moi" from the original, "Successful Calamity," at the Theatre Wagram. Both look set for fair runs. The big hits this season are primarily in the comedy category, with many of them last season holdovers.

"Husband" gives out with a number of familiar gags on adultery, but is played with gusto by a competent troupe. It looks to run till the end of the season in July but is not a possibility for the U. S. "Calamity" seems rather hoary in French and is about a millionaire who feigns ruin to regain his family's attention. Small stage and ordinary production do not give this the theatrical lift it needs. This, too, will probably not survive July.

The top newcomers, among the over 150 entries this season, were Jean Anouilh's "Ornifle," Marcel Ayme's "Les Oiseaux De La Lune" (The Birds of the Moon) and Andre Roussin's "L'Amour Fou" (Mad Love). The hit reprises were Jacques Audiberti's "Le Mal Court" (Evil Runs), Armand Salacrou's "Histoire De Rire," George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion" in a new adaption by Claude-Andre Puget; Marc Gilbert Suavajon's version of Peter Ustinov's "Love of Four Colonels," and his adaptation of the Somerset Maugham-Guy Bolton piece "Theatre" known here as "Adorable Julia"; Edmond Rostand's "Cyrano De Bergerac" and Claude Santelli's "La Famille Harlequin."

Some Headed For U. S.

Of the above "Love," "Histoire," "Ornifle" and Raymond Rouleau's masterful mounting of the romantico "Cyrano," will be heading for the U.S. next season either as straight imports (as "Cyrano"), or as adaptaticns. "Histoire" and "Ornifle" belong to Anatole Litvak and Charles Boyer and "Love" is in the hands of Gilbert Miller who will also take over "Cyrano" intact with Pierre Dux and Francois Christophe.

Lesser hits include the recent "A La Monnaie De Pape" and "Jose," of Michel Duran. Also scoring were Jean Bernard Luc's "Les Amants Novices." "Bon Appetit Monsieur" of Gilbert Laporte; mainly "La Guele De Loup" and version of Emlyn Williams' "Someone Waiting" which got short shrift on Broadway recently but is a hit here. "De Loup" is likely to get to N. Y. Lesser successes were chalked up by Kiego Fahbri's "Le Seducteur" and a rivival of Maxim Gorki's "The Lower Depths."

U. S. Films Grab 75% Of Italian Market In March; Italo Pix Drop

Rome, April 24.

Yank productions further secured their commanding lead on the Italian market, soaring to an unprecedented 75% share of the local trade during March, according to figures just released here. During the same period, Italian pix dropped, percentagewise to a slim 14% of their home territory's first-run boxoffice. In March last year 63% of dates went to Yank imports, based on key city first-run figures, this representing an American gain of 12%. Italy's slice is down a significant 15%, mirroring the current crisis in all sectors of the Italo film industry. French releases also gained in March, rising to 7% of gross. Total market gross, however, showed a notable drop over similar figures in 1955, indicating exhib worries throughout Italy. TV is only beginning to be felt, but it is viewed as a threat. Figures indicate that March gross for this year were approximately $1,860,000 as against some $2,200,000 in March of 1955.

Local observers ascribe the strong U. S. gain on the local market to the dearth of Italo product in general,

London Variety Group To N.Y. Asking '57 Meet

London, May 1.

A big London contingent from Tent 36 will be heading to New York to attend the Variety Club's international convention at the Waldorf-Astoria in that city May 9-12. One of the main objectives of the British delegation is to pave the way for next year's conclave to come to London.

The British reps will be headed by Nat Cohen, Chief Barker of the London Tent. Crew members who will support him will include James Carreras, Norman Harrington, Sir Tom O'Brien, Mike Frankovich and Charles Pearl. Among the barkers making the crossing will be Leslie Faber, Ben Rosenfeld and Lambert Goldsmith.

Aussie B.O. Rise Despite Curbs

Sydney, April 17.

Despite new economic measures introduced by the Robert Menzies government as a move against inflation, Aussie show biz currently is reaping a terrific boxoffice harvest coast-to-coast. U. S. screen product is setting the pace. Best current Britisher is "Richard III" (London). Trade zoomed in Easter period.

"Battle Cry" (WB) is a smash and is set for lengthy run. Par's "To Catch a Thief" is in its ninth smash week. Top money-spinners include "Red Velvet Swing" (20th), "East of Eden" (WB), "Tender Trap" (M-G), "Marty" (UA), "Major Benson" (U), "Vanishing Prairie" (RKO) and "Man From Laramie" (Col).

ADDED PROLOG SETTLES SUIT VS. ITALO BIOPIC

Rome, April 24.

ANICA, the Italo Producers Association, recently registered a strong protest against the court order requiring cuts to be made on the top-grossing "World's Most Beautiful Woman," Lina Cavalieri biopic, starring Gina Lollobrigida. Result is that an "amicable" agreement has been reached, and the pic will continue in worldwide release untrimmed but with a written prologue explaining that pic is a "free adaptation" of the life of Lina Cavalieri.

Suit on the pic originally had been filed by Lina Cavalieri's brother, claiming the film offended his sister's memory. Court ordered pic yanked until three lengthy cuts were executed. ANICA filed a counter-protest, pointing to the danger of precedent-setting decision. It was further pointed out that Lina Cavalieri's own son was one of the pic's scripters and had given his full approval to the final version of the pic.

Plan High-Budget Pix For 20th-Fox in Mex

Mexico City, April 24.

Reported here is that 20th-Fox this year will spend as much for production of six pix in Mexico than what it usually costs Mexican producers to make 100 films here in 12 months. Understood these six pix, many in C'Scope and color, may cost 20th-Fox nearly $8,000,000. High cost information comes from the company's production permit application to the National Cinematographic Board.

Understood that 20th-Fox will make most of these films in Durango state because of terrain suitable for pix-making and special facilities the state government grants Americans for producing in its territory. These are in the form of cut taxes and services. Company may start this program in May. Clark Gable, Maureen O'Hara and Jane Russell are mentioned as some of the top stars who will play in these pix.

'Brit. All-Femme 'Yakity' Panel Show Set to Debut

London, April 24.

A new British panel game, "Yakity Yak," is to be launched by Associated TeleVision on their London station Sunday, May 6. The show, devised by Michael Pertwee and Leslie Goldberg, who will also present it, calls for an all-femme panel.

The quartet on the panel will be chosen for their looks, and will be asked to give rapid answers to questions put by challengers. Macdonald Hobley, who recently ankled the BBC, will chair the panel and the show will be staged by John Irwin.

Arg. Vaude Law, Never Popular, May Be Voided

Buenos Aires, April 24.

The experimental period of the obligatory Vaudeville law winds up early in May, and there is a general feeling here that this unpopular measure rushed through Congress by Peron's henchmen two years ago will be thrown into the discard. A temporary relaxation of the law for the summer season, which allowed suburban theatres to dispense with vaudeville turns on working days, matured March 31. Since then, exhibitors have been driven desperate by the extra cost, at a time when the severe polio epidemic was keeping patrons out of their theatres.

A probe made by the Provisional government has shown that of 11,000 alleged beneficiaries of the law registered in the Vaudeville Entertainers' Union, only 700 have actually benefitted by obtaining regular employment in film theatres. In contrast, the figures are exceeded by the number of exhibitors, distributors and their staffs plus their families.

The municipal authorities here recently took a hand in highlighting the harm done by this law, in an official complaint about the blue material used by some vaude entertainers, setting up penalties for any future infractions of this kind. The Lococo Circuit, in contrast with many other circuits, takes special care in selecting vaude turns for its firstruns.

Dutch Start Own Pix Fund to Build Native Biz; 3 Films a Year

Amsterdam, April 24.

The Netherlands Cinema League has decided to take the film industry problem into its own hands and has established a production fund of about $50,000, to be invested in three film productions each year. All kinds of measures have been taken in the recent years to help the Dutch film industry. In 1947, the League took care that the Cinetone Studios near here, plundered by the Germans, was fitted up with the modern equipment. But few films were shot there. For six months American tele films were made there, but the invasion of U. S. tv producers hoped for failed to materialize.

The League takes part in every Dutch film production with a guarantee of $25,000, or 40% of the usual costs of a feature film here. Recently the government made a guarantee of around $15,000 to each feature film produced.

What is hoped for is that with all these investments a continuous flow of film production will result. Of the seven recent films only two were directed by the same Dutchman.

M-G Tries C'Scope in 16m

London, April 24.

Metro branched out into 16m CinemaScope releases with the presentation last week of a substandard version of the Doris Day-James Cagney tuner, "Love Me or Leave Me." It was screened with the cooperation of the Ibis Film Society at its 600-seat private theatre.

The 16m version also was shown today at Stratford-on-Avon, and has been booked for its maiden voyage of "Reina Del Mar" on May 3.

Italo Producers Eye Big Success Of Historical Spectacles in U.S.

Rome, April 24.

Indication that Italo producers are keeping their eyes on the U. S. success of the such spectacles based on ancient history, as "Alexander the Great" (UA), "The Conqueror" (RKO) and, "Helen of Troy" (WB), as well as the locally-made "Ulysses" (Par) are contained in the current film title registrations at the ANICA office. This features the names of several of epic pix of this sort. It is probable that advance reports of the strong potential gross of another Italo-made, "War and Peace," have helped influence producers.

Understandably, producer Dino DeLaurentiis, who made both "Ulysses" and "War and Peace" and who is known as the strongest fighter for the large budget spectacle in this country, has at least four projects in such epic-class category. These are "Hannibal," "Don Quixote," "The Divine Comedy," "Marco Polo" and "Lourdes." Three items previously on the Lux Film production sked, "I Promessi Sposi," "Spanish Carousel" and "Chanson de Roland," are now registered under the name of Gianni Vaciago. Rizzoli Films has "Judith and "Holophernes" and "Resurrection" while Rizzoli's subsid, Serena Films, has "Imperial Venus." Among other promising titles are "Benvenuto Cellini," "Simon Bolivar" and "Cid Campeador."

Last-named pic gets under way soon in Spain under the direction of Rafael Gil, with Francisco Rabal in the key role. Pic is an Italo-Spanish twin production. In addition to the above, Titanus Films long has had "Goya" and "Sodom and Gomorrah" registered, though these projects have been moved back several times. Carmine Gallone is slated to produce and direct a large-scaled version of "Michael Strogoff" in C'Scope and Eastmancolor on location in Yugoslavia with interiors in Rome. Curd Jurgeus stars in pic, which rolls early in June.

New Mex Film Studio To Open Near Tiajuana

Mexico City, April 24.

Over objections voiced here that there are already enough pic studios in Mexico, studios are being pushed to completion in Tiajuana by the recently organized Estudios Cinematograficos de Baja California. Juan Jose Perez Padilla, a top Baja California financier who knows the film biz, is prexy.

The studios, some four miles from Tiajuana on the road to Ensenada, will have four American-made stages which Padilla estimates will be ready early in May. The plant is to be equipped with a lab, dubbing service, projection and cutting departments, and facilities for year-round production of dual version tv shorts.

Arg. Exhibs Win Tax Cut Fight

Buenos Aires, April 24.

Admission scales in Argentina were cut 60 centavos last week via elimination of the tax for that amount on all theatre ducats sold. This tax came into force by agreement with Eva Peron in 1948. Had exhibitors not notified the Entertainment Board of the decision to void this tax, it would have been renewable for another year. Recently, an attempt was made to bring producers and exhibitors together and agree to prolong the tax until the Entertainment Board's new Protection Law is published. But the producer and exhibitor associations, which had to ratify the agreement, refused to do this.

This creates a difficult situation for the producers, who rely on the 500,000 pesos they obtain from their percentage of the tax, to finance their operations. Speculation on the new Protection Law is lively, with reports that a big effort has been made to reconcile the interests of producers, exhibitors, distributors and other interested parties. Protection will extend, it is believed, only insofar as quality justifies it. Cash prizes would be awarded annually to the best native productions.

Replacing the 60 centavo tax, there will be a 10% surcharge on admission scales to subsidize the native industry. Obligatory exhibition of the native product will be restricted by comparison with the past. Hinted that film theatres may exhibit native product only 80 days per year. Exhibs have been urging the Entertainment Board to lift all price controls when the new law is published, in which case they would increase firstrun prices to 10 pesos, the same price applying for quality flat screen product as for curved screen.

The higher price for curved screen pix doesn't seem to affect attendance, as witness the seven-month run of "Three Coins in Fountain" (20th).

Fuller-Carroll Combo In Big Aussie TV Bid

Sydney, April 24.

A. Ben Fuller, son of the late Sir Ben Fuller, and Garnet Carroll, top independent legit producer and longtime partner of the late knight, have set up a major video production unit at Pagewood studios here to cash in on the tele boom expected late this year. Pair will be associated with Roly Litchfield of the Litchfield Television and International Television Services.

New production setup will operate the largest studios Down Under and is presently geared to televise anything from a 20-second commercial to a full-length feature. Understood that Garnet Carroll, now presenting "Kismet," at the Princess, Melbourne, will import talent from Britain and U .S. for special Aussie tv productions in conjunction with his major legit operations in association with Fuller.

German Exhibs Cash In On Bans Vs. Some U.S. Pix Dating GI Chain

Frankfurt, April 24.

German theatre owners are taking advantage of the 500,000 Yank servicemen and American civilians in their country who are unable to see certain films on their regular American circuit of cinemas here.

Since the Army and Air Force Motion Picture Service in Washington, D. C., buys films for the military circuit in Europe, and rules out any pix which have not received the Legion of Decency seal as well as foreign films which do not have a major release in the U. S., the German theatre owners are capitalizing by offering the films in their original version here.

Such seal-less films as "I Am a Camera" (Indie), "Golden Arm" (UA) and "Moon Is Blue" (UA) will not be shown to the GIs in Europe. And some of the sexier foreign films, like Martine Carole's French films, and the Italian-made Gine Lollobrigida and Sophia Loren starrers, are also not purchased for the military and air force cinemas. So the German exhibs hep that GIs would like to see these banned films, are starting to offer regular showings of these films in English.

First to crack the barrier was "Carmen Jones" (20th), which had been delayed on the GI circuit because of legal entanglements over the rights to the Bizet music. It opened in the key German cities with a large Yank-population cities like Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Cologne, Berlin, with the early night performance in German and the original version for the late show.

Second to play the German houses was "Golden Arm." Despite not getting the PCA seal, it was widely acclaimed in Germany, getting the "outstanding" rating from the German Film Evaluation Board, which means that the theatres playing it are eligible for a tax reduction.

"Arm" also started with alternating German and original version showings. It played for two weeks in Frankfurt, and is continuing to show in English for Sunday matinees.

20th-Fox Annual Statement

Reflecting the expanded acceptance of CinemaScope abroad, 20th-Fox last year racked up a record $53,221,020 in overseas film rentals, an increase of 28% over 1954. Dollar remittances to N. Y. outside the U. S. and Canada, ran to $26,902,000, Spyros P. Skouras, 20th topper noted.

Annual report of 20th, out last week, noted that the company's global film rentals hit a new high for the third successive year, totalling $109,566,851 against $106,355,068 in 1954, but showed a sharp drop in domestic rentals.

Latter stood at $56,345,831, dropping from $65,018,411 in 1954, "reflecting the disappointing boxoffice response to some of our pictures released during the year," according to the report. Skouras said the blockage of foreign cash balances was "an ever present problem" but that the outlook appeared favorable for '56.

Prexy put the number of CinemaScope theatres throughout the world at 35,000, of which 17,000 are in the U. S. and Canada. Since 20th puts the total of houses in the two countries at 23,500 that means that 72% of the domestic market is equipped. Estimating that 40,000 houses should have C'Scope by the end of loosely base on the career of Tom Prendergast.

Report showed that the per picture cost of C'Scope in 1955 had been reduced. It stood at $1,989,000 in 1955 (for 19 films) as against $2,286,000 in 1954 (on 14 pix).

20th, in Sept. of last year, entered into a new credit agreement with a group of banks for $15,000,000, all or part of which can be borrowed from time to time until Dec. 31, 1957. Thereafter the debt consists of serial notes which become due quarterly in increasing amounts from March 31, 1958 through and including Dec. 31, 1962. 20th so far has borrowed $8,000,000 under the new agreement and has repaid $5,125,000 to redeem a like amount under a loan agreement which originated June 13, 1952.

SHOR SEES TRADE EVILLY OBSESSED; SAYS DISTRIBS STALL BUT KID NOBODY

By HY HOLLINGER

Rube Shor, president of Allied States Assn., charged that the distributors deliberately delayed readying their testimony for the Senate Small Business Subcommittee hearing so that the exhibitors would not have an opportunity to refute the assertions that might be made. "They (the distributors) are not kidding me," Shor stated from his Cincinnati headquarters, "and I don't think they're kidding Congress."

Shor contended that the distribs were well aware of the fact that "time was running out" and that Congress was approaching its adjournment deadline. "It's obvious to me," Shor said, "that the distributors delayed their testimony as long as they could. They know all the questions and they've had their answers prepared for a long time. It doesn't look like we (the exhibitors) will have an opportunity to appear before the committee again. Of course, there's a lot more things that could be said."

Minneapolis, May 1.

Bennie Berger, National Allied Emergency Defense Committee chairman and North Central Allied president, today issued statement to effect he'd favor abandonment of present move for government regulation of film rentals if film companies will agree to all-inclusive arbitration.

Shor, in a bitter mood, stated that conditions in the industry had become worse "if anything else" since the exhibitors had aired their case before the Senate committee. The problems relating to film rentals and the shortage of pictures had become more acute, he declared. "Even Metro is no longer the friendly company."

The Allied topper said he was completely confused and frustrated by the actions of the film companies. "How long can these things go on? It doesn't seem sensible putting the small theatres out of business unless the distributors have something else in mind. Only time will tell if what they're doing is right or wrong." Shor intimated that the film companies were sacrificing their theatre customers in favor of returns from television. "Maybe that's what they have up their sleeve," he said.

Shor was again incensed by the anonymous rejoinders of film company executives to Allied proposals. He especially blasted the don't-quote-me reactions to Allied general counsel Abram F. Myers' "feeler" for an all-industry conference to weigh all the ills presently confronting the film business. "I've given up trying to understand the distributor," Shor said. "They tell us not to go to the Government, but they offer us no alternative. I'm willing to meet with them any time. Why aren't they? As far as I'm concerned, the trade press can be present."

Shor asserted that he personally made a new attempt to arrange an all-industry meeting by talking to two of the company presidents. He said he received one "flat no" and one "hesitant" answer. He stated that he had promised not to reveal the names of the company toppers he had approached. Again referring to the anonymous statements of distrib execs in the trade press, Shor stressed that he allowed the use of his name "whenever I have something to say."

The Allied chieftain said there was nothing the exhibitors could do at present relating to their problems. "I'm waiting for the results of the Senate hearing," he said, "unless someone approaches me in the meanwhile."

Allied board of directors and its emergency defense committee meets in Washington on May 22, the day following the film companies' appearance before the Senate committee. The board meeting, Shor stressed, is Allied's regular spring conclave. He stated that an agenda is currently being prepared and that the Senate hearings would be among the things discussed. Shor said he had invited Myron Blank, president of Theatre Owners of America, to attend the EDC meeting and that Blank as well as TOA committee would probably join Allied in the discussions.

Video Fellows Become Picture Engineers Tho Unintended—Frayne

Heavy stress on the activities of the Society of Motion Picture & TV Engineers in the tv field was evident in the address of Dr. John G. Frayne before the SMPTE's get-together luncheon in N. Y. Monday (30).

Frayne emphasized the growing cooperation between engineers in the video and film industries and stated that "television engineers must be looked to for a substantial share of leadership in the future."

Guest speaker at the opening powwow of this 79th semiannual SMPTE convention was Dr. Albert W. Trueman, chairman of Canada's National Film Board, who discussed the status of the documentary in a democratic society.

Sessions of the SMPTE convention were heavily laced with tv discussions, with particularly attention paid to studio lighting.

Frayne's address, which seemed to give tv the edge, was interpreted by some as a bid for stronger tv support of the Society. In recent years, with the emergence of the wide screen and stereophonic sound, SMPTE attention has been largely taken up with film matters. There is now less interest in that phase of the engineers' work.

Noting that more film was being broadcast today "live" shows, Frayne said the situation had induced interest in film and projection. "Television engineers, almost in spite of themselves, became picture engineers," he commented. Partly in consequence of this, former coexistence between the tv and film technical forces had now turned into full cooperation. "The cold war is only going on still in some unenlightened quarters," he stated.

Frayne commented on the significance that, whereas tv engineers had become pic conscious, "the opposite did not occur."

Trueman in his talk observed that, both the U. S. and Canada, still had within their borders problems of unity to solve, "the necessity of greater sympathy and understanding among its farflung peoples. Part of the solution of these problems is undoubtedly to be found in the extending and enriching of citizens' knowledge about oneanother." The documentary, he opined, was ideally equipped for the task.

Borgnine Up-Billed

Minneapolis, May 1.

RKO theatres here have been giving Ernest Borgnine top billing over co-stars Glenn Ford and Rod Steiger during the engagement of "Jubal."

Due, of course, to his "Marty" triumph and "best actor" Oscar award.

County Admish Tax On Auto Theatres

St. Louis, May 1.

A move to slap an additional sales tax on film houses and ozoners in un-incorporated areas in Illinois communities as a means of giving various counties additional financial relief was okayed by the Illinois Assn. of County Officials at a meeting last week in Springfield. The proposal adding a 1c tax will be acted upon at the annual meeting of the association.

The new tax would be in addition to the present 2½c. state sales tax which was authorized to cities by the 1955 Illinois General Assembly.

SUBPOENA GOLDWYN AT FRISCO DOCKSIDE

San Francisco, May 1.

Among those seeking to talk to producer Sam Goldwyn when the S.S. Cleveland docked here last Thursday (26) were a private detective and a deputy U. S. marshal.

Pair sought Goldwyn in the liner's $95-a-day Neptune Suite, couldn't find him and slipped down a deck, where they found the producer and his wife in a much simpler stateroom waiting to go ashore.

Detective and marshal served a subpoena on Goldwyn directing him to appear in Federal Court here Aug. 13 to testify on behalf of Fox West Coast Theatres.

"How come?" asked Goldwyn. "I sued them."

A little later Goldwyn conceded the subpoena "has something to do with anti-monopoly"—meaning his five-year-old, multi-million-dollar suit against the film theatre circuit.

Then he and his wife went ashore.

Justice Dept. Requested To Reply to Exhibs, 'In Writing, Please'

Washinton, May 1.

The antitrust division has been asked to submit a written statement to the senate small business committee, in reply to charges made at the recent exhibitor hearings. Spokesmen for the Theatre Owners of America allege that the division was not properly enforcing the consent decree against the majors.

This means the Justice Dept., will be given an opportunity to testify before Senator Hubert Humphrey's subcommittee which heard the exhibitor complaints. Humphrey asked Asst. Attorney-General Stanley Barnes, head of the antitrust division, for a written statement.

Humphrey says he is so busy with senate work that he will not be able to give the time for antitrust division to offer oral testimony.

Distributors are slated to testify on May 21.

FELDMAN DRIVE UPS U $1½-MIL OVER 1955

Universal's total domestic billings, exclusive of Canada, hit close to $14,500,000 for the 17-week Charles J. Feldman sales drive which concluded Saturday (28) a $500,000 increase over last year's equivalent drive stanza.

Final week of the concentrated sales pitch, named afer U's sales v.p., brought in about $2,500,000 in billings, resulting in average bookings of $850,000 per week from Jan. 1 to April 28. Drive was the sixth annual one honoring Feldman.

Dozier Due Into Gotham For Pow With O'Shea

William Dozier, RKO production v.p., is due in New York from the Coast tomorrow (Thurs.) for 10 days of product talks with president Daniel T. O'Shea. The two execs had planned a trip to Europe this month to look in on production possibilities in England and on the Continent. But this has been put off to the end of the year because of the heavy lensing activity that's developed on the Coast.

Since starting the cameras rolling at the beginning of this year the new RKO regime has completed four pictures, began filming a new one, "Public Pigeon Number One," Monday (30) and has five more set to go within the next 60 days. The future lensing activity will be taken up by Dozier and O'Shea over the 10-day period.

U's $1.06 Divvy

Board of directors of Universal at meeting yesterday (Tues.) declared a dividend of $1.06¼ on the company's 4¼ culmulative preferred stock.

Melon is payable June 1 to stockholders of record May 15.

SCUTTLE RESERVATIONS IN HAWAIIAN PAIR

Honolulu, May 1.

Reserved seat policy is being dropped at Consolidated Amusement's first run Kuhio theatre. New policy calls for two unreserved shows seven nights a week, plus matinees.

Chain dropped reserved seat policy at the Waikiki theatre several months ago in favor of continuous evening performances.

Kuhio changeover comes immediately following four-week run of "Guys and Dolls."

'Wedding' & 'Gettysburg' Teamed at Guild, N. Y.

Two short subjects—each running about 30 minutes—have been packaged by Metro for presentation at the Guild Theatre, N. Y., starting May 27.

The special subjects, both in CinemaScope and color, are "The Wedding in Monaco," described as the only "official and comprehensive" coverage of the recent Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier III nuptials, and "The Battle of Gettysburg," which tells the story of the famous Civil War battle in terms of the monuments in the battle field area. "Gettysburg" was personally produced by M-G production chief Dore Schary.

Line Up Big Films in the Summer Alleys

[WITH BLOCKBUSTERS INCLUDED]

With the major film companies prepared to release their blockbuster product during the summer months, now the industry's key business period, the distribution companies are getting off to an early start in jockeying for dates and snaring "the proper playing time." The sales staffs around the country are being alerted to lay the groundwork immediately for the upcoming releases and to build up interest in the summer pictures among exhibitors far in advance of the actual distribution dates.

Bullish that this summer will bee the issuance of "more outstanding motion pictures from all sources than in any similar period in many years," the film companies are prodding their sales personnel to make certain that their particular company gets its share of the top dates and proper marketing, for it's anticipated that there will be a determined scramble among the distribs for playing time.

Paramount's biggie will be "War and Peace." Also on its summer slate is a new Martin & Lewis picture—"Pardners"—always a holiday period attraction. Par is coming out strong, too, with "The Proud & Profane" (William Holden, Deborah Kerr) and "That Certain Feeling" (Bob Hope).

Metro is banking on "Bhowani Junction" (Ava Gardner), "The Catered Affair," and "The Rack," "Lust for Life," "Fastest Gun Alive" and has in reserve as a summer possibility "High Society," the Grace Kelly-Bing Crosby-Frank Sinatra starrer. 20th-Fox's summer blockbusters will be "The King and I" and "Bus Stop," with the latter marking Marilyn Monroe's return to the screen. 20th is also going strong with "D-Day, The Sixth of June" (Robert Taylor), "One in a Milion" (James Mason), "The Day the Century Ended," and a big musical in "The Best Things In Life Are Free."

Universal's major summer effort will be "Away All Boats," said to be the company's most expensive picture to date. "Toy Tiger" (Jeff Chandler and Laraine Day) and "Rawhide Years" (Tony Curtis and Arthur Kennedy) also rate highly in U's program. United Artists has one of its most impressive slates in years with "Trapeze" (Burt Lancaster, Tony Curtis, Gina Lollobrigida), "Johnny Concho" (Frank Sinatra), and "The Ambassador's Daughter" (Olivia de Havilland).

Columbia is offering "The Eddie Duchin Story" (Tyrone Power and Kim Novak), "Autumn Leaves" (Joan Crawford), and "Safari" (Victor Mature and Janet Leigh). Col, recalling the success of its dual package of "It Came From Beneath the Sea" and "Creature With the Atom Brain" last summer is hopeful for a repeat with its new tandem—"Earth vs. Flying Saucers" and "The Werewolf."

"Moby Dick" (Gregory Peck) and "The Searchers" (John Wayne) head Warner Bros. summer releases, with "Animal World" and "Santiago" (Alan Ladd) plus a pair of reissues, "Distant Drums" and "Dallas," rounding out its June to August schedule. RKO will be represented by the first studio-made picture since the Thomas O'Neil takeover with "The First Traveling Saleslady" (Ginger Rogers and Carol Channing). Click of "King Kong" in a recent tv outing has also prompted RKO to try the film theatrically again during the vacation period. In its previous re-release about three years ago, "King Kong," originally issued in 1933, grossed almost $2,000,000.

Republic and Allied Artists are also entering the big picture sweepstake this summer. Rep's contribution will be its Naturama (its own anamorphic process) picture, "Lisbon," with Ray Milland, Maureen O'Hara, and Claude Rains, and "The Dakota Incident" (Linda Darnell and Dale Robertson). AA will concentrate on "Crime in the Streets" and the Joel McCrea starrer, "The First Texan."

Vive Film Editors—French Need 'Em

[For Hollywood Pace, Sez Caraco]

What French films need most to succeed in the U. S. market is a good editor, says Albert Caraco, production head of France's Gamma Film.

"Difference in pacing in Hollywood and French pictures is a vital clue to our success, or the lack of it," he commented. "Give me a good cutter, and there are few French top films that couldn't make the grade here," he added.

Backlog, Realty, U 'Hidden' Values, Pique Wall St..

Opinion in some Wall Street circles is that Universal's stock, currently selling at 27, is priced considerably below its true market value. Financial sector evaluation is based on the case value of U's backlog of 800 pictures and the company's large real estate holdings on the Coast. Latter is alongside a new freeway and worth at least $10,000,000.

Neither the true value of the backlog pictures nor of the real estate is carried in the company's financial report, but Wall Streeters regard both as important hidden assets. It's noted, for example, that should the company desire to sell a part of its land holdings, it can pick up several million dollars from home developers.

As another indication of the sturdiness of U's shares, it's claimed that a substantial portion of the value of Decca Records stock is based on its holdings in U. Decca, which owns 70.2% of the voting securities of the film company, is presently selling at 14¾. It's asserted that as much as $14 represents Decca's holdings in Universal.

An effort to get U's top-echelon executives to comment on the stock evaluation brought the reply, relayed through a secretary, that "we don't want a story on that."

Kelly-Rainier Wedding Short Set for Distrib

Paris, May 1.

Today, a three-reel short on the Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier wedding, in C'Scope, is ready for world release. Made by Jean Masson for CITEL here, this had the sanction and backing of Metro which had the exclusive rights for film coverage of the affair. Italo newsreel company INCOM claimed it also had exclusive film rights to the big nuptials but this was denied by CITEL.

Short gives an introductory background to Monaco and then goes into the life and sights that will be seen and lived by the new Serene Highness. It also covers the prelude to the wedding, the actual ceremony and winds up with the aftermath of the services. Harold Smith, ex-MPAA Paris head, is consultant sales chief on the film which will be distributed on the Continent by CITEL and in North and South America by Metro. Masson wrote and directed.

M-G Field Auditors Meeting

Metro's field auditors will hold a three-day meeting at the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago starting Friday (4).

Alan Cummings will conduct the meetings which will be attended by Harold Postman and Marvin Atlas of the homeoffice staff and Oliver Broughton, Lawrence Callahan, Harry Simons, Fred Rippingale, Charles Bell, Willard Gillilan, and Harold McElhone of the field staff.

Lefko Quits RKO for Par

Morris Lefko has resigned as east central division manager for RKO to join Paramount, effective next week. He had been with RKO over 15 years.

Lefko's post at Par will be associate of Charles Boasberg on the distribution of "War and Peace" and "The Ten Commandments." Boasberg, who's sales supervisor of the two productions, had been global distribution chief of RKO prior to linking with Par.

Alfred Katz to Vietnam Seeking Official Okay On 'Quiet American' Pic

Figaro Inc., the Joseph L. Mankiewicz firm, has signed Alfred Katz to make preliminary arrangements for Vietnamese cooperation for the filming of "The Quiet American," Katz, a public relations consultant, leaves for Saigon in June for talks with Vietnam officials. (He recently returned from a similar assignment in Tokyo for an upcoming Sam and Bella Spewack indie production).

Katz will work with Michael Mindlin Jr., Figaro's pub-ad chief. Following initial survey, he'll report to Figaro in the U. S. and then return to Saigon with Mindlin for the final arrangements. Katz spent some time in Vietnam a year ago in connection with the work of the International Rescue Committee.

Mankiewicz will write and direct the film version of the Graham Greene novel. It is scheduled for filming in Vietnam in 1957. United Artists will release.

Roomier Straightjacket Granted RKO Theatres

Previous court order which required RKO Theatres to dispose of its 20% interest in Metropolitan Playhouses was eased last week by N. Y. Federal Judge Thomas F. Murphy. In toning down the original order, the court acted upon a request submitted by George W. Alger, trustee for the RKO Theatres shares.

Alger, who filed his request on Jan. 30, charged that a Feb. 2 deadline for entry of a plan for disposition of the RKO Theatres stock was hamstringing efforts "to sell the stock at a reasonable price." Mandatory disposition of the shares stems from the Government's consent decree against RKO.

Decree requires the new theatre company to sell its 20% interest in Metropolitan Playhouses, a New York City chain jointly owned by United Artists Theatres, RKO Theatres and members of the Skouras family. Alger maintains that the one possible buyer of the RKO Theatres shares is the Skouras interests. But these quarters, he claimed, sought unfairly to capitalize on RKO's duty to sell its holdings within the time limit.

Under the new order signed by Judge Murphy no date is set for termination of the trusteeship. However, the Government may give 60 days notice but even in event such notice is given the trustee still may request an extention. Amended order is also in line with Alger's suggestion that dividends received shall be withheld from RKO until the sale of the stock is completed . . ."

"The trustees shall receive and hold any cash dividends or distributions," Judge Murphy's order stated, "which may be paid in respect to shares of stock until a trust has been terminated as to such stock, and upon termination shall pay to RKO unless an earlier payment shall be consented to by the Government."

Stanley's Albany IA Pact

Albany, May 1.

A contract has been signed by Stanley Warner Theatres and Stage Employees Local 12, IATSE, covering Albany. It provides for a salary increase, retroactive to Sept. 1, and a maintenance clause.

Representing circuit in the final negotiations were James Bracken, SW zone contract manager from New Haven, and James Tobin, district manager, of Boston. Speaking for the union were James A. Blackburn, president-business agent, and Bus Foley.

STALK ILLEGAL PRINT

Columbia's 'Three Stripes' Played Springfield, Mass. Cafe

Columbia has asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to do some sleuthing regarding its new feature, "Three Stripes in the Sun." Seems that a 16m print of the film was being shown without Col authorization at a Springfield, Mass., cafe and the company doesn't plan any 16m showings for another two years.

There are legitimate narrow gauge prints in existence but these were made only for the Armed Services. "Stripes" is an Aldo Ray starrer. Col wants the FBI to find out how the film turned up as a cafe attraction.

PARAMOUNT INVENTORY DEC. 31: $52,744,768

Paramount as of last Dec. 31 had an inventory of $52,744,768 in productions in release, others being prepared for release, those in work and scenarios and rights to plays, etc. This represents an increase of nealy $10,000,000 over the inventory of a year previous.

Par's consolidated balance sheet shows a marked upswing in advances to outside producers, amounting to $6,553,000 for productions in release, $8,879,000 for completed pictures being prepared for release and $6,927,000 for product in process of completion.

At the close of the 1954 fiscal year, the corporation had advanced $2,406,000 for films in release, nothing for completed product being prepared for release and $8,680,870 for productions in process of completion.

Paramount's total income for the year 1955 hit a new high of $115,200,158, including $112,474,967 from film rentals, theatre receipts and sales of film accessories and rentals, it's shown in the company's annual report to stockholders. The total last year was $110,069,588, of which $106,920,793 came from rentals, receipts and accessories.

In the past year Par also realized additional gross of $858,240, which was an installment payment in connection with its sale of short subjects to television.

As previously reported, net earnings for 1955 amounted to $9,707,929, compared with $9,003,802 the previous year.

Amortization of negatives and prints held at an even level, coming to $28,656,386 in 1955 and $28,638,146 in 1954. Expenses for film distribution and cost of accessories, among other items, went up from $23,398,149 in 1954 to $26,075,274 in 1955.

Par's total current assets were listed at $86,594,062 against total current liabilities of $13,152,359 as of the end of 1955.

Money unremitted from abroad and consequently excluded from the annual fiscal report amounted to $5,400,000 at estimated exchange rates. As this is converted into dollars in New York it will be subject to the participation of outside producers and, of course, taxation.

Int'l Film Producers' Assn. Agenda

Meet to Discuss (1) 1956 Rules at Venice Festival; (2) Boycott of Switzerland by Neighbor Countries

New rules of the Venice film fest and the current boycott of Switzerland by French, German and Italian producers were the top items on the agenda of the exec board of the International Federation of Film Producer Assns. which met in Venice this week.

Fayette W. Allport, the Motion Picture Export Assn. rep. in London, is attending the powwow for Eric Johnston.

According to Americans just recently back from Europe, other countries besides the U. S. are objecting to the new Venice setup which limits entries to 12 and puts the choice of competing pix up to a Venice committee. Oddly enough, some nations fear that, under such an arrangement, the American industry would get too much of a break, probably getting two out of the 12 pictures allowed to compete.

Swiss situation doesn't concern the U. S. distribs which have their own setups there. French, Germans and Italians began their "boycott" when the local Swiss distribs got together and agreed to pay no more than a certain minimum guarantee. There's a possibility that the matter may be settled before it comes before the IFPA.

Two other matters on the IFPA agenda include a question of copyright and another concerned with budget. Rental situation in Belgium also was discussed.

Fold Kirby, Houston

Houston, May 1.

Interstate Theatres has closed the Kirby Theatre here. It's been sold to the McKinney Avenue Realty Co. House dates from 1927 and Publix Theatres.

Jessie E. Hogue, film projectionist remained on the staff during the entire 29 years of operation. There were only four managers in 29 years. Eddie Bremer was last one.

Several actresses are believed to have made their debut on the stage at the Kirby, notably Nan Gray, Gale Storm and Ann Miller.

'Twas Tough Going But Film Distributors Set Global Formula Finally

After overcoming some last ditch opposition by Warner Bros., film companies last week finally reached agreement on a global formula for the division of import licenses. It'll cover licenses handed out by eight countries.

"The master formula has been adopted after a period of intensive negotiation requiring a real spirit of cooperation and compromise," commented Motion Picture Export Assn. prexy Eric Johnston.

Formula agreement was arrived after objections raised by WB, 20th-Fox and Universal had been ironed out. Touchiest point had been raised by U, i.e. what constituted an "American" film under the terms of the formula.

Latter works this way: 36% of the permits will be divided evenly among the 10 member companies; 32% will be divvied up on the basis of each company's billings for American pictures in the territory involved; another 32% is governed by member company billings in the U. S. and a group of six representative, non-quota countries, including Britain.

Johnston said the formula would first be applied to Japan, where additional difficulties had to be overcome due to the allocation of fractional licenses. A special formula has been worked out for these.

U. S. Distribs Just Hold Own in Japan

Tokyo, April 24.

First quarter distribution receipts for the 10 major U. S. film companies distributing their product in Japan showed a rise of about $48,000 this year over the same period last year. January through March b.o. of the MPEA members totaled $5,297,800 this year. Last year the total was $5,250,000.

Warner Bros., with two smash successes here, "East of Eden" and "Mister Roberts," led with $1,055,000. Other companies and their quarter takes:

Par, $833,300; 20th-Fox, $830,000; Universal, $680,000; Metro, $590,000; RKO, $480,000; Col, $380,000; UA, $200,000; Rep, $171,000; and Allied Artists, $78,000.

SHOOT 'REB' AT BANDERA

Bandera, Tex., May 1.

"Johnny Reb," to be produced by the Anglo-American Productions Co., for Republic release, will be filmed at the Mayan Ranch here. Cast includes Ruth Roman Zachary Scott, Brian Donlevy and John Ireland.

Monty Cook, executive producer, will visit Dallas to line up local legit actresses for the pic.

Bermuda Studios' 1st Film Canned

Hamilton, May 1.

"Bermuda Affair" under the direction of Eddie Sutherland wound up shooting here last week and became the first full length picture to be filmed at the new Darrells Island studio. Produced by Film Studios (Bermuda) Ltd., the Robert Shaw original stars Gary Merrill and Kim Hunter.

Imported from England were featured players Ron Randell, Zena Marshall and Robert Arden. Supporting roles were filled by Don Gibson, Elsbeth Hofman, Wilbert Smith and Al Wagstaff, all local residents with film experience. Dick Van Hessen handled production.

The picture is slated for British release in August with plans for world premiere to be held in Bermuda.

First Yank Pic Filmed 100% in Cuba Finished

Havana, May 1.

Filming of Sam Goldwyn, Jr.'s "The Sharkfighters" was completed here last week, this being the first Yank pic filmed entirely in Cuba. "Sharkfighters" deals with the efforts of U. S. Navy researchers to develop a shark-repellant ointment to be used by aviators downed in the ocean. It took five weeks to film. Shooting was done at the Isle of Pines and in and around Havana.

The company built a small village on Isle of Pines for the shooting. It also constructed two Navy establishments, outdoor nightclub and a floating pier. The story takes place in 1942, at which time the embassy was located in Old Havana. A scene in the naval attache's office was actually filmed in the office of Public Affairs Officer Dick Cushing.

One of stars of picture, Rafael Campos ("Trial"), is leaving for the Dominican Republic (his native country) where he is to receive official honors because of his acting laurels.

Allied at Elkhart Lake

Milwaukee, May 1.

Allied Theatre Owners of Wisconsin will hold its annual convention June 11-13 at Schwartz Hotel, Elkhart Lake, Wisconsin.

Elkhart Lake site marks first time that the Wisconsin unit has held its annual confab in a resort area.

Mean No One Party!—But Both?

Hollywood, May 1.

There'll be no charges of political partisanship leveled against the Payne-Seltzer production "The Boss," if the producers have anything to say about it. Film has already been described as being loosely based on the career of Tom Prendergast.

Actor Joe Flynn, who's running on the Democratic ticket for the California Assembly from the 57th district, has been working on the film for a week. So the producers hired actor Charles J. Conrad the Republic incumbent assemblyman from the 57th district, for a role in the picture.

Just to prove the 57th AD loves showbiz, Conrad's predecessor in the assembly post was actor Albert Dekker.

charts, graphs and tape-recorded interviews. The inquisitive caller is avalanched with information about ticket sales and why they're good, bad or indifferent.

Onetime Ohio exhibitor and associate of George Gallup and Raymond Rubicam in Audience Research Institute, which undertakes to pre-test film story, cast and title values for producers, Sindlinger says the nature of the job subjects him to an accounting with his clients constantly. If he's wrong about the potential of a picture the exhibitor will soon know about it through boxoffice experience.

Forecasting

As a case in point, he advised that "Ulysses" was stronger than the trade suspected. One exhibitor bought it at a $25 rental upon his recommendation and grossed $600. Paramount was peddling the film, according to Sindlinger, at City first-run engagement of the feature could figure on a potential audience of 11,500 among the area's "frequent" theatre-goers. "Frequents," representing about 85% of the total audience, are those who attend a theatre two or three times or more a month; "infrequents" buy a ticket once a month or less.

Don't Let 'Em Be Critics!

After the clip was tv'ed, the potential audience among the "frequents" fell to 8,500. The exhibitor's own books will show if that latter figure was correct. If there hadn't been the tv airing, the 11,500 estimate could have been checked.

Sindlinger is particularly down on the exposure of excerpts of features on video, for, as he puts it, "this allows the public to preview product psychologically and mechanically in the most unsatisfactory manner." Notes on the index cards and the taped interviews, as heard by the reporter, appear to bear him out.

Trailers in theatres are different in presentation and effect, Sindlinger went on. These have the "cliff-hanger" angle, meaning a taste of next week's feature, in full scope and color, and producing come-back-and-see results.

Sindlinger hires his interviewers through newspaper want-ads, selecting, of course, those who seem most qualified, and the point is made right at the start, somewhat unsubtly, that a follow-through will be made from Ridley Park to check on whether the interviews actually are conducted. The questions are designed to elicit thought-out and honest answers. Phoney info would be worse than none at all. The interviewer is given a telephone number to call, but no names. About 80% of those thus contacted are willing to discuss their theatre-going habits and tell whether they know about a film, how did they come to hear it and would they want to see it. It's this way that Sindlinger tries to determine "know about" and appeal.

An example: Par's "The Ten Commandments" as of April 14 drew a big rating in three survey areas. The East, to take one, has a population, excluding kids under 14, of 35,455,000. Of these, 27,726,000 are "infrequents," 7,729,000 "frequents." In the "know about" category are 20,280,000 and in the appeal group are 69.4%, or 14,076,000. The formula takes a couple of more twists and an estimated probable audience of 7,615,000 for the territory is arrived.

Sindlinger claims that over 8,000 interviews are conducted weekly.

For the week ended April 21, these were the pictures most talked about on the basis of 8,244 interviews, listed in the order of their spotlighting by the public: "Picnic," "I'll Cry Tomorrow," "Marty," "Carousel," "Man with the Golden Arm," "Rose Tattoo," "The Conqueror," "Forever Darling," "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" and "The Benny Goodman Story."

Sindlinger himself hasn't seen any of them. He makes it a point of staying away from all films until they've ceased as subjects for any of his surveys.

Happy Daze, and Aftermaths

[SINDLINGER'S 8 HISTORIC FILM "CYCLES"]

Ridley Park, May 1.

Film market analyst Albert Sindlinger has broken the modern industry down into what he terms "eight historical cycles," the first being that happy 1947-'48 period when pictures were an important source of inexpensive entertmainment and the competition wasn't severe. Followed by:

(2) Television's 1948-'49 expansion and film theatres began being neglected.

(3) In 1951, the testing of subscription tv in Chicago and, sez Sindlinger, the public indicated it was receptive to the idea.

(4) The 1952 pre-lifting-of-the-tv-freeze when 40% af the nation's population still didn't have access to tv. Hollywood ignored the medium, blamed the murderous theatre business on poor pictures and economics in general. Sindlinger's interviewers found the public in non-tv areas to be satisfied with the films and were attending them at a higher rate than in 1948. And surveys in tv-saturated areas showed that teleset owners "didn't much care whether Hollywood's product was 'good' or 'bad.'"

(5) In the 1953-'54 period, following permits for new stations, tv became available to most of the country. In old tv areas the novelty values had waned and theatre attendance picked up. In the new tv markets, theatre biz went off and on the overall the attendance was still declining.

(6) The industry in 1954 took on its new technological look. The public regarded the added scope as plusses but still were mostly influenced by story and cast. Admission tax relief also helped.

(7) The fourth quarter of 1954 and the first three quarters of 1955 brought the first increase in theatre gross and net for a 12-month period since 1946. Theatre gross for the period was $1,224,600, which was within $20,000,000 of the 1948 gross level.

(8) Attendance on the skids again in the fourth quarter of 1955. This was caused, states Sindlinger, by the Hollywood studio tv shows and the use of clips from features on them. The programming is keeping the frequent-type theatre-goer at home and the excerpts, on the smallscreen black and white, are lessening interest in the productions they're designed to help sell, he stated.

terms lower than warranted. If the film proved weak, the analyst would have been proved wrong.

That a substantial part of the film industry refuses to listen to Sindlinger is conceded by the loquacious sage of Ridley Park. The attitude given expression among many film company and theatre execs might be wrapped up this way: "We know business is bad, why do we need Sindlinger to tell us? As for why it's bad, we know that instinctively."

It might be interjected at this point that Eric A. Johnston, upon becoming president of the Motion Picture Assn. 10 years ago, commented that the industry had an incredible lack of knowledge about itself. Despite this, MPPAA isn't conducting any self-analysis, nor is any other individual or company seeking to penetrate the basic reasons behind the business behavior of films. Sindlinger is alone in the field.

(MPAA had a research department once, operating under Robert Chambers, but it was dissolved when it was found impossible to get member company co-operation under the antitrust laws.)

Sindlinger admits that researching can be a controlled form of sleuthing—that is, the researcher can prove via impressive looking statistics exactly what his client wants proved. But in his theatre probing he claims to be bent on an objective analysis of whether a film will or will not make "X" number of dollars, the impact of the advertising and why the public is or isn't buying. He states he refuses, as a matter of policy, to accept instructions on establishing any points in the client's behalf.

As for the tests of his accuracy, Sindlinger offered another illustration. Prior to a 20th Century-Fox television program on which a clip from "Man in the Gray Flannel Suit" was shown, the Oklahoma

'Mohawk' Nifty $13,000, Buff.; 'Planet' Trim 12G

Buffalo, ay 1.

Batch of new entries, all doing well, will bolster the boxoffice here this session. Biggest coin is going to "Mohawk," which is stout at Paramount. "Forbidden Planet" is doing almost as well at the Buffalo. "World Without End" looms okay at Century. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" shapes very solid in fifth stanza at Center.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (Indie). Fine $12,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) and "Timetable" (Indie), $14,000 with 95c top.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 60-80)—"Mohawk" (20th) and "Mystery of Black Jungle" (Indie). Nifty $13,000. Last week, "Serenade" (WB), $12,000.

Center (Par) (2,000; 60-$1)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk). Okay $7,500. Last week, $9,500.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 50-80)—"Jubal" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col) (2d wk). Soft $7,000. Last week, $13,000.

Century (Buhawk) (3,000; 60-85)—"World Without End" (AA) and "Atomic Man" (AA). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Carousel" (20th) (3d wk), $8,000 at $1.25 top.

Teck (Cinema Products) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (13th wk). Big $15,000. Last week, ditto.

PITTSBURGH

5th wk). Fine $1,500. Last week, $1,800.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 65-$1)—"Jubal" (Col). Lot of marquee draft but can't overcome the generally harsh crix. Modest $8,000 or a bit over. Comes out after one week for "Harder They Fall" (Col). Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk), $9,500.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 85-$1.25)—"The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk). Excellent weekend insures good $12,000 for the windup, much better than usual h.o. here. Last week, $17,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (4th wk). No real drop to compare with usual run pix here. Solid $4,500. Last week, $5,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 65-$1)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO). Fine notices for this one but won't do $8,000, very slow. Last week, "Serenade" (WB), $10,000.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.25-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (2d wk). Getting off to best start of all three Cinerama pix and advance sale indicates this'll be the one to beat. Heading for wow $26,000. First full week was same.

enough to detract from the central humane situation. This looks like something to be noticed at prize time and will probably begin to get international distributor attention.

Also noticed was another small country producer with Michael Cacoyanis' Greek pic, "To Koristi Me Ta Mavra" (The Girl In Black), a sombre, well told account of a weakling's coming of age when he runs into provincial prejudice and misunderstandings in falling in love with a girl on a little, inbred island. Somewhat overstated at moments it denotes a new talent and Cacoyanis was the man who was also noticed at the last fest with a passionate pic, "Stella," which recently won the U. S. foreign film critics award. Here he is more sure of himself and technically much more superior. "Stella" was made for $25,000 and "Black" for $35,000 with both successful at home and worthy of offbeat foreign interest. A growing home industry is beneficial to a country in import by hypoing filmgoing, and the fest was mainly responsible for the renown heaped on these pix and the perking of the budding film industry.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 84-$1)—"Killer is Loose" (UA) and "Timetable" (UA). No complaint at $6,000. Last week, "Backlash" (U) and "Red Sundown" (U), $6,500.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (3d wk). Still flashy at $3,000 after $9,800 in second stanza.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 75-$1)—"On Threshold of Space" (20th). Fairish $8,500. Last week, "Man Who Never Was" (20th), at 75c-$1.10 scale, $8,000.

'Jubal' Rich $15,500, Cleve.; 'Heroes' 14G

Cleveland, May 1.

Offish tone prevails at firstruns currently, with only a couple of houses showing any b.o. strength. "Jubal" shows the most action, being good at Hipp. Second frame of "Swan" is strictly routine at State. Allen's "Cockleshell Heroes" is rated good but "World in My Corner" at Palace and Stillman's "Scarlet Hour" are not getting far.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (3,000; 70-$1)—"Cockleshell Heroes" (Col). Good $14,000. Last week, "Serenade" (WB) ($14,200 in 9 days.

Hipp (Telem't) (3,700; 70-$1)—"Jubal" (Col). Fine $15,500. Stays. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th), $9,000 in 5 days.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; 70-90)—"Dance Little Lady" (Indie). Oke $5,000 in 5 days. Last week, "Littlest Outlaw" (BV) (2d wk), $4,000.

Palace (RKO) (3,285; 70-90)—"World in Corner" (U) and "Kettles in Ozarks" (U). Mild $8,000 or less. Last week, "On Threshold of Space" (20th), $9,000.

State (Loew) (3,500; 70-90)—"Swan" (M-G) 2d wk). Routine $9,000. Last week, $13,000.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; 70-90)—"Scarlet Hour" (Par). Slow $5,000 in 5 days. "Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (4th wk), $6,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 90-$1.25)—"Picnic" (Col) (11th wk). Sturdy $7,500. Last week, $8,500.

'Serenade' Sweet $8,000, Port.; 'Planet' Hot 9G

Portland, Ore., May 1.

Firstrun biz continues at a low level after hitting skids several weeks ago. Midsummer heat also has cut into grosses. "Forbidden Planet" at Broadway shapes fine while "Serenade' is rated good at the Fox. "Jubal" is smooth in second Orpheum round.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,875; 90-$1.25)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Kettles in Ozarks" (U). Fine $9,000 or less. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) and "World in My Corner" (U), $7,200.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,836; $1-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB) and "Glory" (RKO). Good $8,000. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk), $8,000.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Among the many problems created by the long-expired Italian film aid law, renewal of which has been dragging through government committees for the past several months, has been that of the dubbing fee taxes to be paid by Yank features showing in Italy. Figure set at 2,500,000 Lire per pic by the previous Italo-American agreement, has been raised to 5,500,000 lire by the new MPEA-ANICA pact. However, as this pact goes into effect only upon passage of the Aid Law, while the previous MPEA-Italian deal expired last August, question has been what figure would U. S. companies be expected to pay for their dubbing certificates?

Though legally there might have been some basis for no payment at all—no agreement being in force—in practice it would have been difficult to avoid such payment as the Italians still hold a key card in their hands: by one method or another, they could just have stopped imports altogether.

An arrangement was therefore agreed upon by both ANICA and MPEA, setting the dubbing fee at the old 2,500,000 lire until such a time as the new Aid Law is passed. The hiked figure (5,500,000 lire) when enforced will not be retroactive.

Some Italo exhib officials have been skeptical about eventual benefits of the hiked dubbing tax, indicating that the U. S. distribs would soon find a way to make up the difference via higher rentals. This, however, is not likely, at least for the moment, nor are the legalistics of such an eventual move quite clear.

William Perlberg, who sails with his wife, Bobbie (ex-Brox Sisters), today (Wed.), on the SS United States for a European pitchman's tour on behalf of "Proud and Profane" (Paramount), recalls that when he did a similar ballyhoo for one of his pictures four years ago, he observed to VARIETY that "the major lots will wind up chiefly as service stations for independent producer." This was at the time that the then new Perlberg-Seaton (George) Productions setup joined Par.

Perlberg recalls that Par studio topper Y. Frank Freeman somewhat capitously wanted to know, "what's the idea of calling us a filling station or a garage for independent producers" or words to that effect. Freeman was kidding on the square in his query.

The indie producer adds that more than ever that is what every major lot in Hollywood has evolved into—the utilization of their facilities, laboratories, soundstages, music clearances, technical refinements, etc. which the indie producers utilize for the best end-result of all concerned.

From London and Paris the Perlbergs will motor to Madrid and do their ballyhoo in that belt for six weeks. The George Seatons go over in July for a summer mopup, covering Germany and the Norse countries.

William Palmer, the Motion Picture Export Assn.'s representative in Indonesia, is a one-man "pioneer" for the motion picture industry. At his weekend mountain retreat near Jakarta, Palmer sets up a makeshift outdoor theatre by placing a bedsheet on a couple of poles and shows films on the "screen" with a 16m projector.

According to Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy Eric Johnston, at least 5,000 natives from a 10-mile radius arrive every Saturday night for the free show. Vendors arrive early to set up their wares and to sell the native equivalent of ice cream, popcorn, and soda pop. The natives, the majority of whom cannot read or write, gather on all sides of the screen and, said Johnston, respond enthusiastically. Johnston said the natives particularly were pleased by the triumph of "good over evil" in the Robert Taylor western on exhibition during the MPAA's chief's recent visit to Palmer's mountain home. The weekly free show, according to Johnston, results in a truce between the police and local bandits. They both sit quietly at the film.

Johnston regards Palmer's activities as an example of what the American film industry can do to introduce motion pictures in undeveloped areas. He feels that the people in this mountain territory are potential customers for regular film theatres in the future.

Editorial in the German Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, dealing with the withdrawal from Cannes of the French documentary, "Night and the Fog," questions the wisdom of the German Embassy in Paris in asking that the picture be yanked from the fest. Made by Alain Resnais, it's an accounting of the rise and disintegration of the German concentration camps.

Says the Allgemeine Zeitung, a very influential paper: "When will we come to understand that there can be no common ties between us and the rest of the world until and unless we join the international concepts of morality. If there is anything the world cannot forgive, it is opportunism on questions of humanity.

"The foreword to 'Night and Fog' states specifically that there is no intent to identify an entire people with the concentration camp crimes. This sentence contains an unspoken challenge for us. We should finally make our position quite clear."

Editorial states that, in yanking the pic, the French had officially compromised, "but, morally, all arguments are on their side." Film will be shown at Cannes anyway, but outside the fest frame.

Ted R. Gamble, former theatre circuit executive and currently president of the Mount Hood Radio & Television Broadcasting Corp., Portland, Ore., is up for reelection as a director of the Transamerica Corp. of San Francisco. John B. Bertero, president of Fox West Coast Theatres Corp., is also a member of the board.

In the notice of the annual meeting of the company it is reported that Gamble, for several years prior to his election as a director, transacted much of his banking business with the First National Bank of Portland, "and has borrowed from that bank in the ordinary course of business." During 1955, it's noted, his largest indebtedness to the bank totaled $176,147. As of Feb. 29, 1956, he owed the bank $165,000, of which $40,000 was at 3% interest rate, $25,000 at 4%, and $100,000 at 5%. "All such indebtedness," it's stressed, "is amply secured." The Oregon Beverage Co., of which Gamble is president and chief stockholder, has an outstanding unsecured loan with the same bank of $12,000 at 5%, borrowed "in the ordinary course of business."

Title Registration Bureau of the Motion Picture Assn. of America last year received more applications for title registrations from non-members of the association than from member companies.

MPAA annual report showed a total of 4,587 titles were submitted of which 52% came from non-members. Of the titles offered, 4,323 were accepted for registration by the bureau which is under the direction of Margaret Young.

During 1955, the bureau enrolled 46 new members. By contrast, prior to 1945, only six non-members were using the title clearing house which serves to avoid expensive duplication in titles.

Of the 4,587 titles submitted to the bureau last year, only 14 were considered objectionable under the rules. One appeal was taken from the decision to disapprove.

United Press and Fox Movietone News invaded the closed set of "The Boss" at Goldwyn Studios in Hollywood for a follow-up on the UP story that the Payne-Seltzer production is based on the life of Kansas City political boss Tom Pendergast. They wound up with official denials from the producers—and a filmed interview with actor Joe Flynn, who bears a striking resemblance to Harry Truman in the latter's younger days.

Flynn plays a hardware store proprietor who goes bankrupt and is appointed a county assessor by the political boss and later goes to Congress. Actor regularly does a nitery act that includes impressions of Truman, Thomas E. Dewey and Eleanor Roosevelt. He denied he was doing a takeoff on any former president, cracking "I can't play the piano."

The "master" formula for the division of global licenses, while basically agreed upon, continues to hit minor obstacles. Latest was overcome when 20th-Fox doubts about the application of the formula in Japan were settled. Now it's reported that Warner Bros. once again is raising a dissenting voice. Problem in Japan revolved primarily around the fractional permits handed out by the Government. The way these fractions will be handled now is this: All fractions are put into a hat and combined. Assuming that they tally up to four licenses, the four distribs with the highest fractions will then get a permit each.

The following year, however, two-tenths of a fraction is taken off the fractions assigned to each of the four that benfitted this year. On that basis, the procedure will then be repeated.

Pickup of film and vidpix production in Hollywood is beginning to boost employment in IATSE Film Editors Local 776, which has dipped from its peak of 98% of two months ago to about 90%. Dip, according to biz agent John W. Lehners, was due to layoffs in theatrical film production as studios pruned skeds for March 5 tax deadline. Employment is expected to return to the 98% peak by July 1. Exec stated IATSE five-day week has had little effect on employment. Theatrical films keep men working longer, while in tv pix more workers are being hired due to the shorter week.

New York State's FitzPatrick bill amending the penal law to make it a misdemeanor for a person to mail, express or common-carrier any circular, book, magazine pamphlet, advertisement or notice offering to sell or provide such printed material or still or motion picture represented by such as being "of an obscene, lewd, lascivious or indecent character or devoted to the presentation or description of acts of sexual immorality or sexual perversion" has been signed by Governor Averell Harriman. Effective July 1.

Universal-International is on a strong foreign talent kick, having signed two directors and nine players to either term or multiple picture deals. Thesps come from five countries and include Cornell Borchers (Germany), Marianne Cook (Germany), Delia Scala and Elsa Martinelli (Italy), Ziva Shapir (Israel,) Hillevi Rombin (Sweden), John Bentley (Britain), O. W. Fischer (Germany) and Rossano Brazzi, (Italy). German director Helmut Kaudner and German actor-director Curt Jurgens also have been signed.

In what might be dubbed "Cinerama in CinemaScope," 20th-Fox is packing five of its best C'Scope shorts for theatres in the single-bill areas. Package, running 71 minutes, has been put together by Lem Jones, 20th shorts and newsreel sales topper. Included are subjects like "Las Vegas," "Vesuvius Express" and "The Roger Wagner Choral."

Some 62 of 100 top business executives of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Vancouver reported their films used films industrially or public relationswise in the past three years. Survey was made by Gruneau Research Ltd. for Assn. of Motion Picture Productions & Laboratories of Canada.

Eskal Lund who operates the Glud film house at Viborg, So. Dakota picked up tab for high school senior class party into Omaha last week. Reason: his daughter, Sonja, graduated with honors, 30 A's and two B's over the track.

Ballyhooligans

tion consisted of approving or nixing various facets of a suggested campaign and "making it appear that they are looking out after the interests of the producer." Many breaks, it's claimed, are lost because of the failure of establishing a proper liaison, resulting from the indie pressagent's desire to claim credit for a certain achievement.

The duplication of effort, it's noted, frequently causes a conflict that brings about resentment among the staffers of various media who are approached on the same picture by the film company and the indie publicists. Failure of the flacks to clear their efforts with the film companies often results in unnecessary embarrassing situations, it's asserted.

The film company ballyhooligans claim they've handled hundreds of pictures and are well versed in the type of campaign each picture should receive. The indies answer to the charges is that the major companies tend to slough off product that is not completely studio-made and that the interests of the producer must be protected. The indies further claim that the major company staffs are in a rut and require constant prodding to provide the outsider's picture the VIP treatment. To which the company pub-ad men rebut that their firms are usually financially involved in the projects and are just as concerned as the indies that the picture receive the proper exploitation.

The film company publicists assert that it's getting more and more difficult to handle an indie picture properly because of the interference of the outside press-agents as well as the producers and/or the stars. Many tieups are lost, it's claimed, because of the necessity of obtaining so many approvals. In addition, it's said that the stars and other personalities are not available for tieups, promotions and interviews because they're off making a picture for another company.

Ad-pub execs on the N.Y.-to-L.A. shuttle are doing a burn over their own personal kind of shortage—that of competent publicists needed for current production. Unit men and well-rounded ballyhooligans are in demand more so than they have been in years, largely due to the stepped-up lensing activity both on the Coast and in Eu-own staff members, of course, and run into the scarcity on tub-thumping talent only when they have special assignments, such as on a one-picture basis, to fill.

For the indie producer who works on an on-and-off schedule, it's particularly difficult to nab top-caliber publcists for the reason they're mainly linked with the studios or indies with a constant program.

Another factor is that Hollywood directors, producers, performers, etc., who previously relied upon their studio publicists, now want their own press reps since they've moved into the indie field.

East Germans Flip

tions financed by the U. S. Government.

THhe AFN-Berlin, for instance, has even proved to be real human bridge between the two divided parts of Germany. Mark White, program director of AFN-Berlin, revealed that quite a number of letters are also regularly pouring in from East Germans who wish to dedicate songs to friends or relatives in West Germany. Quite recently a West German girl made even via AFN-Berlin by means of a song a proposal to someone residing in East Germany. The main reason why Germans are so fond of AFN is based on the truly excellent variety of music these stations are able to offer. It's no exaggeration to say that the AFN stations are mostly to blame for the Germans' strong predilection of American music.

East German authorities know about this too, of course. Awhile they have taken much pains to combat this predilection for U.S. music, but to no avail. Now a substantial part of their own programs consists of Anglo-American music. Some Commie officials have even openly admitted that it is a hopeless enterprise to stop the popularity of American music.

As to Mark White, 80% of the daily request letters are written by Germans, while the remainder is divided by Americans and Britishers. He named the following hits as top tunes of the hour: "See You Later, Alligator" (Bill Haley & the Comets), "Zambesi" (Lou Busch), "Poor People of Paris" (Les Baxter), "Rock & Roll Waltz" (Kay Starr) and "Moritat" (Dick Hyman Trio).

NITRO-CELLULOSE STOCK

Subject of Govt. Study—Pamphlets at 20c Each

Washington, May 1.

National Bureau of Standards has just completed a study of the fire hazards of nitro-cellulose motion picture film, which is being offered via the Government Printing Office at 20c per copy.

Although manufacture of this inflammable film was stopped in the U. S. in 1950, reports Bureau of Standards, "large quantities containing important historical or record information have accumulated over the years." The survey also advises on effectiveness of various safety devices.

Seal-Carrying Films Pass N.Y. Censor Intact

New York censor in his fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, stuck unerringly by the standards set by the industry's Production Code. Not a single elimination was ordered in any film carrying the Code seal.

Also, for the second year in a row, the censor board failed to ban any regular 35m theatrical feature pic. It did condemn—in toto—a 16m entry.

Breakdown of censor activities shows that the motion picture division of the State Education Dept. reviewed a total of 1,283 films, a slight drop of six from the prior year. Total licenses issued ran to 1,282 and divvied up 629 for pix carrying the Code seal and 613 that did not. By comparison, the same totals last year ran to 633 with seal and 598 without.

Last year, not a single film submitted to the censor was banned, but two with a seal had eliminations made at the censor's request.

The division reviewed last year a total of 318 American and 467 foreign-made pix. In the former category it asked eliminations in 13 features (all without the seal) against 14 the year before. At the same time, it approved 40 films without eliminations even though they didn't carry the seal. That's a considerably higher percentage than in '54-'55 when only 25 American features without seal were passed exactly as submitted.

At the foreign end, 21 pix with a seal and 420 without it were approved without cuts while eliminations were asked in 26 that didn't have a seal. That's almost the same total as the year before.

In toto, the division approved 136 Hollywood and 517 foreign films without a Code seal. High number of imports sans seal is explained by the fact that many of the indie distribs don't bother applying for one. Of the 653 licensed films without a seal, eliminations were made in 40, of which 14 came from Hollywood and 26 from abroad. Last year, the number of such pix in which cuts were made ran to 50.

In the shorts field, 497 subjects were licensed, including 420 American and 77 foreign. Cuts were asked in one Hollywood short (against nine in 1954-55). There were no eliminations in any of the imported shorts.

Coliseum Pushes B'way Northward

ing or office space on top of an auditorium. Then, with funds from city, state and Federal treasuries, the Tri-Borough Bridge & Tunnel Authority undertook the project ostensibly because it looked self-liquidating. The Authority has leased the Coliseum to the Coliseum Exhibition Corp. headed by Arthur Smadbeck. First year's income from exhibits is expected to go to $17,000,000.

125,000 Visit Opener

The importance of the Coliseum as an attraction is seen by the 500,000 admissions expected for the first week. The three shows on tap at the hall are the International Automobile Show, the Fifth International Philatelic Exhibition and the National Photographic Show. Biggest lure is the stamp display.

The Coliseum has 391,500 sq. ft. of exhibition and meeting space, escalators that can move 40,000 per hour, high speed elevators, bars, meeting rooms, restaurants, refreshment stands and a fringe metropolitan population of 15,000,000 to draw from.

Presently, the major drawback is the absence of suitable commercial hotels in the immediate neighborhood. The nearby Essex and Hampshire House are residential and the nearest commercial hotel is the Park Sheraton, a brisk walk away. The Lincoln Square project is expected to correct that defect.

Other factors contributing to the expected uptown trek of show biz is the move of several years back of the American Broadcasting Co. to its 66th St. location, and the possibility that the N. Y. Giants may relocate outside the expected boundary of the Lincoln Square undertaking, in an oval above the N. Y. Central R.R. tracks. Also, it's expected the video networks may ultimately have to start building from scratch a sufficient amount of facilities to take care of its studio needs. Bulk of the tele facilities were originally designed as radio studios and theatres.

Bellwether of Future

Ever since Martin Beck built his 45th St. playhouse west of 8th Ave., coincidental with the move-over of Madison Square Garden to that artery; and ever since the late W. R. Hearst and his associates started buying property on Columbus Circle, and also in the environs of the Ziegfeld Theatre on 6th Ave. and 54th St., there have been threats of "Broadway moving uptown" and "Times Square shifting eastward."

But it took a vested interest like the Rockefellers to create an entire city-within-a-city project (the Center bearing their name) to achieve the great arc eastward. Similarly, individually, the Garden, Beck, Hearst & Co. couldn't accomplish what the combined Federal, state and city financing of the new Coliseum may now do, including the rehabilitation of the Lincoln Square environs.

The shift of the amusement industry northward is also expected to be accomplished through self-liquidating projects. The operation of the Coliseum and adjoining office building, built by public funds and leased to private interests, is regarded as the modus operandi of all future projects.

The N. Y. Convention and Visitors Bureau, sparked by Bernard F. Gimbel, is now in a position to go after major conventions. With the Lincoln Square project, the bureau will be able to offer a more complete package. In a few years, at present rate of development, it may be possible for the entertainment industry to bypass Times Square.

Presently, the midtown sector is losing a lot of business to the suburbs because of inability to properly maneuver automobiles and paucity of parking space. New building code demands that the construction provide parking facilities for a percentage of the tenants. This is impossible in the existing buildings and the partial remedy of tearing down the ancient buildings provides only an inadequate answer. The Coliseum has accommodations for about 800 cars.

Snafus

VIP invitees, generally given a "Press" identification badge, were particularly harrassed by the Burns "defectives" at the gates who, for some idiotic reason known only to morons who are given a uniform but don't know how to handle their authority, refused easy entrance and exit between exhibits.

With the airconditioning not functioning — a pardonable snafu to most of the invitees—the idea of some of these non quiz kids telling people, with the "press" badge staring them in the face, "I just got my head chewed off, so nobody gets in or out; you'd better go upstairs and come down via the elevators," was particularly irritating.

The daily press, up through Monday, has been stressing the general ineptness of general personnel handling. The explanation of extraordinary b.o. lines is no excuse for this newest monument to Father Knickerbocker having much of the goodwill dissipated by dubious manpower.

Feder's Lifesaver

Sometimes a new showplace can get lucky when basic errors in design are discovered during construction. Otherwise it's possible, a la the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia, to build a legit house without dressingrooms.

Because of the objections of lighting expert Abe Feder, the Coliseum management enlarged its area for a possible portable stage to a respectable size, and made sufficient alterations at the outset to light the area. There are no dressingrooms, per se, but there is room at least for portable quarters.

The Coliseum opened with only one show biz aid, "Dancing Waters," the European fountain display which, as result of the hurried pre-opening planning, had sufficient area and lights to operate, but not enough height for fullest value. It's in the Auto Show area.

Jets Too Zippy

the screen; most planes are departimentalized; sound is a problem (it'd have to come via earphones) since some passengers might want to see the film and others not; weight is an issue, and —last but not least — the flight schedules.

Barnett said Movies En Route was servicing a steadily growing fleet of ships since new vessels were being added all the time. Matson line, for instance, is inaugurating a new California to Australia run with two ships. Norwegian-American line is adding the Bergensfjord to the North Atlantic run.

Movies En Route Inc. not only books American films on the boats, but also foreign features, including British, French, Japanese, Italian and German. Some ships bring a supply of native linguaiers from their home ports. In the instance of the Hollywood pix, they'll frequently play on board day-and-date with the Broadway engagement.

At one time, when the time lapse between the completion of a production and its release wasn't so brief, many films were pre-released aboard ship. Barnett said he had no plans for booking ships on runs not touching U. S. ports because this would involve accumulation of foreign currency and other unnecessary headaches.

Ships have been "very cooperative" in raising the prices of film in recognition of upped production and print costs, Barnett declared.

He said he was still "hot" after the plane business, but, he observed," "it's a little like the mechanical rabbit in front of the greyhound. It's hard to nail down,"

Recalls 'Smartie' Abuse of Ad Films

Wile Theorizes Over-Quoting Theatre Attendance To Chesterfield Killed a Golden Egg

An exhibitor leader has admitted that theatremen themselves killed "the goose that laid the golden egg" in relation to extra revenue from the showing of special advertising subjects. The acknowledgement was made by Robert A. Wile, executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio.

Wile, in his regularly-issued bulletin, recalled that several years ago National Screen Service handled the distribution of a special advertising short made by Chesterfield. Payment to exhibitors was based on attendance. However, so many theatremen exaggerated the attendance that the cost exceeded the cigaret firm's budget. As a consequence, National Screen has since been unable to interest another advertiser to conduct a similar campaign.

In pitching for a revival of the advertising short as an added coin source, Wile suggests a tieup between a major distributor and an advertiser whereby the advertising reel would be distributed in conjunction with a feature picture. Wile feels this system would assure the advertiser an "honest count because otherwise the film company would get more than its share." He points out, too, that a percentage deal would be justified "if the exhibitor got back (from the advertiser) money for every patron who entered." Wile stresses, however, that the exhibitor "would be free to accept or reject the advertising reel at his option alone."

Exhib Now Mayor

Shamrock, Tex., May 1.

Seibert Worley, local theatre owner, has been elected mayor of this town. It was his first entry into politics. He conducted no active campaign for the office.

Worley operates the Texas, Liberty and the Pioneer Drive-In Theatres.

Call Ozoners Bad For Real Estate

Minneapolis, May 1.

After being told by the mayor of a neighboring community that a drive-in theatre would attract "undesirable businesses such as hamburger stands" and following arguments that it would decrease surrounding property values and create a traffic hazard, the suburban Eden Prairie city council voted two to one to refuse an ozoner permit.

The project would have brought the ninth Twin Cities' area outdoor theatre. Three more ozoners are in the development stage.

Otto W. Kobs, who owns and operates the only Eden Prairie four-wall theatre, has been trying unsuccessfully for 15 months to get the green light for the ozoner. M. F. Grill, who sold him the proposed site, told the council he had approval from the metropolitan airports commission and the state highway department for the outdoor theatre, but this availed naught.

THREE JERSEY HOUSES SUE UNDER ANTITRUST

Relatively quiet of late, the antitrust front in the New York metropolitan sector broke out in renewed activity last week when operators of three New Jersey theatres filed as many suits in N. Y. Federal Court. Total damages of $3,360,000 are asked of the eight majors and several theatre circuits.

All three actions charge that the majors conspired with each other and certain affiliated chains to discriminate against the plaintiffs in respect to runs, clearances, rentals and playing conditions among other things.

Kearuth Theatres Corp., operator of the Rivoli Theatre, Rutherford, seeks $1,620,000 contending "illegal" practices of the defendants forced it to play last run product. Named in this suit, aside from the major distribs, are Smith Management Corp., operator of the S-3 Drive-In, Rutherford, and Consolidated Theatres, operator of the Allwood Theatre, Clifton.

S.M.P. Theatre Corp., which operated the Cameo Theatre, Newark, for a "long period of time," wants treble damages from the distrib defendants as well as American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres and Stanley Warner Theatres. Likewise, same defendants are named in the $840,000 action brought by Arithe Inc., operator of the Lincoln Theatre, Arlington-Kearny, N. J.

If 20th Unloads Backlog For Video 'Twill Be For' Cash Needs—Skouras

Decision by 20th-Fox to unload all or parts of its film library to television "will be related to the corporation's cash requirements for its development and healthy expansion," Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy, told stockholders in the annual report last week.

Skouras acknowledged that 20th had received offers to sell, but noted: "It is to the interest of our stockholders and the corporation not to entertain any such offers unless the price offered is more commensurate with the true value of the pictures."

It's known that 20th has split up its library into 10 packages of 50 pictures each and has been huddling on them with tv film distribs. Per-package price is said to run to $2,000,000 plus a percentage of the profits.

"Management at this time can give no indication as to whether we may in the immediate or distant future sell these assets for cash, or distribute our library to television stations through our own distribution organization, or spin-off these assets, as well as other specific assets, such as the corporation's interest in oil and gas operations," the reported stated.

And it added "The management wishes that stockholders realize that no treatment of the specific assets, such as sale or spin-off may ever be consummated.

20th reported drilling its ninth oil well on the studio lot. Current daily production from the wells is in excess of 3,000 barrels of oil and 4,700,000 cubic feet of gas and has a sales value of $8.500. Total gross revenue from production since Feb. 29, 1956, runs to $1,013.650, of which 80% or $810,920 has been applied to drilling and production costs of $3,512,397.

Poe Beefs Up IFE List

Strengthening its release sked for the coming year, IFE Releasing Corp. has acquired six features, including three in color and one in CinemaScope.

According to Seymour Poe, IFE exec v.p., five of the six will be released in English version.

List of pix includes "Roman Tales" (tentative title), in C'Scope and Technicolor (Italian); "Symphony of Love," in Technicolor. This is an Italo version of the life of Franz Schubert; "Forbidden Fruit," starring Fernandel and Francoise Arnaul (French); "Torpedo Zone," in American language; "Con Men," with Broderick Crawford and Richard Basehart, directed by Frederico Fellini; "Fabulous India," Claude Renoir tinter with American commentary.

IFE has just begun to release "Madame Butterfly," Techni version of the Puccini opera, and it has set the CinemaScoper "Lost Continent" for 1956 release along with "Neapolitan Carousel."

A. J. Miller at Pathe Lab

Arthur J. Miller, formerly director of the American Optical Co.'s motion picture printing department, has been named technical director of Pathe Laboratories.

He'll oversee the lab's development and improvement of machines, techniques and processes and will organize and supervise development methods in Pathe's new consumer color film branch.

'OKLAHOMA' HITS NIXON

Summer Run Set In Pittsburgh's Legit House

Pittsburgh, May 1.

After extensive study by engineers confirmed early opinion that Todd A-O process could be installed without the necessity of any physical alternations, Nixon Theatre, local legit house, closed a deal last week to show "Oklahoma" for a summer run. It'll open around June 7 on a road-show basis, with 14 performances a week.

Installation of equipment will begin just as soon as legit season winds up with "Damn Yankees," which begins a fortnight engagement on May 7. Nixon management figures "Oklahoma" will be good for four months.

Nixon got its feet wet with films recently when Samuel Goldwyn's "Guys and Dolls" came in end of January for 10 weeks. It was a lifesaver for the house, since only one legit attraction was available during all that time, the touring "Bus Stop."

Bill Blair stays on as house manager for the "Oklahoma" booking, which means that summer opera company at Pitt Stadium will have to look elsewhere for a company manager, a post Blair has filled for the past two years.

German Prophecy

rep, who's also head of the tv committee of the SPIO, the German industry org, was skeptical re the establishment in N. Y. of an office to promote German pix. "It'd cost at least $250,000 a year if it's to do a decent job," he observed. "But our pictures only gross between $5,000 and $20,000 at the most in the U. S. So it just wouldn't pay." Apart from that, the German industry doesn't have the money to do that kind of job, he explained.

Schellkopf opined that one way of making German films more palatable to U. S. public would be to use American actors in stories acceptable to Americans. He also felt that revival of the UFA would boost the quality of German films.

"German producers in recent years didn't really have a chance to develop stories properly. Everything had to be done fast," he said. "Now, with the emergence of a big company, it can take more time to develop the right properties." Schellkopf didn't think that quantitatively, the German output would go up.

As for tv, he said it would have a bearing on theatre biz in Germany once commercial video was introed, probably by the end of next year. At this moment, German tv isn't on a scale to rate concern with German exhibs.

Typical Off-Typing

of type-casting. Now an independent with an Abbott and Costello picture in the works, Goldstein contends his own experience is the proof of the new thinking.

"When Abbott and Costello were at Universal," says Goldstein, "the studio had an obligation to make a certain number of pictures with them. Every year when the time came around, there would be a studio conference and everyone tried to decide on a story idea for the comics. The general theory seemed to be 'well, they've met Frankenstein—whom can they meet now'."

Goldstein's deal with them, he declares, is a result of the reverse type of thinking. He had a script and decided Abbott and Costello would be good for the key roles. "This time," he says, "there'll be no interruption of the story line while a familiar A&C routine is inserted."

Similarly, Goldstein believes, other performers have suffered from the fact that the studio was "obligated" to deliver a script. If they had been successful in three westerns, the general tendency was to dream up a fourth.

But the emancipation of the slaves is not likely to go as far as anarchy. It will still be a little while before you see Marilyn Monroe in "The Brothers Karamazov."

'Vicarious Adventure' Travelogs Still Cinerama's Best Bet But Medium May Ultimately Do Story

Stanley Warner's decision to launch another travelog-type picture in the Cinerama process is based on a study of the market potential of these films and appraisal of the risks involved in undertaking a story-line project.

Although critics may disparage travel pictures, Stanley reaction is that the pictures cannot be "killed" by reviews. The Cinerama excursions, via the three-strip medium, it's stressed, continue to provide audiences with vicarious adventures that are identified with Cinerama and which the newspapers reviews cannot affect. On the other hand, it's pointed out that a "bad" review of a story picture can cut off patronage immediately. Since the production of a Cinerama film is a difficult and costly undertaking, SW feels it is on safe ground in duplicating its proven formula.

This does not mean that the theatre chain is ruling out story films completely. If the right yarn comes along that is regarded ideally suited for the process, SW will seriously weigh the opportunity.

Lowell Thomas, who produced the current "Seven Wonders of the World," planed out to London last week to begin production on the fourth Cinerama film. He was accompanied by Otto Lang, who will direct. A Cinerama crew and equipment is being flown to New Delhi where the expedition will begin its trek to remote valleys beyond the mountains. Theme of the film will be a search for an earthly paradise.

Councils Vote 'Please Reactivate' Plea To Producers

St. Louis, May 1.

At their annual conference here recently, Federation of Motion Picture Councils delegates unanimously approved a resolution asking the major producers to reissue the children's film library, now recalled because it was on inflammable film.

The library, a collection of children's stories and classics, was originally made available to schools, libraries, etc., gratis by the majors as a public relations gesture and in the hope of creating the film habit early. If the request is taken up by the producers, the whole library will have to be reproduced on acetate film.

Teenage Councils Back Adult Gals' 'Study' of Films

St. Louis, May 1.

Speaking before the annual conference of the Federation of Motion Picture Councels here recently, Mrs. Max M. Williams, president of the federation, said: "The councils believe in self-regulation (in the film industry) because it is the democratic way."

Mrs. Williams spelled out the coming year's program for conference delegates, laying particular stress on the FMPC plan to set up junior motion picture councils among teenagers in junior and senior high schools. With a 100-member junior council already set up in a California school during the past year, the FMPC hopes to spread the plan throughout the country this year. The junior councils, like the adult groups, will focus on study of the motion picture industry, support of exhibitors and promotion of "pictures which reflect the highest possible moral and artistic standards."

33 Try For 20 Posts Within Extras Guild

Hollywood, May 1.

Total of 33 candidates are competing for 20 positions in the annual Screen Extras Guild election now being conducted by mail. Ballots were due to be returned by yesterday (Monday).

All incumbent officers and all but two of the Board of Directors were nominated for re-election and 18 candidates have been nominated independently via petitions.

SEG nomination committee named prexy Richard H. "Dick" Gordon, Franklyn Farnum, Tex Brodus and Paul Bradley, veepees; Kenner G. Kemp, recording secretary; Jeffrey Sayre, treasurer. Independents nominated Jim Reeves and Jack Semple for president; Joe Brooks and Bob Burrows for veepees; Hubert Kerns, recording secretary; and John Rice, treasurer.

Officers will be elected for one year terms. Board positions to be filled include 11 three year posts, one two year post and two one year posts.

No Floating Cinerama

Washington, May 1.

The House of Representatives last week voted a record-breaking $110,000,000 budget for the U. S. Information Agency, and sent the bill to the Senate.

The House passed without change what was recommended by its appropriations committee. This included elimination of a project for a floating Cinerama Theatre. However, Voice of America and the regular motion picture section will get more money, since the budget is $22,633,000 over last year's figure. USIA had requested $25,000,000 more than it received from the House.

The Senate normally increases appropriations, which gives USIA another crack at the Cinerama boat and the extra cash.

Eastman Kodak Earnings Up 15%

Rochester, N. Y., May 1.

First quarter sales and earnings of the Eastman Kodak Co. were better than in any previous first quarter, the company reported last week.

Consolidated sales of the company's U. S. establishments for the 12-week period ended March 18, 1956 were $154,744,604, up 4% over the $149,174,688 for the corresponding 1955 period. Net earnings after taxes for the first quarter were $16,998,185, an increase of 15% over the $14,763,628 earned in the first quarter a year ago. The previous first quarter high for sales and earnings was in 1955.

Quarterly earnings were equal to 92c per share compared with 84c per share for the first quarter of 1955. Company's common shares were increased by payment of a 5% stock dividend in the second quarter of 1955.

Earnings before taxes were $37,426,048, up 13% over the $33,246,604 in the first quarter of 1955.

Dividends declared in the first quarter were $1.50 on preferred and 60c on common shares. They totalled $11,058,841. The balance of net earnings amounted to $5,939,344 and was retained for use in the business.

'SHEEP' U. S. HIT, SO FERNANDEL TO FORE

Following the popular American success of French comic Fernandel in United Motion Picture Organization's "The Sheep Has Five Legs," quite a few Fernandel features are being readied for release here.

Don Getz's Theatrical & Video Corp. has acquired "Ali Baba," filmed in color on North Africa and co-starring Egyptian dancer Samia Gamal. Actioner will be released in an English version.

In a very different vein is "Strange Fruit," recently acquired by IFE Releasing Corp., in which Fernandel has a semi-serious role. Francoise Arnaul costars. This is IFE's first French release.

Another Fernandel feature is due via UMPO, and his "Public Enemy No. 1," made some years back (partly in New York) will be channeled via an indie in coming months. Comic also is current in "The Return of Don Camillo," another IFE entry. Fernandel, star of many of France's classics, to date has been a draw primarily with the carriage trade and is little known to the general American public.

Warners Settles Antitrust Suit in Massachusetts

Boston, May 1.

Two theatre owners settled out of court in their $750,000 antitrust suit against Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. for $70,000 Thursday (26) as the trial before Judge Francis J. W. Ford and jury in Federal Court was in its second day.

Adolphus M. Burroughs and Marguerite P. Ross, owners of the Strand and Premier Theatres in Newburyport, Mass., and the Strand Theatre in Amesbury, Mass., were plaintiffs in the suit.

It was alleged that the plaintiffs had suffered losses due to the alleged monopoly practiced by the defendant in the release of motion pictures.

Fears Political Football Treatment; FCC Stalls Home-Toll TV Issue

Any definitive move re home-toll television by the Federal Communications Commission isn't likely until after the November elections, observers believe.

While last week's hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee tended to again throw the spotlight on the issue, and toll proponents can be expected to do everything possible to keep it there, it's felt that the FCC will sidestep it until the political situation is clarified.

Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, in the RCA brief submitted to the Commission last year, openly called for the pay-as-you-see row to be submitted to the voters via the candidates.

Impression is that the FCC will do everything possible to keep pay-tv from turning into a political football. Both sides have been lobbying actively in Washington, and both have been fairly successful in lining up members of Congress in the pro and con camps. It's considered fairly certain that, even if it's established that the FCC has the right to authorize fee-tv, its foes will raise a host of legal obstacles which may take the whole issue into the courts.

At the annual stockholders meet of Skiatron Electronics & TV Corp. in N. Y. last week, prexy Arthur Levey expressed confidence that a decision on pay-tv was coming, and that it would be favorable. "I believe subscription tv is really imminent," he stated.

Tell proponents were heartened last week by the statement of Gov. Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado to the Senate committee, in which he urged it to prod the FCC on taking action.

'CROOKED COPS' CYCLE

Shurlock Tells Council of 'Deafening' Uproar Resulting

St. Louis, May 1.

Speaking at the annual conference of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils here recently, Production Code Administrator Geoffrey Shurlock told delegates of a case last year where the Code administration got in dutch with the police.

He was referring to a string of five features with crooked cops in the story, all released within a few weeks of each other. Shurlock said, "The uproar was immediate, deafening, and justified." He continued, "with the help of Providence and the Los Angeles Police Department, we managed to convince the Convention of Police Chiefs held in New Orleans last year, that it was a genuinely freak occurrence and would not happen again."

Gobel Cancels 'Cold' Theatre 'P.A.'s for 'Bees'

George Gobel has cancelled theatre appearances which had been scheduled to tie in with openings of his Paramount film, "Birds and the Bees." Comedian made several such stage performances, including four a day at the New York Paramount Theatre April 22.

Now, though, Gobel and his manager, David O'Malley, are taking the position that the comedian and the prop-less and production-less stage workout are not compatible. They feel this is too "cold" a backdrop for his particular brand of humor.

Dropped from the sked are dates in Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington and Denver. Gobel will continue on the hop, doing the publicity rounds for "Bees." But the stage business is now nixed.

Warren of Pittsburgh Sets Albany Area Drive-In

Albany, May 1.

A Pittsburgh area drive-in owner, Joseph Warren, is entering the Albany territory, with the construction of an outdoor theatre on Rt. 50 near Ballston Spa. Berlo Vending has the concessions.

Warren, who operates the Greater Pitsburgh, and the Super 30, at McKeesport, Pa., plans a 1,000-car operation, and the presentation, if possible, of first-run pictures.

To achieve the latter, he would have to bid against Walter Reade Jr. at the Community in Saratoga, and Sardos Smalldone at the Malta Drive-in, below the Spa. Ballston is 15 miles from Saratoga.

Smalldone, who played Columbia and Universal product first-run last season, is currently bidding against Reade for releases of all major companies.

PROTEST TRUCKERS' FEES

Stanley Chain, Allied Oppose Callahan Proposed Increases

Pittsburgh, May 1.

Stanley-Warner here and Allied MPTO of Western Pennsylvania have asked the state Public Utility Commission to reject a proposed increase in film delivery rates by the Exhibitors Service Co. on the ground that it is "unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory."

George F. Callahan Jr., president of Exhibitors Service, was heard first by Alvin J. Ludwig, examiner for the Commission, and representatives of the two protesting groups will get their day shortly.

WIDOW SUES EX-HANDS IN THEATRE ADV. BIZ

Omaha, May 1.

Another film row suit went before the courts here last week when Mrs. Esther L. Green, owner of the Fepco Theater Advertisers, sued three men who worked for her and her late husband.

Charged were Raymond W. McGrath, Richard C. Barkes and Henry J. McGrath, partners now doing business as Top Advertising Service here.

Mrs. Green avers the trio took her company secrets, set up a competing advertising agency and tried to drive her out of business. She asked for an injunction halting the use of materials allegedly taken from Fepco; demanded an accounting of the competing advertising agency's profits, and claimed a share of the profits derived from the use of former Fepco material. In addition, she asked damages of $25,000.

I take this occasion to express my gratitude for the continuing confidence placed in me by my customers and friends in show business.

DIVORCEMENT FOR NETWORKS?

Stanton to Bricker: 'What Monopoly?'

Responding to the "network monopoly" attack by Senator John W. Bricker in his statement over the weekend to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, Frank Stanton, president of CBS Inc., promptly hit back.

Senator Bricker, Stanton said, "has been highly selective in his choice of 'facts.' While CBS does not apologize for its success, Senator Bricker has ignored these basic and easily ascertainable facts which demonstrate how far short of monopoly CBS Television falls:

"1. CBS Television owns less than 1% of all television stations in the country.

"2. The CBS Television Division received only 3.2% of the national advertising dollar, and about 20% of the television advertising dollar.

"3. CBS Television Network programs occupy less than 17% of all broadcasting hours of all stations in the United States.

"4. As is known to even the most casual observer, the field of television networking is one of the most intense competition—not only among the three television networks but between television networking and all other national advertising media—newspapers, radio, magazines, etc. In dealing with profits, Senator Bricker has presented a grossly inaccurate picture."

Stanton accused the legislator of "ignoring" the fact that through the end of 1952, CBS invested $53,100,000 in tv network operations without earning a penny in profits," that profits after taxes of CBS-TV in 1954 were only 4.6% of its sales, compared with the average 6.1% of sales as profits after taxes of "some 3,000 leading United States companies." He estimated that in 1954 the total net profits of seven independently owned affiliates exceeded the net profit of the entire CBS-TV network. Stanton declared that when scheduled hearings on network practices are held this month before the ICC he will establish "that CBS is not monopolistic, that it has no 'economic stranglehold' on the industry and that Senator Bricker's charges are utterly without foundation."

Swezey Hits 'Quick-Buck' Boys Who Debase Radio to Jukebox Level

By GUY LIVINGSTON

Boston, May 1.

The greatest danger to the future of radio is the likelihood that many of us will sell it out too cheaply," Robert D. Swezey, general manager of WDSU (AM and tv) New Orleans, and one of the nation's key broadcasters, told the annual convention of the American Women in Radio and Television here.

"It is discouraging to see how many stations are following listlessly the trend into simple, routine patterns of news and music, all playing over and over again the same few 'pop' tunes and reading the same news, fresh from the tickers, at regular intervals. Many of these stations are, as you know, actually run on mechanical formulate; their service is much more comparable to wired music than the type of service we have always accepted as good radio. It is highly questionable that such stations are fulfilling the minimum obligations of their broadcasting licenses.

"If there is still hope for a full and balanced radio service—and I am convinced that there is—news and music operation should be recognized for what it is—a different, lesser type of service—and some sort of modified or second-class license, with appropriate special conditions and regulations, should be issued to cover it. To continue to grant standard broadcast licenses automatically to such stations is

ABC 'Jim Bowie' In 2-Client Sale

ABC-TV has made its first sale on the dozen new properties it is offering for the fall, Lou Edelman's "Adventures of Jane Bowie."

Web has sold the show to Chesebrough-Pond's and American Chicle for alternate week sponsorship starting September 7 in the Friday 8-8:30 p.m. slot being vacated by "Ozzie & Harriet."

Series, created by Lou Edelman (he's exec producer, Lewis R. Foster producer-directs), stars Scott Forbes as Bowie. Property may undergo a change of name, but that's not set yet. Chicle deal was set via Ted Bates, the Chesebrough through McCann-Erickson. "Ozzie & Harriet" will ride through the summer months in the time, then switching to Sunday at 6 if it can pick up sponsorship.

CBS Radio Spot Sales Names Gordon Hayes

Gordon F. Hayes has been named general manager of CBS Radio Spot Sales, succeeding Wendell Campbell, who has resigned as v.p. in charge of Spot Sales. Hayes, no relation to CBS Radio prez Arthur Hull Hayes, has been for the past eight years Spot Sales western sales manager in Chicago. He moves to N. Y. and reports to J. Kelly Smith, CBS administrative v.p.

Campbell hasn't announced future plans.

NBC-TV's Brace Of ½-Hour Mon. 'Outside' Shows

NBC-TV has officially firmed up its Monday night 8 to 9 programming for next season, with the hour reverting back to 30-minute entries now that Sid Caesar is moving over to Saturday night 9 to 10.

As was indicated in last week's VARIETY, NBC is installing a British-made vidpix series, "Sir Launcelot," in the 8 to 8:30 period, thus hopeful of inviting a switch-over and pickup, from CBS-TV's 7:30 to 8 "Robin Hood" (also British-made) series. Going into the 8:30 to 9 niche will be the new Buddy Hackett comedy series, "Stanley."

Another significant aspect of the new slottings is that in both instances NBC-TV has gone outside the company for the two entries. "Launcelot" was acquired from Official Films. "Stanley" is a Max Liebman-William Morris package, though the network did have a first refusal priority on the property.

— Hughes Back to ABC

Ridgway C. Hughes is rejoining ABC as assistant manager of tv sales development after eight years away from the web. He was with ABC from 1946 to 1948, lastly as director of presentations, before going to Look mag as promotion manager and later to NBC-TV as sales promotion manager.

Hughes will report to Bert Briller, manager of tv sales department.

REVOLUTION ON SHOW CONTROL

By GEORGE ROSEN

One of the legal braintrusters in the current investigation of network practices proffered the observation last week (with an emphasis that suggested he knew whereof he spoke) that the D.C. inquisitors might not only throw the antitrust book at the tv networks and compel them to divorce themselves from program control, but that the divorcement rap might even come to pass before the year is out. He furthered ventured the belief that the networks would fall in line and comply without even offering any resistance.

In such an eventuality, the transformation which would convert the networks into carriers for other people's programs would be so overwhelming and staggering in its implications as to create a revolutionary upheaval akin to the divorcement decree which separated motion picture production from theatre ownership.

It's no secret, of course, that the networks are not taking the current investigations lightly. They're plenty worried over the possible ramifications of the Senatorial sleuthing now in progress, as was evidenced from the "viewing with alarm" resolutions adopted at the ABC-TV and CBS-TV conventions in Chicago a couple weeks back when the webs and their affiliates bypassed all intra-family squabbles in cementing a common front against the Washington brickbats.

And when the Senate Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee hearings resume later this month, the Frank Stantons, the Robert Kintners and the Robert Sarnoffs will be carrying the ball in person in their last stand bid to justify the status quo. [Sen. Bricker's weekend blast at NBC-CBS (see separate story) and CBS prez Frank Stanton's angry retort meanwhile adds fuel to the fire.]

If the networks are stripped of their present program ownership and control, the agencies and the package boys will once more be back in business. Over the past few years, as the networks more and more entrenched themselves as the all-powerful force in program building, the packagers, save for a few diehards, have practically become non-existent. The networks' "outside buys" were the rare exception. (It's only in the past few weeks, with the D.C. heat on, that there's been a reversal of the trend.)

As for the agencies, with the exception of J. Walter Thompson and a couple of others, they've long since thrown in the towel on "house built" shows and, like Young & Rubicam (which for years led the Madison Ave. pack in creating network properties) deferred to the networks as they bought in on web-built shows or acquired outside package. And in the meantime for tv networks, as the undisputed champs in gaining program control, have managed to wean away a major segment of the agencies' creative personnel.

While the package boys, of course, will genuflect to Washing-

SPONSORS SWITCH TO 'MASQUERADE'

"Masquerade Party's" future on ABC-TV is assured for the fall with a multiple sponsor switch that sees Emerson Drug and Lentheric dropping "Chance of a Lifetime" to take on "Party" in the current Saturday at 10 "Chance" spot. Move leaves Knomark Mfg. and Pharmaceuticals Inc. out of the picture, though there's a possibility Knomark may ride with the show through part of the summer.

Program's current Wednesday night 9 o'clock spot is taken over July 4 by Eastman Kodak, which will use reruns of "Screen Directors Playhouse" until fall. Final choice for a fall showcaser by the film outfit hasn't been made.

Bricker in Explosive Blast At CBS, NBC As He Charges 'Economic Stranglehold' on TV Industry

Washington, May 1.

A devastating attack on the CBS and NBC video networks, based on confidential data obtained from the FCC and never before made public, was unloosed yesterday (30) by Sen. John W. Bricker (R-O.). Report was prepared for the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, of which Bricker is ranking Republican member, in connection with its current inquiry into the tv industry.

An outgrowth of the network investigation started by Bricker when he was chairman of the Committee and when former FCC Comr. Robert Jones was its chief counsel, the report declared the two leading tv nets "have an unprecedented economic stranglehold on the nation's television industry."

Effective competition is stifled under this yoke of economic dominance," and "the result is a private monopoly," it added.

The report further charged that "the dollar sign has so obstructed the vision of the networks and large stations as to constitute a violation of the public trust." They have converted the publicly-owned airwaves, it added, to "a money-making grab."

At the behest of Jones, now in private law practice here, the confidential 1954 financial reports of stations to the FCC were obtained. This followed a ruling by the Department of Justice authorizing the Commission to submit the information. In transmitting the report to Committee Chairman Warren E. Magnuson (D.-Wash.), Bricker said he has examined incomplete figures for 1955 and that, "without a single exception," they indicate "an even greater concentration of economic power in the hands of the favored few."

More 'Realistic' Control

On the basis of his findings, Bricker urged that the Committee proceed to consideration of a bill he introduced last year to authorize FCC to directly regulate the networks. He also recommended action by Congress of the FCC to

Ken Murray's Pact

NBC-TV has put Ken Murray under a one-year pact as an exec producer. The network is entitled also to use his services as a performer. Murray will start in the fall, with a format to be worked up meantime on a show emanating from the Coast.

Murray's last major show on tv was launched half a dozen years ago on CBS under Budweiser sponsorship. It was slotted Saturday night as a 60-minute variety stanza.

Fein Exits CBS To Prexy New Setup With Jack Benny

Irving A. Fein has resigned his post as veepee of CBS Radio in charge of sales promotion, advertising and press information. He's returning to the Coast to become president of J & M Productions, newly-formed corporation of which Jack Benny is board chairman. (J & M stands for Jack and Mary.)

Fein came east from Hollywood only a few months ago to take over the CBS Radio post. He'll stay on until July 1 to permit the network to find a successor for the job. Before joining CBS on the Coast seven and a half years ago, Fein was also associated with Benny as director of advertising and publicity for Amusement Enterprises. This was the corporation that Benny sold out to CBS some years back which brought "capital gains" repercussions from Washington.

J & M Productions, which produces the live and film Jack Benny tv shows along with the five "Shower of Stars" full-hour CBS segments, will embark on a major expansion program when Fein assumes the prexy slot and Benny returns from his summer European trip. In addition to functioning in the area of tv, radio and film properties, for which Fein will pact writers, producers and directors, Benny wants to produce a Broadway play in the fall. This will be one of the first items on the J & M agenda, says Fein.

NBC-TV, Goldstein Dicker Tinters With Portugal Background

Hollywood, May 1.

A deal to film a tint film series late this year in Portugal has been made by Robert Goldstein and NBC-TV, with the pirate story footage also to serve as the basis for at least one theatrical feature.

Don Martin is now scripting three pilots for the series and Goldstein plans to integrate them, with bridges, into a theatrical pic. The feature would be released initially in Europe and be running when the series begins telecasting here. Under the terms of the deal, NBC-TV shares in the proceeds of the European feature release, as well as the telepix. Also under discussion is the U. S. release of the feature version.

FREDERICKS TO WDSU

Chicago, May 1.

Windy City deejay Hal Fredericks has signed on as program director at WDSU, New Orleans.

Fredericks will also work a couple of the station's platter shows.

'Ruggles of Red Gap' as NBC Spec

"Ruggles of Red Gap," the novel about the English butler in a western mining town by Harry Leon Wilson, has been set as an NBC spectacular on "Producers' Showcase" for next fall. Novel has been the subject of three motion picture versions, but this would be its first television rendition. Deal was set with NBC by Perry Leff of the Frank Cooper agency, repping Harry Leon Wilson Jr., with the same agency's Charles Peck now in London talking to Alec Guinness about his doing the lead on the show. Date hasn't been set yet.

Cooper office is also in negotiation with NBC over a two-pronged tv-legit deal on "If I Were Queen," a musical with book by Polan Banks and William Gaxton (the actor) and music and lyrics by J. Fred Coots and Ogden Nash. Talks are centered about NBC's financing the Broadway production in return for a hunk of the play plus tv rights, a la CBS and "My Fair Lady." Show is based on the premise that George Washington accepted the crown when it was offered him and the U. S. is a kingdom, with the femme lead one of his descendants.

Also in the spec vein, the Cooper office set the deal on the sale of the Arnie Rosen-Coleman Jacoby original, "The Bachelor," to which Steve Allen is setting music and lyrics and for which Hal March will play the lead. This one's already set for Sunday night, July 15, in the 7:30-9 spot.

Frank Cooper Agency's Gee Whiz Calendar of Upcoming TV Events

Frank Cooper agency rolled into high gear the past week with a variety of television deals that included two spectaculars, three new series, expansion of its staff, a move into new and larger offices, a dozen-odd writer deals and the inking of a half-dozen new clients. Apart from the deals for spectaculars ("Ruggles of Red Gap" and "The Bachelor"), the setting of a Ring Lardner property and key writer shifts covered in separate stories, the agency firmed up its new "Stand Up and Be Counted" daytimer on CBS-TV and is looking to clear time for "First Nighter," converted into a filmed tv property.

"Counted," an audience-participationer evolved by Cooper N. Y. topper Sy Fisher, is set for a co-op ride in the 1:10 to 1:30 p.m. CBS-TV slot starting May 28. Though it's the network's first co-op offering in the daytime entertainment vein (show replaces the Jack Paar variety stanza), several national sponsors are interested via earlier screenings by the office. Among these are Hazel Bishop, which will take a daytime ride if CBS-TV will also let it sponsor the show at night once-a-week, and Campana. Robert Paige will host the show. Meanwhile Cooper is developing another audience-participationer for CBS, "Holiday at Home."

"First Nighter," the old radio property which Cooper reps via an arrangement with Campana, is being filmed under a coproduction deal with Screen Gems, with Pall Mall and Cheseborough-Pond's already having placed an order and attempting to clear time on NBC-TV. At the same time, Helene Curtiss is trying its luck at clearing a CBS spot, though the first two have the prior option. Hugh Marlowe is permanent host (the "first nighter") with Joseph Cotten and Raymond Burr starring in the piliot and Kim Novak as guest.

On Writer Front

On the writer front, Cooper set a multiplicity of deals. Phil Reisman Jr., has been signed by Dave Susskind's Talent Associates to do the treatment and screenplay for a feature film version of "Five in Judgment," originally produced on TA's "Appointment With Adventure." Also being dickered for Reisman is a multiple-script deal for TA's "Armstrong Circle Theatre." Stan Drebin and Mike Morris were set to do the May 8 Martha Raye script on NBC, while Harvey Orkin (out of the Phil Silvers scripting stable) will write a motion picture screenplay for Alan Funt for an indie production based on his "Candid Camera."

Lawrence Klee, the creator of "Man Against Crime" and one of the original "Lineup" scripters, was set to develop the pilot script of "Confessions of a Scoundrel" for Walt Framer. Property is based on the autobiog of Guido Orlando, international publicitst. Harold Jack Bloom, vet screenwriter, has

Coe's New Deal —& Very Flexible

Whether Fred Coe will be assigned as producer of one or more spec series on NBC-TV next season has not yet been worked out. Coe's contract, which has just been renewed by the network, is a flexible one, permitting him to freelance in legit and motion pictures. He may work on one big-big skein, part of such a series, or tackle a set number of outsize shows on a pair of separate one-a-month programs—that's how liquid the situation is at this pre-1956-57 stage.

Also not determined at this point is whether Coe will be tapped for Kaiser Aluminum's Tuesday night dramatic showcaser replacing the Coe-produced "Playwrights 56" which has been called by Pontiac. The Kaiser string of plays will be launched July 3, allowing plenty of time to work up producer and other credits. It's known that Coe has long been interested in resuming his chore on 90-minute tinters which he incepted with "Producers' Showcase" from which he was later separated.

With Ham Shea Gone, Tex McCrary Resuming Former WRCA Status

Tex McCrary, having just quit WABD, N. Y., is returning to his former exclusive WRCA-AM & TV status under the persuasion of new chieftain of the NBC flags, Tom McFadden. McCrary, who with his wife Jinx Falkenburg has regularly maintained a WRCA radio strip, switched several months ago to a WABD video slot when Ham Shea was still in command of the NBC N. Y. keys. Switch to WABD was occasioned by Shea's trimming of the Tex & Jinx segs.

McCrary will rejoin his spouse on "Jinx's Diary," being moved from 2:30 to 2 p.m., since former slot goes coaxial. On same date, "Sky's the Limit" will be replaced at 1:30 by Richard Willis.

Last week McCrary and Miss Falkenburg celebrated their 10th anniversary on WRCA. To fill up the 7:15 to 7:25 p.m. cross-the-board vacancy made by McCrary in ankling WABD, that station's boss Ted Cott is sticking up-to-minute films of the daily horse races in from 7:15 to 7:30, integrating the Marty Glickman five-minute sports show into the whole. Films, lensed by Jamaica track officials, are the ones now being displayed on WABD. Station will also carry verbal reports on race results elsewhere and on baseball scores, with Glickman doing Monday-Wednesday-Friday chores and Chris Schenkel doing the remaining two weekdays.

Bergen's 20th Anni. Brings Out Industry, But Where Was Vallee?

By LEONARD TRAUBE

It's a long way from Rudy Vallee's Fleischmann's Yeast Hour on NBC (via WEAF, N. Y., now WRCA after long tenure as WNBC) to 55 minutes Sunday nights on the CBS network. Edgar Bergen might never have made the 20th anniversary grade as an amplitude modulationer had not Vallee crystal-balled the hot potentialities of a mere unseen ventriloquist making with the quips, by courtesy of Charlie McCarthy, over the kilocycles. Vallee, hardly mentioned, was the missing hero of the tribute to Bergen last week (26) by the Radio and Television Executives Society at New York's Roosevelt Hotel.

Someone missed the boat in not inviting Vallee over since he's in town at Le Cupidon nitery. Some 525 showed up—always room for one more in the VIP section composed of radio-tv brass from CBS and rival networks plus a quota of bigtime comics come to pay obeisance to a man who's always given proper credit to his needler (not the U. S. senator) as a key part of the act.

There was Jack Benny, only two days' previously a guest of the fourth estate Banshees org as the newspaper pubs and editors were gathering in convention at the Waldorf-Astoria. Benny almost made it sound like Phil Silvers was the man of the hour by filling most of his stint with sneers and leers re the Sgt. Bilko of the CBS telepix skein. He saluted Silvers as "America's greatest tv star—of this year" and Bergen as "the last of the red hot radio stars."

Benny played it straight in accenting his Banshees appearance as his reason for being in town, causing a few eyebrows to raise at this slip in protocol in relation to the honored guest of the RTES shindig. He also tried to put up the paper for radio, while regret-

4 TV, 11 Radio Stations Too Many For Mpls.? It's Survival of Fittest

By LES REES

Minneapolis, May 1.

Recent numerous tv and radio stations' ownership changes here are being interpreted in some local broadcasting circles as indicative that the video and audio going has been becoming increasingly tough, the Twin Cities are unable to support profitably four tv and 11 commercial radio stations and the likelihood is the survival of the fittest impends.

At the same time, however, it's pointed out that ownership transfers in most instances have involved substantial amounts of money.

As part of its $17,000,000 package deal involving the purchase of several tv stations, the Crowell-Collier Publishing Co. paid $4,500,000 for independent WTCN-TV and Radio, Twin Cities' ABC outlets, it was announced by representatives of Harry Bitner, Jr., president of the operation.

This deal came closely on the heels of two other important purchases. It's only a few weeks since KEYD-TV here, two-year-old independent station sans any network affiliation, was sold by its local owners for $1,500,000 to a Pittsburgh, Pa., group.

And only several months ago radio station WDGY here brought a reported $175,000 when the Storz interests acquired it from its local owners. Prior thereto, radio stations WLOL and WMIN had changed hands, with $250,000 reported as the former's purchase price and $100,000 the latter's. Previously, WMIN-TV had been absorbed entirely by WTCN-TV for an estimated $1,000,000 after having been an operation with the two sharing the same channel.

The new WDGY owners immediately severed its Mutual connection and are confining its programming to disk jockey music and news. They also inaugurated cash giveaways, precipitating a radio station cash giveaway war. That war is still in progress.

It's also now announced that localites have a deal pending for

Nabisco Renews On 'Rin Tin' But Still Stalls on ABC Slot

While National Biscuit Co. has renewed Screen Gems' "Rin Tin Tin" series for a third year, it has not yet decided on whether to renew its ABC-TV Friday night slotting on the show. Nabisco is listening to some hard-sell pitches from NBC-TV to move the series over to Rockefeller Plaza in an early evening Saturday time.

Same thing happened a year ago, but then it was CBS-TV which waved the blandishments before Nabisco. At that time, Columbia offered one of its 7:30 kidstrip settings, but Nabisco, satisfied with its 30-plus ratings on ABC, listened and then nixed the invite. ABC is hopeful that it will do a repeat in this case, and is now stressing the fact that an "adult western," the "Jim Bowie" adventure show, is in at 8 p.m., following "Rin Tin," suggesting a possible increase in audience from the early 8 p.m. diallers.

Levant's Burn On Politico Gag Rule

Hollywood, May 1.

Oscar Levant, "Words About Music" star, said KNX-CBS legal department clamped a directive or gag rule on him, prohibiting any quips about politics. It so infuriated him when handed the directive Friday (27) that he quit show, but returned for Saturday's stanza because he "felt sorry for them (the show's owners) and had to go on."

Levant, who checks in at Metro as assistant to producer Arthur Freed, said CBS advised him it felt even in form of gags anything he says on politics might influence voters in the June 5 primaries, so they were banning such mention. Directive was addressed to the show but was obviously aimed at Levant, who has been pulling political gags every week.

Levant, openly for Adlai Stevenson, says he can understand why station doesn't want him to take a stand for or against the politico, and is willing to go along with that, but can't understand the complete taboo on political subjects.

Levant says he's not sure he's continuing with the show in view of the ban.

European TV In One Fell Swoop

Romney Wheeler Penetrates Video Precincts This Side of Iron Curtain And Comes Up With Some Updated Revealing Data

Perhaps the most penetrating survey of European television to date has been completed by Romney Wheeler, London director of NBC. Tagged "Television in Europe," it treats of every country this side of the Iron Curtain with the exception of Italy, which the network's Merrill Mueller will embody in a separate report emanating from the Rome Bureau, and Norway, Sweden, Finland, Austria, Spain and Portugal, where the medium is either experimental or too limited to be of importance currently.

Survey was undertaken in February and is updated to April 10, embracing nine countries with regular tv service and several others which have begun transmissions "on a modest, experimental basis." As of April 1, the set count stood at 1,250,000 in those countries, concentrated largely in Western Germany (350,000), France (350,000) and Italy (300,000). Estimate is that by the start of next year, the number will expand to 2,000,000; by 1958 to 4,000,000 on the continent, west of the Iron Curtain. In England, the set count is over 6,000,000 and the rate of increase measured at about 1,000,000 per year.

Programming varies from 10 hours weekly in Denmark up to 44 hours in France. Vast majority of setowners are able to receive only one program—the national tv service of their particular country. Wheeler says in this connection that this may be a straight government service, with civil service employees (as in France and Denmark), a quasi-government setup (as in Belgium), or public corporations, similar to the BBC (as exists in Switzerland, Germany and elsewhere).

Commercial tv has had a slow start, so far Wheeler observes. Such stations are operating in Luxembourg, Saarbrucken and Monte Carlo; and it appears likely, says Wheeler, that commercial tv on the British pattern may come into being in Holland. Germany, also, has some prospect of a competitive commercial service, but so far in Europe there has only been "a most modest beginning."

Eurovision

Described as "probably the most important influence in European tv, and the thing that is motivating much of its expansion," is Eurovision, the exchange of programs by members of the European Broadcasting Union. A regular network now links all the countries in Western Europe which have fulltime services. Wheeler notes that "fantastic obstacles" have had to be overcome to get Eurovision working. There was the problem of microwave links and switching facilities, which are still limited in number. Problem No. 2 was that of differing standards of definition, and conversions from one to the other. Britain, for example, operates on 405 lines; France on 819 lines; and all other European countries on 625 lines. There is the continuing problem of programming, against restrictions imposed by various unions, notably the musicians and Equity (actors).

"Nevertheless, it has been possible recently for a full length opera to be televised on Eurovision from Hamburg, for the Winter Olympics at Cortina to be televised from Italy, and for special pickups to be arranged for various countries by other tv services as, for example, a Saturday night visit by the BBC to several Antwerp night clubs, which was done for the BBC by the Belgian TV service, although the program was not broadcast in Belgium," Wheeler declares.

Language

Another problem is language. In Switzerland, 4,000,000 people are divided by three different tongues, German, French and Italian, and Belgian has two languages, French and Flemish. It's observed that with few exceptions, Eurioviewers insist on having programs in their own language, and hence foreign films must in most cases be dubbed in French and/or German if they are to be used by European teleservices. Subtitling is not regarded as satisfactory except in Holland and in the Flemish parts of Belgium, where audiences have been conditioned to this by subtitling of American and British films.

Dubbing

Survey includes costs of lip-sync dubbing, a 26-minute U. S. film, for example, ranging from $1,000 to $1,400 in French and from $1,400 to $2,300 in German, depending on size of cast and quality of work. Tele-Luxemburg, with large studios in Paris, claims that by June of this year it may be in a position to dub a film into Gallic for around $750, the lowest figure quoted by anyone on the Continent. Wheeler states that dubbing in a foreign language should invariably be done in the country concerned. He cites as "the worst examples" of ineptness some U.S. telefilms dubbed into German at a studio in Mexico, using German refugees. The result—to German ears—was "ludicrous, since members of the same family turned up speaking totally different dialects."

'National Tastes'

Wheeler has this to say on "national tastes":

"Whether dubbing is worthwhile on a dollar-and-cents basis cannot be answered easily. Theoretically, a film series dubbed into French should be salable not only in France but in Switzerland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Monte Carlo and in French-speaking Canada. But this assumes that the individual programming executives in each country will react in the same way to any given series. Unhap-

THE FUNNIER THE MONEYER

JWT's 'This Is My Own'

It's interesting to note, in connection with Ford's acquisition of Tennessee Ernie Ford as a nighttime entry for next season, that while Ford the personality is regarded as an NBC "property," the show will be produced by the J. Walter Thompson agency rather than the network.

JWT, perhaps more than any other agency in the business, prides itself on house-controlled and house-supervised properties, as witness the full page ads appearing in today's (Wed.) consumer and trade press highlighting the JWT production auspices on Kraft TV Theatre's "Night to Remember" being repeated via kinescope tonight. It's one of the few times on record that an agency has gone to such pains (and expense) in carrying the torch on behalf of agency-produced shows.

Chi WGN: 'Backyard Station'

Aims for Closer Community Identification in New Post-Mutual Status

Chicago, May 1.

WGN, gearing itself for a full-fledged hometown identification now that the decision has been made to end its longtime association with Mutual, is setting a series of "Good Neighbor" bashes around the Windy City metropolitan area that could well set the pattern for a showmanship revival in local radio circles.

Initial "WGN Big 10 Party" neighborhood shindig will be held May 31 in conjunction with the Back of the Yards Council. The 90-minute WGN show, featuring station personalities, visiting recording artists and a showcasing of fledgling talent from the Back of the Yards area, will be held at the 1,260-seat Maria High School auditorium. An hour of the "Party" will be aired. Main purpose, however, is to give the WGN talent roster an opportunity to "meet the people" as a move to further integrate the Chicago Tribune-owned station into the community.

Project is under the overall supervision of WGN program manager Bruce Dennis with his assistant Win Jolly as exec producer. If the parties prove as successful as expected this season, it's likely the schedule will be stepped up next year to encompass the suburbs.

Dennis sums up the thinking thusly: "Our WGN Big 10 Parties are designed to point out dramatically that WGN, today, has a new sound. We feel the most effective way to get that message across in the metropolitan area is to go right

Liebman & Co. TV Defections

The defections from the Max Liebman camp at NBC-TV continued last week when the producer - director's two principal writers, Bill Friedberg and Neil Simon, turned in their resignations. Friedberg is rejoining his ex-collaborator, at Hiken, to develop their old radio series, "Magnificent Montague" for tv, while Simon is moving over to the Sid Caesar show next season. The Hiken-Friedberg teamup extends back to the days when they were writing the Milton Berle radio show. Their last joint effort was the Martha Raye tv show a couple seasons back before Friedberg joined Liebman.

Bowout of the Friedberg-Simon combo follows by a week the resignation of Dave Tebet from Max Liebman Productions (he was public relations rep and had a free-wheeling status as Liebman's Man Friday). Tebet checked in at NBC-TV this week as a general programming exec to become a key aide to Nat Wolff, head of tv programming planning.

While Liebman will continue to do some Sunday specs next season, his major concentration will be on the new half-hour Buddy Hackett situation comedy, "Stanley," for which Friedberg and Simon had scripted the pilot.

Pearson Pharmacal As Dunninger's Co-Sponsor

ABC-TV has latched onto an alternate sponsor to American Tobacco to share the Dunninger show Wednesday nights through the summer. It's Pearson Pharmacal Co., which has been represented on the network in the past via the "Afternoon Film Festival." Pearson pact is for 32 weeks, which takes it into January in the 8:30-9 p.m. time slot. Sponsors are awaiting reaction to the Dunninger show during the summer to see whether they continue it through the fall or take on a replacement.

Deal was set via Donahue & Coe.

Bolger's 16 Shows As NBC Finalizes Tues. TV Lineup

NBC-TV has resolved its Tuesday night 8 to 9 niche next season all the way down the line by signing Ray Bolger to star in "Washington Square," live series originating in New York. He'll appear in 16, virtually skip-week. The network had previously earmarked 20 programs in the slot for the "Chevy Show" in a rotation of Dinah Shore, Bob Hope and other names, plus the separately formatted Martin & Lewis, skedded for a foursome. The Bolger shows reportedly are budgeted at $100,000 apiece.

Thus 40 segments are accounted for to round out the 1956-57 span. Competitively, these stack up against the plans of CBS-TV, with Phil Silvers staying put at 8 o'clock and the new Herb Shriner show 8:30 to 9:30. ("Navy Log" gets dumped from the 8:30 spot; the "Joe & Mabel" vidpixer is slated for a summer ride at 9 p.m. starting in June, although a click will bring it up for consideration in another time since the Shriner show gets the franchise in the fall.)

"Washington Square" is from the N.Y. Greenwich Village area of that name, fronting Bolger as impresario of a "theatrical community"—Greenwich Village Inn, Washington Square Playhouse, Washington Square Park, etc. Bolger, returning to tv as a regular, will serve as host to the names who played the Greenwich Village Inn, longtime nitery converted a few years ago to an off-Broadway house, Circle-in-the-Square, and also introduce new talent. William A. Bacher, film and tv producer, is bringing in the series in conjunction with the William Morris office.

Bolger will be paired with a femme foil. The name of Nanette Fabray, who's departing the Sid Caesar ranks, has been mentioned in this connection, but it's anticipated that the role will go to Elaine Stritch, last seen on Broadway in "Bus Stop." Writers already set are understood to include Stephen Longstreet and Milton Geiger.

VIDEO WRITERS' OWNERSHIP YEN

Everybody now wants to "make like Nat Hiken." The scripting boys with the flair for yocking it up in tv have got that "we gotta own a piece of the show" bug. But unlike Hiken, whose status as creator of Sgt. Bilko gives him an annuity in perpetuity for the lifetime of the Phil Silvers show and spilling over into merchandising and all residual incomes, the fever has gripped even those who don't enjoy the privilege of a "created by" tagline. All of which is creating something of a situation in tv programming.

The revelation that Bill Friedberg and Neil Simon have pulled up stakes and deserted the Max Liebman camp, not only on the tv specs but on the upcoming Liebman-produced half-hour situation comedy starring Buddy Hackett, for which they scripted the pilot, is postscripted by the report that their demand for a piece of the show was rejected. The new series, titled "Stanley," is slated for the Monday night 8:30 period next season and all and sundry around NBC who have seen it are bullish on its potential as a click entry. But while Friedberg and Simon feel that they're as much responsible as anyone for the show's high laugh quotient, the property is owned by Liebman and the William Morris office. Apparently that's the way they want to keep it.

Meanwhile from the Coast come reports that Hal Kanter plans to take a powder on the George Gobel Saturday night show for the selfsame reason that the "Gomalco Productions" ownership won't include him. It's readily conceded in the trade that Kanter has been a major factor in the show's success thus far and apparently he, too, figures that he rates something better than a tax-drained weekly stipend.

Then there's the case of Ed Simmons and Norman Lear, who several weeks back pulled out as Martha Raye's scripters and headed for the Coast to stake a claim in a tv property which will permit them to enjoy the same ownership status as Hiken.

Milt Josefsberg (ex-Jack Benny scripter) who for years has toiled in the salary-only vineyards of radio and television, has rectified the situation by creating the new Jack Carson-Marie Wilson "Johnny Came Lately" situation comedy series which is high on the NBC list of tv potentials.

Robt. Herridge's Dual 'Studio 1' Assignment As Producer-Writer

Robert Herrige has taken on the tall order of producing and writing all 13 shows in the summer edition of Westinghouse's "Studio One" on CBS-TV. But even before the hotweather preem, Herridge already has been earmarked to tackle the first 10 programs of the 1956-57 season, with Felix Jackson returning from his Hollywood pic stint to bring in the succeeding 10. After that, Herridge and Jackson will alternate stanzas to finish out the season's string.

Characteristically, Herridge's first summer show will be "Flight," John Steinbeck short story originally done by Herridge last summer on the WCBS-TV (N. Y.) "Camera Three," now a network entry under the CBS flagship's supervision. Steinbeck turned "Flight" over to "Camera Three" for free on the basis that the show would "do a good job" with it. It's about a teenage Mexican who kills a stranger and has to flee. It had a two-man cast of Gerald Sarracini as the kid and John Drainie as narrator in the guise of Steinbeck. Since the printed story contains many other characters, "Flight" will amount to a whole new adaptation for the Westinghouse kickoff this summer.

Ford Buys Ford (Tennessee), Renews 'Jubilee' in Finalizing TV Plans

Ford Division of the Ford Motor Co., via J. Walter Thompson agency, has firmed up a three-show tv parlay for next season, representing a one-show expansion plus renewals on the division's current two-network entries, the CBS-TV "Ford Star Jubilee" one-a-month specs and the "Ford Theatre" telefilm series on NBC-TV.

Third show will be a half-hour Tennessee Ernie Ford half-hour nighttime entry on NBC. This is slated for the Thursday night 9:30 period, which means that "Ford Theatre" will have to vacate the slot. Negotiations are now under way to find a new NBC-TV time berth for the latter show. Acquisition of the Ford (Tennessee) program will mark the first nighttime showcasing for the NBC personality, who until now has held down a noontime slot and is due to be shifted to 2:30. Format has yet to be resolved for his nighttime show.

There was some doubt as to Ford renewing on the CBS-TV controlled "Jubilee" spec series but in balancing the missouts with the hits, it's reported that the motor company's enthusiasm over the Judy Garland initial entry and "Caine Mutiny Court Martial" was a major factor in the decision to ride with the series next season. CBS wasn't particularly concerned either way since there was a reported waiting line among prospective clients.

Ford Division is distinct and separate from the parent Ford Motor Co. (out of the Kenyon & Eckhardt house) which breaks down into the Lincoln-Mercury Division (sponsors of Ed Sullivan) and JWT's Ford Division. The parent company is dropping its co-sponsorship of the NBC-TV "Producers Showcase" Monday night spec series but has thus far made no future commitments.

Ford Division's purchase of Tennessee Ernie Ford, incidentally, represents a bid for a new consumer audience, since the show will be slanted for the younger element, whereas both "Jubilee" and "Ford Theatre" are geared more for adult viewing.

RING LARDNER'S 'AL' SERIES HEADS FOR TV

Looks like the works of the late Ring Lardner may make their way into television after all. NBC-TV has purchased rights to "You Know Me, Al," his book of baseball stories, for a projected film series that would be produced on the Coast for airing in the fall of 1957. Deal was set by Fisher, head of the N. Y. office of the Frank Cooper agency, in behalf of the Lardner estate.

Property is being whipped into shape on a pre-production basis by Frank Cleaver, NBC program exec on the Coast, who is riding herd on the project until it's assigned to a producer. Cooper office has had the Lardner properties up for grabs for some time, but apparently it took the success of "Damn Yankees" to get the networks over their fear of baseball stories.

Shriner Now Set For Tues. Nite In CBS-TV Revamp

Although the show has yet to be sold, the full hour Herb Shriner variety show being developed by CBS-TV is now slated for a Tuesday night 8:30 to 9:30 berthing next season. This will mean the exiting or shifting of the 8:30 "Navy Log" show and Pharmaceuticals' "Joe & Mabel" summer entry at 9. Tuesday night lineup will thus read: "Name That Tune" at 7:30; Phil Silvers at 8; Herb Shriner 8:30 to 9:30, Red Skelton 9:30 to 10; "$64,000 Question" 10 to 10:30 and the Edgar Bergen quizzer 10:30 to 11.

Sunday and Monday nights stay the same. Wednesday poses something of a problem now that Arthur Godfrey vacates the 8 to 9 slot. New show has not yet been set. Also, with General Electric still stalling on whether to renew the "20th Fox Hour," the 10 to 11 segments are still very much in the iffy stage.

Only major change Thursday is the 9:30 to 11 "Playhouse 90" installation. Friday at 8 finds "West Point Story" going in for General Foods but successor show to "Our Miss Brooks" at 8:30 has to be chosen.

Saturday also brings up some problems. With "Stage Show" going out of the 8:30 to 9 period, the new entry for nestle has yet to be selected. The 9 to 9:30 period, currently represented by "Two for the Money," has also to be resolved. The new Jeannie Carson show has been bought by Procter & Gamble for 9:30 to 10.

'Buccaneer' Is Set By Sylvania as Time Runs Out on 'Beat Clock'

Sylvania has firmed up the made-in-England "The Buccaneer" series as its replacement for the longrunning "Beat the Clock" comes the fall. Deal was set last week by Official Films, which reps the property, produced by Hannah Weinstein's Sapphire Productions. Deal gives Official a trio of network exposures on Sapphire properties, what with the renewal of "Robin Hood" on CBS and NBC's purchase of the "Sir Launcelot" for a Monday-at-8 slotting in the fall.

"Buccaneer," series based on the adventures of a privateer in the service of the crown, goes into "Clock's" Saturday 7:30 position in late September or early October, with "Clock" probably continuing through the summer. J. Walter Thompson was the agency.

Pharmaceuticals' 3 In a Row at 9

There's no doubt about it — Pharmaceuticals can't be bought out of the 9 o'clock Tuesday night slot on CBS-TV, and that goes for the agency with which it's been going steady, Ed Kletter.

When "Meet Millie" was moved out in March after its second turn on the network, the drug house went for "Guy Lombardo's Diamond Jubilee." With that maestro-headed musical quizzer not causing any paeans to fly from the typewriters of the critics, CBS had been pitching up the always-a-bridesmaid "Joe & Mabel" telefilm package at Pharmaceuticals, with result that the sponsor will take a hot weather lease on the Alex Gottlieb-produced comedy stanza, headed by Nita Talbot and Larry Blyden, starting June 19. That will make three different shows within three months for the underwriter in the same slot — probably an unprecedented kind of loyalty in tv.

The drug outfit has been showconstant in the case of Ted Mack's "Amateur Hour." No matter where that one goes, Pharmaceut goes with it.

Off-Wing Biz

WAAT, Newark radio indie, signed the New Jersey Homing Pigeon Concourse Assn. for the second season as a sponsor.

Bankroller has one spot every Sabbath morning to tell bird lovers just when homing pigeons are going to be released in the Jersey area.

RCA Stockholders Heed Sarnoff's Objections to Anti-Red Job Plan

A resolution aimed at getting the Radio Corp. of America in on the anti-Communist issue as far as employment is concerned was tabled by shareholders in New York yesterday (Tues.) at the 37th annual meeting of stockholders.

After the long resolution had been presented to a record 1,000 stockholders at NBC Studio 8-H, board chairman David Sarnoff read a written reply stating why its adoption would be "ill-advised." He said it would not only be unworkable but "reflect on the anti-Communist record of RCA." He said that the company has an adequate security force, that under the resolution, innocent persons would be robbed of employment or would be discharged and that the management would be saddled "with an investigative apparatus requiring a considerable number of additional employees and facilities."

Gen. Sarnoff also asserted that it would "impose tasks upon RCA which are properly those of public security and law enforcement agencies" and that it would raise "serious labor relations problems."

After Gen. Sarnoff spoke, the shareholders put in for tabling, equivalent to killing the resolution.

The anti-Commie issue came toward the end of the longest annual session in RCA history, three hours, ending at nearly 2 p.m. Although there were the usual needlings by stockholder representatives, the biggest news was that of revenues during the first quarter of this year, a record $274,848,000, an increase of $18,543,000, or 7%, over the first three months of 1955. Profits before taxes were $25,395,000, up $310,000, and the net after taxes, $12,727,000, compared with last year's $12,568,000 for the first quarter, up $159,000. Earnings per common share for the segment were 85c, against 84c last year. The quarter's gross is again at a billion dollar gait, that dream figure having been reached for the first time during 1955.

After considerable wrangling, chairman Sarnoff was overwhelmingly voted a stock option in connection with retention of his services for 10 more years. He would buy stock above the prevailing market price, or pay about $50. Two other resolutions were defeated, for election of directors annually instead of staggered as at present, and a limitation of aggregate compensation to any executive officer in any one year to $200,000 or not more than 100% of his base pay, whichever is lower. The defeats represented victories for management.

O'Friel's New Status

Paul O'Friel is joining Westinghouse Broadcasting Company as an exec, temporarily serving as No. 2 man to Joseph Schertler, industrial relations boss for the company. O'Friel lately left DuMont Broadcasting Corp., where for three years he handled all local (WABD) and DuMont network labor relations.

A lawyer, O'Friel left DuMont when his work diminished after the network failed. O'Friel is not the first DuMont exec to join the top WBC ranks. Chris Witting, who now is veep in charge of Westinghouse consumer product, came over from DuMont to head up WBC. When he switched he turned the WBC helm over to another ex-DuMonter Don McGannon. It was McGannon who pacted O'Friel.

Zenith Still Thinks Color 'Premature'

Chicago, May 1.

Although its Rauland tubemaking subsidiary has developed a 22-inch rectangular color tube, Zenith Radio has no immediate plans to enter the tint sweepstakes. Prexy Eugene F. McDonald Jr. told the annual stockholders' meeting last week that he believes color is "premature" and that the firm won't market its sets this year unless forced to by the competition.

"Manufacturers are cutting prices and taking a loss on every color set sold," McDonald declared.

While unit tv set sales the first quarter were the highest in the company's history, dollar volume was off slightly. Firm netted $1,831,165, or $3.72 a share, on sales of $37,915,318 for the period. First quarter net last year was $2,074,960, or $4.21 a share, on sales of $40,371,812.

STAFFERS AT GEYER BUY INTO AGENCY

Forty execs and other top staffers of Geyer Advertising have bought into the agency founded by board chairman B. B. Geyer and his father in Dayton, O., 46 years ago. Elected prexy was Sam M. Ballard, succeeding Geyer. In addition to them, the board of directors consists of E. G. Frost, v.p. (Dayton), John R. Geyer (secretary), John F. Henry Jr., v.p. (Detroit), Frank A. Kearney, v.p.; John R. Kunz, treasurer; Neal Nyland, v.p. (Detroit), and veeps Ralph C. Robertson and Edward G. Zern.

Chairman Geyer said the expansion of agency's ownership represents "an important milestone in the growth of our company" and "a major source of satisfaction to us that our clients have heartily approved this move. Shared ownership is not only the most realistic reward for executives who participate in building a company, but it is also a vital incentive for accelerated progress." Homeoffice of company is in New York.

P&G Buys Into ABC-TV 'Famous Film Festival'

Procter & Gamble is increasing its holdings on ABC-TV via the web's Sunday night "Famous Film Festival," picking up one spot a week for 26 weeks starting July 1. P&G earlier had bought half of "Wyatt Earp" and had ordered the Friday at 8 half-hour, but was forced out of the latter.

Understood the soap company is still looking over availabilities at the web for an additional half-hour to replace the Friday slot. In that case, P&G wanted to bring in its own show, not yet selected, but ABC-TV was adamant about setting "Adventures of Jim Bowie" in the slot. When P&G turned down "Bowie" and ABC sold it to Cheseborough-Pond's and American Chicle, P&G was then forced to look elsewhere, which it's currently doing.

COL'S RADIO PUSH ON 'DUCHIN STORY'

In a deal similar to that on 20th-Fox's "Carousel" Columbia Pictures has bought heavily into CBS Radio to plug its upcoming "Eddy Duchin Story" starring Tyrone Power. Col has taken 25 segments of eight major shows on the network. Drive starts June 24 and will spread over three weeks on the Edgar Bergen, Bing Crosby, Jack Carson, Galen Drake, Mitch Miller and Robert Q. Lewis shows "Amos 'n' Andy Music Hall" and Peter Potter's "Juke Box Jury."

Deal was set through Donahue & Coe, the Columbia pix agency.

M-G to Make Like 20th & Warners

Hollywood, May 1.

TV production at Metro will shift into operation similar to 20th-Fox and Warners, with a vidpix-making subsid at the Culver City plant, according to present blueprints. New plan is still on the drawing boards and is not expected to be activated until late next season.

In "MGM Parade" programs last season on ABC-TV, the studio used mostly old clips and later, segmented re-runs of features from MGM vaults. When the sponsors cancelled out recently, the network terminated this arrangement as of the end of this season.

Charles "Bud" Barry, who joins Metro in a move from the William Morris agency, will organize the new MGM video department and supervise production. Before joining the Morris agency, he was program head at both ABC and NBC. Meanwhile, he is directing the sales operation in disposing the studio's pre-'48 pix to tv.

HERALD GETS NOD IN OMAHA V GRANT

Omaha, May 1.

The FCC Friday (27) gave the greenlight to the Herald Corp. to operate channel 7 tv station here. In so doing, the application of KFAB Broadcasting Co. was denied. Actions were in line with an examiner's recommendations submitted in March of 1955.

Herald Corp. is owned by the World Publishing Co., which prints the World-Herald here. KFAB is principally owned by the Journal-Star Printing Co. of Lincoln, Neb., and the Sidles Co. of Omaha. Latter operates an automotive and household appliance distribution biz.

Said the FCC: "We have concluded that the Herald is superior with respect to the factors of local residence, civic participation, diversification of business interests of its principals and diversification of the media of mass communications."

Penna. B'casters to Meet

Philadelphia, May 1.

FCC Commissioner Robert E. Lee and TvB's president Oliver Treyz will head the roster of speakers scheduled by convention chairman George Kohler for the Pennsylvania Association of Broadcasters' annual meeting at Pocono Manor, May 17 and 18.

The agency panel for the opening day's session will include Jayne Shannon, media supervisor, of J. Walter Thompson; Frank Brady, v.p., Harry B. Cohen Advertising; W. Robert Egan, v.p. and director of merchandising, Foote, Cone & Belding and Kenneth Fleming, media supervisor, Leo Burnett Co., Chicago.

Murrow's 'Barkley'

Ed Murrow and Fred Friendly will do a special "See It Now" Sunday (6) on CBS-TV covering the career of Senator Alben W. Barkley, who died Monday. Show is being edited from an interview with the Kentucky legislator some months ago and will be titled. "A Conversation With Alben Barkley."

Slot is 5:35 to 6, with hard news up ahead for five minutes.

TvB Moves Into The Bigtime

With eight new station members and a station rep outfit moving into the Television Bureau of Advertising membership fold as a result of TvB's standout presentation on national spot advertising at the NARTB convention in Chi a couple of weeks back, the Bureau is now staging a repeat performance in New York May 16 at the Waldorf-Astoria grand ballroom. The Gotham stand—and TvB is considering making the presentation available for subsequent roadshowing—will be directed at advertisers and agencies, as contrasted somewhat with the Chi showing, mainly for the benefit of members, potential members, other broadcast bigwigs and then the Chi agencies and clients.

The presentation itself, a widescreen color job done with a vastly improved Cell-O-Matic "live animation" unit, was a socko job, not only in content but in the form in which it was presented. Content-wise, its "focussing tv's spotlight on spot" theme was the first all-embracing vista of the spot tv field available to the industry and the forerunner of continuing research into that area. The presentation itself, in part, a testimony to TvB prez Ollie Treyz showmanship and to the amazing results achieved by Milt Rogin's-Tom Howell's Cell-O-Matic operation, drew a continual string of oohs and aahs. But the end result of the presentation was to point up the amazing strides TvB has made in just 16 months. Since that time, it has jumped into a No. 1 position as the indusry's authoritative spokesman and defender on all matters relating to television advertising, matching other media associations blow for blow despite a sharp disparity in manpower and budgets. In the research field alone, the studies it has undertaken and the information it has made available are staggering in terms of years, not just months.

New stations, which bring the total membership list to 208 (three networks, 12 station reps and 193 stations) are WBAL-TV, Baltimore; WISN-TV, Milwaukee; KWK-TV, St. Louis; WREC-TV, Memphis; KLOR-TV, Portland; KOAM-TV, Pittsburgh (Kans.); WDBO-TV, Orlando, and WRBL-TV, Columbus (Ga.) New station rep member is Avery Knodel. Earlier, Treyz and his gang had achieved a coup by signing on Goar Mestre's group of five Cuban stations to membership.

Probe of Canada TV-AM (Just Like U. S.) Opens; Seek Govt. Divorcement

Ottawa, May 1.

Headed by Robert M. Fowler, president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Assn. as chairman, the Royal Commission on Broadcasting opened public hearings today (30) in the Supreme Court of Canada building. First submissions came from the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and, during the week, briefs will be presented by non-government television and radio groups and individuals.

Commission will probe CBC finance, and its control of radio and tv in Canada. It is expected briefs from non-CBC groups will demand that the corporation relinquish its radio-tv control and allow video competition in major cities where current regulations prohibit any television except CBC.

64,000 SIXPENCE GOES FULL WEB

London, May 1.

One of the first commercial tv programs to get full networking treatment between London, Birmingham and Manchester will be the "64,000 Question." This is the nearest British equivalent to "The $64,000 Question," but the prize money will be made up by multiples of sixpence. A sixpence is worth roughly seven cents, and the jackpot prize would equal $4,480, with a 10% bonus if the winner takes his loot in the form of National Savings Certificates.

The quiz program is due to go on the air this month and is to be directed by John Irwin, with Jerry Desmonde as emcee. Ex-Superintendent Fabian of the Yard will appear personally each week to mount security guard during the program.

WABD's Sales Dept. Revamp Finalized

WABD, N. Y. tv'er, has shaped up its full sales complement by adding three new account execs to the staff of four that it already has. Sales chief Bill Adler, who recently switched from head of WABD programming, pacted Don Waterbury, Bernard Zizzer and Al DiGiovani over the weekend.

Waterbury was last with "Answer Man" on radio and before that with sales at WOR, N. Y. radio station. Zizzer left Television Programs of America about a year back to start his own biz, and DiGiovani was sales research chief for the "Today"-"Home"-"Tonight" lineup on NBC-TV. Other WABD salesmen are Howard Neff, Walter Bruce, Burt Lambert and Maxine Cooper, latter being one of few femme account execs in N. Y.

Bricker Details ABC-TV Losses

Washington, May 1.

Losses of the ABC-TV network during the 1953-54 period was shown in the report of Sen. John W. Bricker (R-O.) last week to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee. In 1953, report disclosed, ABC and its five owned and operated tv stations grossed slightly more than $30.000,000. In 1954, the figure had risen to $44,500,000.

However, while revenues (sale of time and talent) mounted during this period, so did losses. ABC and its o & o outlets had a deficit (before Federal taxes) of $1,905,000 in 1953. In 1954, losses totaled $2,504,000.

ABC network operations, exclusive of stations, grossed $12,400,000 in 1953. In 1954, they rose to $24,750,000. However, the deficit also grew, from $4,383,000 in 1953 to $6,823,000 in 1954.

Only in its o & o stations did ABC revenues and profits both show increases. In 1953, the stations grossed $17,853,000. In 1954, the gross totaled $19,768,000. Profits of the stations in 1953 totaled $2,478,000. In 1954, they grew to $4,318,000.

Despite the doubling of its sales from 1953 to 1954, ABC and its o & o stations crept up only a niche in its share of the business of the entire tv industry. In 1953, it has 2.8% of the industry. In 1954, it had 4.1%.

However, ABC's share of the network business increased from 7.7% in 1953 to 11.2% in 1954.

TED MACK'S KAYCEE DEMOLAY HOOPLA

Kansas City, May 1.

Ted Mack and his television show on ABC-TV shook more than 1,200 amateurs out of the bushes for the show originated here Sunday (29). Tryouts were given at KMBC-TV, local affiliate, almost constantly for over a month, three-man viewing committee sorting them down to 73 for the pre-show selections which wound up with 16 for the show.

Session showed that talent comes in all varieties here, from a bazooka band of 16 housewives, to accordian and guitar players, mop-pets, vocal groups, musical sawyers and what will you have.

Mack came in Thursday for the show which was held Sunday in the Municipal Auditorium as a benefit for the Order of DeMolay, and went through series of meetings and greetings to publicize the show. Mayor Roe Bartle, a bevy of councilmen, DeMolay founder Frank S. Land and string of other bigwigs joined with Mack in the buildup, as did auto dealer Berl Berry, who hosted the entourage at a pre-show dinner Friday eve. All rates as the biggest promotion yet staged by DeMolay.

WOR-TV's 100G For Terrytoons

WOR-TV, the General Teleradio indie in N.Y., made its first major cartoon investment this week with the purchase of the CBS Television Film Sales library of 156 Terrytoon cartoons. Station, long a heavy feature film buyer, is said to have paid over $100,000 for the library. Cartoons will start in the fall, time slot not decided.

Sale to WOR-TV brings the Terrytoons gross up to $600,000 in just three weeks. In that time, since the CBS syndication subsid latched onto the properties, it has sold 28 stations. Group is only a small part of the entire Terrytoon library of 1,100 subjects acquired from Paul Terry by the network in a $5,000,000 a couple of months ago.

Coates' 'Crime Beat'

Hollywood, May 1.

A new type of tv crime program is debuted by Paul Coates on KTTV (TV), here, today, with Coates taking the station cameras to actual crime locations and interviewing the people involved.

The program, called "Paul Coates' Crime Beat," is being presented with the cooperation of the L. A. Sheriff's office, headed by Eugene Biscailuz.

SHOULDA STOOD IMBEDDED

One Man's Opinion

Crystal-balling the tv future, George Wolf, tv-radio topper at Ruthrauff & Ryan and keen observer of the broadcasting scene, ventures that the mounting furor about agency commissions on tv programs will lead to more agency participation in program packaging and supervision. "Perhaps this may be a bit oversimplified in relation to the complexities of the 'commission and control' problam in television programming," says Wolf, "but, in the main, this conclusion seems valid."

Give ABC-TV the full benefit of a five-year projection, avers Wolf, "and it could very well eclipse one or both of its rivals in gross billings and/or quality of programming."

It's Wolf's estimate that not more than 15% of the tv programs on the air today will remain in the '60-'61 season. "Just about all the comedians and personalities will have been supplanted by the new faces," says Wolf. "Perhaps some of the outstanding 'anthology' programs will survive, but otherwise the programs schedules will be brand new."

He also sees increased pressure from advertisers and agencies resulting in a central rating source utilizing a broader base than is available today from any one rating service.

Robt. Sarnoff Asks Full Equality For TV at 'Meet the Press' Hoopla

Washington, May 1.

A call for full journalistic free press equality for television, and prediction of a greatly expanded future for network tv were given here Saturday night (28), in connection with the 10th anniversary celebration of "Meet the Press."

NBC president Robert W. Sarnoff sounded the keynote at the dinner which drew upwards of 800 guests to pay tribute to the show. The audience included a large cross-section of those who have appeared as guests and as reporter quizzers on the show in the decade since it was launched as a radio program by Lawrence Spivak and Martha Rountree. Latter is no longer connected with "Meet the Press" and was unable to accept the invitation to attend.

After a nice bow to the program as the original and outstanding example of "electronic journalism," Sarnoff declared:

"Television's contribution is unique because its ability to communicate is unique. It is the only medium which can reach the people with the living impact of sight, sound and immediacy . . . However, if television is to inform fully, it must have opportunity equal with other media to attend events of public interest. Television is the eyes and ears of the people.

"Once television wins full journalistic equality—as it must—it will then be in a position to contribute even more fully to the broad democratic goal of a fully informed public."

Reviewing such recent NBC spectaculars as "Richard III," "The

Leonard Stern In Shift to Silvers

Nat Hiken has grabbed off Leonard Stern from his spot as headwriter on the "The Honeymooners". Stern moves into the Phil Silvers show, first as a writer under Hiken but eventually with the prospect of taking on headwriter and director chores.

CBS-TV has asked Hiken to develop his "Magnificent Montague," the old Monty Woolley radio starrer, into a tv property. Hiken will have to drop some of his responsibilities on the Silvers show to devote time to the "Montague" property—hence Stern's new slot. William Friedberg will work with Hiken on the development of "Montague" as a writer-director.

Deals for Stern and Friedberg were set by the Frank Cooper office, repping both writers. Same agency set a new deal for Tony Webster as a scripter for the Silvers show which will mark his second year with Hiken and Silvers. Meanwhile, though Stern is out of the "Honeymooners," two more Cooper writer clients, Syd Zelenka and Herb Finn, repping half the Gleason writing stable, return to work on next fall's "Honeymooners" this week.

MULL FRIDAY NIGHT 'AMATEUR HR.' SLOT

With its newly-inherited "Omnibus" now officially slated for the 9 to 10:30 Sunday night period starting next October, ABC-TV is now in process of resolving the next season status of "Original Amateur Hour," which currently occupies the 9 to 10 Sabbath slot.

If Pharmaceuticals Inc., sponsors of "Amateur Hour," agree to the switch, ABC would like to give it a 60-minute Friday night berthing.

ABC's Full Scale TV Spec Invasion; Both 60 & 90-Min.

Hollywood, May 1.

ABC-TV is currently lining up properties and stars for a dozen spectaculars for next season, the web's first in the spec sweepstakes. Most of the specs will be hour-long, but several are pencilled in for the 90 minute distance.

Tentatively slated as the first in the web's series is the hour-long "Ballet Ballads," to be telecast Nov. 14. A show making use of Metopera talent is on the agenda Dec. 9, as a 90-min. entry, and on Dec. 23 there will be an hour-long "Nutcracker Ballet."

Jan. 8 an hour show on the development of the atomic sub is planned, with Van Heflin sought for the lead. Feb. 5 "The Honey" is on the sked as an hour-long show, with the Gish sisters, Dorothy and Lillian, wanted as stars.

Ethel Waters and Eartha Kitt are being considered as stars of the hour-long "Take a Giant Step," on March 8, and Ray Bolger may star in the 90-minute "By Jupiter," on April 8.

A 90-min. program with Metopera talent is skedded for April 21, and "Playboy of the Western World" is slated as an hour show May 4, with Julie Harris a possibility for the lead.

In addition, John Daly will present three hour-long shows, one dealing with mental health, another with divorce, and the other with alcoholism.

As far as is now known, no specs will originate from Hollywood. However, portions of "Omnibus," switching to ABC-TV after being on CBS-TV, will probably originate from the Coast.

FINLEY EXITS KTLA

Hollywood, May 1.

Larry Finley departs KTLA (TV), here, Paramount tv outlet, after tonight's presentation of his weekly review show, having asked for and received his release.

Finley continues his KFWB Hollywood, d.j. stint and is dickering for another tv outlet for his video show.

SPONSORS FLEE PREMATURELY

The Nielsen payoff on the Pontiac-sponsored "Playwrights 56" NBC-TV Tuesday night series (newest ratings, just released, give it a 28.9, putting it ahead of such major hour drama entries as Alcoa-Goodyear, Kraft, U.S. Steel and Robert Montgomery, highlights an interesting turn of events in tv. Sponsors who "prematurely run" from a given time slot are now finding out that, through patience and proper nursing (as in the case of "Climax") or even through circumstances beyond their control, they could just as easily have transformed a loser into a winner.

Pontiac has long since served notice that it is deserting the "Playwrights" ship. For most of the season it got lost in the Tuesday night "$64,000 Question" shuffle. True, the toprated CBS money show is still copping the laurels, but "Playwrights" is now beginning to pull 'em in—too late for Pontiac to do anything about it even if it wanted to, since Kaiser Aluminum has bought the time for its own hour drama entry.

Unlike radio, where shows stayed put for 10 and 15 years, tv franchises hardly mean as much. Within a two-year or even a single year's span, a whole nighttime pattern and network program structure can change. Pontiac, for example, previously had possession of the Friday night at 8 period on NBC-TV. It wasn't happy with the "Mama" competition from CBS. But with "Mama" now being cancelled, the NBC time has become a more valuable one. But it now belongs to Old Gold.

Then there's the cast of Eastman Kodak, which yelled "get me out of the Wednesday at 8 NBC slot," distressed over what Arthur Godfrey, on the one hand, and "Disneyland," on the other, was doing to it. Came the Kodak 8 to 8:30 cancellation notice and the CBS Godfrey show was dumped, giving the NBC time a new value, even though "Disneyland" still haunts the half-hour.

Geo. Simon Pacted For NBC-TV Gershwin Spec; Flock of Major Stars

George Simon, music annotator and critic who's now with the burgeoning disk division of Crowell-Collier, the mag publishing house, has been retained to serve as commentator for Max Liebman's NBC-TV color spec, "The Music of George Gershwin," headed for the 9 to 10:30 p.m. slot May 12. Simon is a brother of Richard Simon, v.p. of Simon & Schuster, publishers of the late songwriter's piano transcriptions.

Contrary to belief in some quarters, the spec will not use material from David Ewen's "Journey Into Greatness," Gershwin biog issued by Holt. Some of Gershwin's top tunes will be interpreted by Ethel Merman, who planed into Los Angeles from her Denver home last week and was due in N. Y. over the past weekend for huddles with Music Corp. of America on both the spec and "Honest in the Rain," skedded up ahead (May 9) on the CBS-TV "U.S. Steel Hour." Huge cast for the Gershwin spec, includes Alfred Drake, Tony Bennett, Cab Calloway, Eugene List, Art Van Damme Quinet, Richard Hayman, Lawrence Winters, American Piano Quartet, Bob Hamilton Trio,

ABC-TV's First-Quarter Billings Hike of 73%

First-quarter television billings at ABC jumped 73.4% over last year's level to a record $19,504,184 total. The figure for the first three months is higher than the total billings for all of 1952, when the network aggregated only $18,353,000 in billings.

Billings total for the first quarter of last year was $11,092,316.

Political Pressures Seen Inviting A Congressional Nix on Pay-TV

Surprise?

Washington, May 1.

Does RCA have a subscription tv system? In his testimony before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee last week, Theodore Pierson, counsel for Zenith, described the three systems which have been developed, Zenith's, Telemeter and Skiatron.

Then he added, "and RCA's, if they've got one locked up somewhere."

Washington, May 1.

Hearings before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee last week on subscription tv failed to develop any appreciable enthusiasm for the pay service from the standpoint of giving the public a greater choice of programs. But they may have raised the possibilities for the development as a solution to the tv allocations problem.

In contrast with the situation a year ago when the threat of the development dominated the mood of the NARTB convention here, the atmosphere of the hearings seemed quite calm (except for an occasional vehement outburst) and the arguments rather academic. The networks, obviously, weren't worried. Only CBS sent a witness (veepee Richard Salant) to testify. ABC simply filed a statement. NBC didn't even bother to do that.

Innovations in programming during the last year, notably the spectaculars and "classical" shows, apparently took much of the steam out of the pay-tv pitch and gave ammunition to the opposition argument that subscription would grab off top sponsored fare and require the viewer to pay for it.

What appeared to be a typical Congressional reaction to the testimony was displayed by Sen. John O. Pastore (D.-R.I.), ranking Democratic member of the Committee, who presided at most of the sessions. The Senator was quite impressed by the opening argument of Theodore Pierson, counsel for Zenith, that subscription deserved at least a trial, in the American tradition of free enterprise, that the developers would be taking the risk and the public could take it or leave it. When Pierson got through, Pastore could only say, with a gesture: "Well . . ." It was as though he were asking, "how can you argue with that?"

But as the hearings progressed

Sponsors Axing Danny & 'Ozzie,' Future in Doubt

Two of ABC-TV's oldest shows are in a sponsor deepfreeze, with the future status of both uncertain unless the web can come up with some sponsors by the fall. Shows are the Danny Thomas-starring "Make Room for Daddy" and "Ozzie & Harriet," both of which have been axed by their sponsors.

On the Thomas segment, American Tobacco is ankling the show after three years with the segment, and Dodge is dittoing after two. Latter has renewed Lawrence Welk on the same web, though, and is likely to renew "Break the Bank." In the case of American Tobacco, the ciggiemaker became convinced that an earlier time spot was necessary to boost the rating, but also decided that the type of audience an earlier time would bring wasn't suited to its needs. ABC-TV is now pitching the Thomas segment for either a Monday spot at 8 p.m. or Saturdays at 7:30.

As for "Ozzie & Harriet," Hotpoint, a longtime alternate sponsor of the show, has ankled, as have Quaker Oats and Norwich, which were on a once-every-fourth-week basis. Web anticipates a little more difficulty in selling "Ozzie" than it does "Daddy," but is selling on the basis of a Sunday at 6 spot instead of the current Friday at 8. Latter time period is already set with "The Tempered Blade."

PACK OF PILOTS FOR GE'S SUMMER RUN

General Electric has bought up a group of 10 pilot films out of the William Morris stable which it will use as a summer show on ABC-TV before going into its regular season show in the Tuesday at 9 spot it takes over July 3. Group of pilots, to which GE has not yet assigned a title, include indie ventures along with some of Morris' own pilot efforts. In the latter class is the Arnold Stang-Arthur Treacher comedy pilot.

As for its regular fall entry, GE still hasn't made a choice. Understood the Alan Ladd series is still in the running, but GE is looking at other properties, among them the "Believe It or Not" series. It's understood to have nixed the 20th-Fox "Mr. Belvedere" series as a possible entry, however.

Palmer's Pre-Giants Gab Bought by Viceroy Cigs

Filling the spot held by Laraine Day last year, John (Bud) Palmer has launched a quarter-hour pre-Giants game stanza on WPIX, N. Y. Brown & Williamson (for Viceroy) is picking up the tab on the Friday, Saturday and Sunday segments, with the station after sponsorships on the remaining days in the Giant schedule.

Miss Day did the show when her husband Leo Durocher was still managing the Giants.

'WB Presents' In Sponsor Trouble

Though the "Warner Bros. Presents" series on ABC-TV has done some latter-months building to the point where it upset some NBC-TV applecarts, ABC-TV is in troubled water on the sponsor end. Liggett & Myers, which had been expected to renew its every-week half-hour, has dropped out altogether, joining Monsanto in ankling the show and leaving only General Electric with a one-fourth piece.

Hopeful note, however, is that GE has optioned an additional half-hour on alternate weeks, to take on a pattern that may involve full sponsorship of the show every other week or cosponsorship of half the hour on an every-week basis. Should GE exercise the option, the network would need sell only half the program, either a half-hour every week or the full hour on alternate weeks.

Liggett & Myers withdrawal wasn't caused by any dissatisfaction with the show but grew out of the split between the Chesterfield and the L&M Filters billings when the filter brand moved from Cunningham & Walsh to Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample. D-F-S decided on a policy opposed to mixing L&M and Chesterfield commercials on the same program, a practice which had obtained on "Warners." Meanwhile, the agency began a still incomplete survey of media and budgets, and won't make any program buys until it completes the study. There's still a chance L&M could come into the WB picture, but not for some time. At the same time, the L&M-Chesterfield split left the latter brand without enough of a budget to support its share of the show, so it too dropped out, leaving ABC-TV high and dry except for GE.

Ed Sullivan Show

Too many television analysts and critics have attempted to measure the success of the Ed Sullivan Show through assayals of Sullivan's prowess (or lack of it) as an emcee. The weightier standard is the columnist's talents as a producer, for with or without Sullivan onstage, the stanza remains as powerful a draw. Sunday's (29) segment, with Sullivan away in Tokyo and Eve Arden subbing oncamera, serves as an example; it was a standout session, with a well-balanced and powerful array of acts that included Kate Smith toplining, Jean Carroll, The Goofers, Richard Hearne, The Luvas (aerialists), The Peters Sisters and Charles Manna.

Not that there isn't something about Sullivan the emcee worth exploring, for Miss Arden, who should be able to take this sort of thing in stride, appeared uncomfortable and stiff and overly straitlaced in the role. Sullivan has a style of his own; that's for sure. What it is remains for another review—he wasn't on this show. But Sullivan the producer came up with a fine session, sparked by Miss Smith, who in the belated first of three appearances (originally scheduled for six but thrown awry because of Ted Collins' heart attack), coincidentally celebrated her 25th anni in radio and tv.

Miss Smith is still a top-drawer performer in any show biz league. She's grown older gracefully; her bulk now fits her well and a head of now-grey hair adds to the sense of dignity. But she belts out a song as before, with no appreciable change in her energy or her voice. She seems to lean toward the rhythm numbers, and did well by "S'Wonderful" as her opener, and "Fine and Dandy" as the bow-off, with "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing" sandwiched between. As in the past, the accent is on the sell, and she sold par excellence. Before bowing off, she made with the anni amenities, thanking Collins and her conductor of 25 years, Jack Miller, plus a thank-you for Sullivan.

Miss Carroll likewise had herself a good night. Comedienne, who tends to be spotty in her guestshots, was hot this night with a mixture of familiar and new material that kept on building for a solid stint. Hearne, back for his umpteenth Sullivan guester, did his "passing out ceremony" acropanto turn again, still a refreshing bit of physical nonsense. Goofers were on as openers, and so restricted to one quickie number, but up to their par for zaniness. Peters Sisters (3), like many other American Negro acts out of Paris, were on for two numbers but are worth looking at again. What with a stress on comedy among the three heavyweights, only glimpses of what sounded like some solid harmonics came through, though the overall effect was still fine. Luvas, two lookers, went through some tricky aerial work, using neck halters and trapeze bars for support and achieving excellent results. Closer, a young comic named Charles Manna, showed a lot of fresh material, and though somewhat immature in approach, displayed a good deal of imagination and promise. Ray Bloch orch cut a fine show, per usual. Chan.

Alcoa Hour

Such genial performers as Gertrude Berg and Claude Dauphin couldn't save the ship-to-shore "Paris and Mrs. Perlman" from going under. The John Vlahos teleplay was chosen as the first of the "Alcoa Hour" series to be served in tint Sunday (29) on NBC-TV. Color can't help a poor script. It came out as a lightweight romantic comedy, long and repetitious in the playing but short in interest values in its heavy-going treatment of a rich widow from a Pittsburgh suburb falling for Frenchman Dauphin while on a transatlantic liner and continuing the middle-age passion right up to the final curtain, with marriage indicated.

Vlahos set up a stock situation involving widow Berg's longtime "settled" suitor, Sanford Meisner, hustling over to Paris to try to win her from Dauphin, who had posed as a wine merchant but was exposed by Meisner as a mere salesman who had to borrow money to entertain the romantic, love-happy gal. Dragged in by the heels was young Joey Walsh as Mrs. Berg's nephew accompanying her on the trip who sides with Meisner against Dauphin. There's hardly more than a synopsis to ponder on in this silly play by a tv writer who has had far better entries in the Alcoa series. Trau.

Hy Gardner Calling

Hy Gardner, N. Y. Herald-Tribs syndicated Broadway columnist, moved over from a long-term tenancy at WPIX, N. Y., where he was a sustainer to a happier position at WRCA-TV the NBC video flagship, where he has bankrollers. In moving over to the new showcase, Gardner, being a good reporter, got the most of the various telephoned interviews. "Hy Gardner calling" had some good gossip items with Sammy Davis Jr. in which Davis neatly side-stepped the question of whether he would perform for segregated audiences, but the Negro artist wound up with an amusing impression of Jerry Lewis.

Carmine DeSapio similarly sidestepped pronouncements on the availibility of N. Y. Governor Harriman for the presidency, and Mickey Spillane in a briefie indicates that he can be as colorful as some of his fictional characters.

Gardner, on the initial show, really got a scoop—an interview with Jayne Mansfield who is as shy and retiring as bikini bathing suit. Miss Mansfield and her dog purred prettily over the phone. She was more decorative than informative.

A real surprise was Milton Berle calling up. At least Gardner confided to his girl Friday (Marilyn Bos[illegible]ick) that he didn't know this was coming. Somebody's liable to ask so how come the cameras were set up? Gardner, nonetheless, conducts a good session of split-screening. He doesn't seem backward in asking the important questions and he's smart enough to let go when he skims the cream off the subject. Jose.

Person To Person

Ed Murrow, on another engaging "Person To Person" stanza, presented a striking study in contrasting personalities last Friday night (27) when the half-hour was divided between Noel Coward and Dr. Vannevar Bush, the atomic scientist. While Coward was, as usual, the paragon of British suavity, Dr. Bush was the typical homespun Yankee. Murrow seemed to feel more at home with the latter.

Coward, in his New York hotel apartment, was peppered with "fan mag" queries by Murrow who undoubtedly thought this was the best route to evoke some of the Coward wit. Coward came through with several sharp lines and, in general, played his role of the sophisticate with consummate skill, just like a character in one of his plays.

Dr. Bush, who together with his wife were picked up from their home near Boston, was an earthier character. He displayed his home tool room and discussed some of the basic problems confronting modern man. It was in all an excellent portrait of one of the country's elder statesmen. Herm.

Wide Wide World

"Wide Wide World's" timing on Sunday (29) was extraordinary, at least to the folks in the east. On the day that the cameras decided to become Sunday drivers, the weather was ideal. After being cooped up for the bulk of the spring, the average viewer was glad to hop into the car, or at least get the feeling of going places on a day that was much too nice to stay indoors.

Show attempted an unusual gimmick, staging a two-horse match race with Eddie Arcaro and Willie Shoemaker riding mounts in Jamaica and on the Coast. Despite expert use of the split screen with Cappy Capizello announcing, it was hard to get the feeling of competition, but it was an extremely interesting try.

There was also another race between two ancient stern-wheelers on the Ohio River. Unfortunately, the show missed the finish, but what was shown was an extremely picturesque holdover from a colorful era. Also in the competitive vein was the attempted free-balloon ascent at Valley Forge. In the battle with the wind, it was impossible to get the bag up. And the local announcer mourned the loss of $200 worth of hydrogen.

The exchange of colors at Ft. Henry, along the Canadian border, between Her Majesty's troops and U. S. Marines provided a colorful ceremony. Show's entry into the realm of a juvenile takeoff of a westerner was tried on location at Knott's Berry Farm and Ghost Town near Los Angeles. Satire failed to hit.

EDDY ARNOLD SHOW

With Chet Atkins, Paul Mitchell, The Philharmonics, Dolores Hawkins
Director: Charles H. Brown
30 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Springfield, Mo.

With the new "Eddy Arnold Show" the hillbillies in Springfield, Mo., are making a play for the pop market. Kickoff stanza was a pleasant pop tune potpourri neatly paced and showcased.

Arnold, a fave hillbilly disker on the RCA Victor label, has an easy-going way with a song and his hosting was carried off in an amiable and relaxed manner. This series should do a lot to help him spread out of the alfalfa belt into the urban areas. His opening show songalog included "No, Not Much," "Anytime," "But You Don't Know Me," and "I'm Sending You A Big Bouquet of Roses."

Assisting Arnold in the musical fest were Chet Atkins, with a slick guitar version of "Sweet Georgia Brown"; Paul Mitchell with some flashy keyboarding of "Carioca" and The Philharmonics with a vocal workover of "Smack, Dab In The Middle." Opening stanza's guest star, Dolores Hawkins, an Epic label disker, did okay with "Growin' Up" and "The Nearness of You."

The tv boys in Springfield showed a savvy appreciation of camera technique and highlighted each turn with some interesting viewing angles. Only hitch was that the show ran over and in New York, ABC-TV's outlet, was forced to make a jarring interruption with several harsh spot announcements. Gros.

BUDDY LESTER SHOW

With Bob Brown, Gloria Van, Chubby Jackson and Don Jacoby Orch
Producers: Lester, Brown
Director: Herb Coniff
45 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 11:15 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago

Ever since gabber Tom Duggan flew the WBKB coop a couple of months back, veep Sterling (Red) Quinlan has been groping for a formula that would keep the late-night viewers alerted to Channel 7 in the sturdy ARB brackets maintained by the now-departed soapboxer. Latest version is a loose-jointed music-with-gags roundelay under the tutelage of comic Buddy Lester. Protestations to the contrary, the search for the solution to the station's 11:15 p.m. "problem" must be still going on.

Spotty affair had Lester and comedian Bob Brown joining in a couple of generally unfunny skits on show viewed (25). Lester fronts the show with a certain amount of infectious enthusiasm and Brown has an okay lowpressure style. But the boys badly need some help in the writing and idea department in carrying this 45-minute cross-the-board load. That "Musical Appreciation" pantomime bit only served as a reminder that Steve Allen and his NBC-TV "Tonight" gang are on opposite.

Musical portions, with emphasis on jazz, spotlighted trumpeter Don Jacoby and bassist Chubby Jackson, as part of a solid seven-man staff group. Jacoby reeled off a nice treatment of "September Song" but both he and Jackson seemed more interested in selling their histronics. Gloria Van is the vocalist of the week and beside adding some attractive window-dressing she warmly rang up a brace of ditties.

Clambake just didn't have much punch and a lot of dialers must have been lost by the wayside during those dual back-to-back minute participating blurbs. It takes a stroke of trafficing genius to couple a Minute-Maid spot with an Arrid deodorant pitch. Dave.

THE NATION'S BUSINESS

With Hon. Walter Harris, M.P., Ned Conlon
Producer: Michael Hind-Smith
15 Mins.; Mon. (16); 7:30 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Ottawa

The federal budget, Canada's national debt, the nation's prosperity and related topics were explained by the country's cabinet expert, Hon. Walter Harris, Minister of Finance, on the kickoff session of a new television series, "The Nation's Business." Aired from a studio at the Ottawa outlet of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., CBOT, the shows will go to CBC web and other non-web stations in French and English through microwave and telefilm.

Opener was produced by Michael Hind-Smith, CBOT staffer, who had little to do while Harris gabbed in an obviously-scripted stanza with Ned Conlon. With a subject like national finance, the show had a ready-built audience and although the series is sched-

THE NICK KENNY SHOW

With Harry Hershfield, Charles Tobias, guests; Marc Scott, announcer
Producer: Robert P. Kukuck
Director: Carl Gaiti
15 Mins., Mon., 11:15 p.m.
FLORIDA LAND & HOMES BUREAU
WABD, New York
(Flint Advertising)

WABD bossman Ted Cott ought to learn the value of restraint; that is, the ability to turn down business when it could have a deleterious effect on his general programming scheme, on his overall efforts to build an audience for his station. Case in point is this Nick Kenny outing, which apparently was delivered to WABD as a package deal, since the agency for sponsor Florida Land & Homes Bureau is Flint Advertising and the show was labeled as a "Flint Associates production."

But Cott apparently couldn't resist a quarter-hour of commercial time, or maybe he figured nobody would be watching at 11:15, so Kenny is back with his special brand of nonsensical sentiment, or as the Alaskan dogsledders say, mush. The format is quite simple: a guest (Harry Hershfield for the opener), a songwriter (Charles Tobias), Kenny and at least one poem. Hershfield and Kenny talked about the former's pet charity project, the Cardiac Home of New York. Tobias sang some of his hits and recited a rhymed eulogy (with apologies to Kenny) to his late partner Peter De Rose, and Kenny recited one of his N. Y. Daily Mirror specials, a poem dedicated to the fireman. Everybody had a good cry.

Sponsor is selling parcels of land near Daytona Beach, plus houses for the more prosperous. Marc Scott delivered the commercials with an assist from Kenny, who "wuz down there last January" and who means to retire there himself someday. Incidentally, the show was done against a ludicrous palm tree background, which presumably is supposed to be some kind of integrated commercial. Chan.

CRACKER BASEBALL

With Bob Hendrickson, Guy Tiller
Director: Jim Sharp
FORD DEALERS, NATIONAL BOHEMIAN BEER
WLW-A, Atlanta

Athletes wearing livery of 1956 Crackers, Atlanta entry in Southern BB Association, are being seen this year via WLW-A, Crosley-owned ABC outlet in Southern metropolis. Last year they did their stuff on WSB-TV, NBC mouthpiece o&o by Atlanta Newspapers, Inc.

Team of Bob Hendrickson and Guy Tiller do a good job of gabbing to keep lookers informed as to what's going on. Hendrickson does the play by play while Tiller fills in with between-inning palaver and color stuff.

Hendrickson is WLW-A program director and a topnotch news and sports announcer. He does an okay job with the play-by-play, but on his opener he seemed, on a few occasions, to be the victim of buck fever. Tiller, station's sales manager, is a former assistant sports editor for The Atlanta Journal, and is a veteran in front of a mike and the possessor of a pleasing voice. Rounding out the doubling-in-brass crew is director Jim Sharp, who, normally, is WLW-A production manager.

Two cameras, one in press box behind home plate, the other behind first base, are used in telecasts of Cracker games. Coverage is excellent. Camera behind plate is equipped with zoomar lens, which virtually gives complete infield shot. Camera work rates okay.

Ford dealers sponsor two-third of games, with National Bohemian Beer taking last third. WLW-A is scheduled to televise 29 more home games this season on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Game time is 7:45 p.m.

In addition, there is a 15-minute segment called "Dugout Time" during which Tiller interviews visiting managers and players on field and fills in on occasion with Atlanta playing talent. Gulf Oil is sponsor.

After game is over Tiller presides over another five-minute session called "Scoreboard" sponsored by Philco and which is a roundup of baseball activities in major leagues and Southern.

Hendrickson and Tiller teamed one week prior to the Atlanta opening in telecasting the Crackers' opening game against Birmingham's Barons on the latter's home grounds. This marked the first time in Southern Association history that such a live remote coverage had been undertaken. Luch.

DODSWORTH

(Producers' Showcase)
With Fredric March, Claire Trevor, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Stephen Bekassy, Robert Boon, Tom Cound, Dick Elliott, Janine Grandell, Celia Lovsky, Grazia Narciso, Frank Puglia, Barbara Robbins, Olive Sturgess, William Swan, Geoffrey Toone, Regis Toomey; music, George Bassman
Producer-Director: Alex Segal
Writer: Sidney Howard (from Sinclair Lewis novel)
Adaptor: David Shaw
90 Mins.; Mon. (30), 8 p.m.
FORD, RCA VICTOR
NBC-TV, from H'wood (color)
(K&E)

"Dodsworth" doesn't date. The combination of Fredric March, Claire Trevor, Geraldine Fitzgerald and other handpicked pretenders, plus producer-director Alex Segal in his guest debut on "Producers' Showcase," gave the Sidney Howard play from the Sinclair Lewis novel, adapted to the medium by David Shaw, a richly endowed, high gloss performance. "Dodsworth" ran through the 90 minutes like clockwork, with all technical credits in the "well beyond the call of duty" groove.

But when all the shouting is over, the chief kudos on the home-screen front must go to March, who grows in stature and versatility with the years, to Miss Trevor for plunging into the Mrs. D. role on all fours to score a tremendous success, and to the master hand of Segal. Never has "Dodsworth" been given finer interpretation, or deeper values, whether stacked up against the powerful legiter starring Walter Huston and Fay Bainter nearly a quarter century ago or the equally powerful 1936 Sam Goldwyn film fronting Huston and Ruth Chatterton.

There have been one or two televersions—good, as nearly as can be recalled, but nowhere near this Segal-"Showcase" edition, with its careful blueprint of an hour and a half of time that added up to exactly 90 minutes in compatible color array. The lesser roles were expertly filled, notably by Geraldine Fitzgerald as the "other woman" in Dodsworth's life in the pattern of his own wife's nix on growing old gracefully; by Celia Lovsky as the baroness in her one striking scene wherein she gives the back of her hand to Fran Dodsworth's marital ambitious toward the noble lady's son; by savvy veteran players Regis Toomey and Barbara Robbins as friends of the Dodsworths; and indeed by the whole cast, whether in bits or more extended parts.

The Otis Riggs settings had an authentic slickness about them to match the luxury living here and abroad, and George Bassman's musical score punctuated the action at key points to help in a furtherance of the story. "Dodsworth" lives over the years as a model of a universal theme that can be enjoyed and pondered on by all. Monday night's spread was just a great dish. Trau.

CHALLENGE ON THE LAKE

With Frank Blair, narrator
Producer-director: Konstantin Kalser
15 Mins., Mon. (30), 11:30 p.m.
WABD, N.Y. (film)

"Challenge on the Lake" is a pubservice film financed by Socony Mobil Oil, produced by Konstantin Kalser's Marathon TV Newsreel and offered free to stations as a pubservicer. The lake is Nevada's Lake Meade and the challenge of that of speed; it's the story of Donald Campbell's new water speed record of over 215 m.p.h. set with his Blue Bird jet-powered boat last winter, and of the heartbreaks that preceded the record run.

Filmed by a team of three cameramen and sharply edited by Ken Baldwin, "Challenge" is a topnotch effort in the condensation of weeks of footage into a concise and suspenseful quarter-hour. There's no wasted footage: the film simply tells the story and lets it build to its own crescendo as after several failures and a weather problem, Campbell finally breaks his own 202 m.p.h. record.

Photography, by Henry Javorsky, Arthur Florman and Harry Walsh, is excellent, particularly those pans following the boat over its course. Narration by Frank Blair and a special score add to the terseness and suspense of the film. Socony, which helped Campbell with the research and the fueling and acted as an overall sponsor, gets sparing credits limited to a shot of the fueling and an opening mention shared with others. "Challenge" goes beyond the scope of the average pubservicer, both in subject manner and execution. Chan.

the secret of Captain Kangaroo

(just declassified for all advertisers)

Advertisers may know that each morning 4 million children sit entranced in front of their television receivers as they watch "Captain Kangaroo"—and that their number is growing every week.

They may also know that the kids will do anything he says—from singing a song to brushing their teeth or eating their cereal.

They may even know that children are always asking their mothers to buy something they have seen on television.

But what advertisers may not know is that a new research study recently completed by Eugene Gilbert and Company shows that 3 out of 5 children who regularly watch "Captain Kangaroo" go shopping with their mothers an average of three times a week.

It adds up to a pretty compelling picture for the advertiser who would like to have this kind of attention focused on his product.

This bewitching children's program now has a 73% higher rating than its closest network competition and is available at a 49% lower cost per thousand. Joining forces with this great early morning leader might just turn out to be the secret sales weapon you need.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

KIDVID COIN ADULT HEADACHE

OF & John Bull's $4,400,000 Mating

With a total of $4,400,000 in non-syndicated business in the past three weeks, Official Films has emerged as a new power among the telepix distribution houses, to say nothing of making a strong contribution to the restoration of England's dollar balance. That $4,400,000 is accounted for by four British-made series to which Official has representation (and some ownership), with the business coming in the form of two new network deals, a network renewal and new business and renewals in Canada, England and Australia.

Business was racked up in the following manner: "Robin Hood," renewal on CBS by Johnson & Johnson and Wildroot; "Adventures of Sir Launcelot," bought by NBC-TV for undisclosed client in Monday 8 p.m. slot; "The Buccaneer," bought by Sylvania as "Beat the Clock" replacement on CBS; "The Scarlet Pimpernel" (only 18 shows) sold in Canada to the CBC, also sold in Australia for Sydney and Melbourne; and all four shows either sold or renewed in England.

Vidpix Crisis in North Africa

Cues a Change of Scenery on 'Gallant of Foreign Legion' Series

If the backgrounds in the new series of 26 "Captain Gallant of the Foreign Legion" telefilms going before the cameras May 21 look different from the current series, blame it on the crisis in North Africa. First batch, currently playing NBC-TV for Heinz, were filmed around Marakesh in French Morocco year before last. However, producer Harry Saltzman, who turns out the pix for Television Programs of America, was unable to get back into Morocco for exterior shooting for the new bunch and has had to settle for Lybya instead, where he'll shoot outside Tripoli.

Interiors for the series, which was renewed recently for another year, will be shot in Rome instead of Paris, as previously. New cycle, which takes to the air in October, will be directed by Steve Previn, who directed "Foreign Intrigue" and "Sherlock Holmes" for Sheldon Reynolds. Buster Crabbe and his son Cuffy continue to star in the series.

Boyardee Buys 'Stage 7' Series

Chef Boyardee, the line of Italian foods manufactured by the American Foods Division of American Home Products, is moving into its first major regional spread in the telepix sponsorship sweepstakes. Boyardee has purchased the new "Stage Seven" series for double exposure in New York and throughout New England from Television Programs of America, which distribs and coproduces the series with Four Star Films.

Via Young & Rubicam, Boyardee has picked up Boston, Providence, New Haven, Portland and Springfield on the New England end, while in New York it will bankroll the series both on WPIX and WABD, in line with the "double-exposure" trend begun by the breweries. "Stage S ven" is not to be confused with the earlier series of the same name that had a network span but is now owned for reruns by Official Films. Four Star, which had produced the original series, sold the negatives to Official but retained rights to the title and entered a coproduction deal with TPA for a new series of 39 for syndication. Earlier, the new series had been sold to Standard Oil of California for the entire west coast, where it's played under the name "Chevron Hall of Fame." Standard also added Hawaii to its market list recently.

"Stage Seven" replaces WPIX's "Public Defender" in the Monday at 8 slot. However, station is not dropping latter skein, since syndication pact allows several hiatuses and manager Fred Thrower plans to use the police stanza next fall. Most of the 69 "Defenders" WPIX contracted for have yet to be run off.

'Winnie Winkle' Series

Hollywood, May 1.

Scripts are being written in N.Y. for a "Winnie Winkle" telepix series, based on the cartoon strip, with June Havoc sought as lead.

Deal is being talked for Screen Gems to produce the series in conjunction with Martin Branner, creator of the series.

Matty Fox-C&C Set New Pattern On 'Barter' Spots

Much of the $10,000,000 in "barter" spots originally accumulated by Matty Fox via the sale of his Motion Pictures for Television feature library won't be used by C&C Super Corp. as originally envisioned. Instead, Fox is selling the spots to other advertisers through Western Television Corp., the film holding company which C&C purchased from Fox last year, with C&C using only "some of the spot time" for its own products "whenever it seems desirable."

This and other additional information on the operations of Western and also of C&C Television Corp., the subsidiary which took over the RKO feature library, are contained in the C&C annual report and proxy statement mailed last week. Prez Walter Mack revealed that Western had reduced its indebtedness to banks from $1,900,000 to $650,000 during the past fiscal year, and the statement of income showed television revenues, less distribution fees and participation expenses, of $662,097 for the fiscal year ended last Sept. 30 and $339,170 for the three months ended Dec. 31.

Report also revealed the existence of three subsidiaries handling the RKO product, these being C&C Television Corp., C&C Atlantic TV Co. and C&C International Film Corp., with Fox head-

SPANISH DUBBINGS ON 4 TPA SERIES

Television Programs of America, which a few weeks back set up an international division under Paul Talbot, is digging into its dubbing task in earnest. Company has set four series for conversion into Spanish, three of them in the works in Mexico City and a fourth in Madrid.

Mexican operation has "Count of Monte Cristo" already completed in the Espanol version, while "Ramar of the Jungle" and "Stage Seven" are in the works. Ken Smith and Peliculas Candianes, S. A., are handling the dubbing. In Madrid, Larry Corcoran is turning out Latino versions of the "Adventures of Ellery Queen" group.

AREN'T ENOUGH SPONSORS HANDY

By ART WOODSTONE

There just aren't enough kidvid bankrollers to go around. Syndicators are left with two choices as a result: Either convince adult sponsors that so-called juve vidfilm attracts grownups or else find the type of syndicated package that is obviously tailored for mature merchandising yet able to hold the kiddie dial-bosses during those transitional early evening hours.

Situation has also affected tv station revenue. The confectioners, breakfast cereal manufacturers and soft drink firms—which do the bulk of kid video financing—are almost entirely committed to their network and national spot purchases. And they're so satisfied with the hotshot ratings they pull in, mostly via cartoons but also from packages such as "Little Rascals", and the firmly established half-hour telefilms on network and in syndication, that they're unwilling to change. There doesn't even appear to be sufficient new kiddie underwriting about to handle the flood of new cartoon material that Hollywood has supplied tv of late.)

Overbought

Stations have either overbought the programming that they intended for kid sponsors or else they have nothing to put in the key 100% station revenue area from 6 to 7:30 p.m. It's a troubling fact that a lot of stations, according to their N. Y. reps, are actually earmarking the station breaks during this time for pubserv announcements.

A handful of adult sponsors have been convinced by Syndicators and owners of network tv film that kidvid can also hold grownups, but the number of "converts" among the sponsors is too small to be of significance in the current problem. There are Morton Salt, Minnesota Mining, etc., which ABC-TV made way for

Finding Co-Sponsor For 'Science Fiction Theatre' A Headache for Bromo

The managerial level of Emerson Drug has gotten itself classed among vidfilm salesmen, since the Rx execs frequently get themselves directly involved in pitching cosponsorships for their "Science Fiction Theatre." Of late, toppers of the Baltimore-based company have taken on new headaches by seeking a half-sponsor for "Science" in Boston.

Bankroller has the Ziv telefilm half-hour in 24 markets on a cosponsorship basis. Since these two dozen cities sell about three-quarters of all the Bromo Seltzer that Emerson makes, the outfit doesn't find it feasible buying a network lineup any larger than 50 stations wide (as per "Chance of a Lifetime" via ABC-TV). It also seems likely that the headache pill-maker can't afford the full price of package plus time in the 24 markets, all of which are major markets.

Emerson is in something of a squeeze. While their merchandising problem is not unique, there really aren't too many other bankrollers who have product distribution problems that limit them to big cities. It takes Emerson's own research facilities and those of its agency, Lennen & Newell, to come up with the angles on a co-sponsorship "sales pitch."

Incidentally, Bromo is laying out a tv budget (network, national spot programming and announcements) of approximately $2,000,000 this year.

Telefilmeries Find It Necessary To Plan 16 Months in Advance; Too Many Caught With Pilots Down

Tea Fee

In the now-it-can-be-told department is the fact that the week after he won his Oscar for directing "Marty," Delbert Mann got one of the fattest deals ever awarded a video director, a flat $5,000 for devoting four hours to the production of a series of color commercials for the Tea Council. Leo Burnett agency, handling the Tea Council business, agreed to the $5,000 fee for the two-day, four-hour job as consultant-director the morning after Mann got his Oscar; he did the job the following week at ATV Studios in Long Island City, with no one less than Norman Felton handling the actual direction of the blurbs. Official Films agented the deal for Mann.

He didn't get a credit line on the blurbs for all that dough, either.

Television has been aptly termed "show business in a hurry," but for the telefilm industry, it has become a medium of careful planning that's now reached the 16-months-in-advance stage for the development of new properties for the video market. Such is the time limit officially pegged on production-development planning by Screen Gems, one of the top telefilm outfits, while others are working on the same basis, though not on so formal a schedule.

In the latter part of this month, Screen Gems general manager-v.p. Ralph Cohn and sales veep John H. Mitchell take off for the Coast for their annual program meetings. These meets will cover new programs for the '57-'58 season. By way of contrast, Cohn & Mitchell had their '56-'57 Coast sessions in September of '55, only a year ahead of time, while the previous year the time lapse between plans meetings and the new season was even slimmer.

One reason for the longer-in-advance sessions is the fact that Screen Gems, like virtually every other telefilm producer, got caught with its pilots down this spring. Out of a hoped-for round dozen new properties it had planned, the Columbia pix subsidiary was able to complete pilots on only three ("Mystery Writers Theatre," "The Web" and "First Nighter"). Among the problems were production difficulties (what with nine or more series going on the Columbia lot) and the strange selling season this has become, with bankrollers shopping early for new shows but few pilots available for audition.

The meetings this month, therefore, will assure the completion of all new pilot properties by January of next year, according to Mitchell. "We just aren't going to take any chances; we'll have every-

Official Films In Major Expansion; Pact Ray Benson

Official Films, which has been piling up a tidy sideline net via representation of such names as Paddy Chayefsky, Delbert Mann, Fredric March and Burgess Meredith, is planning a wide expansion of its agenting-packaging activities that will embrace representation in all fields including literary, plus packaging for the stage, motion pictures and live and film television series. First step in the new expansion program was the signing of Ray Benson, formerly an associate of John Gibbs and before that an MCA vet, to head up a new Coast office.

Benson will operate in N. Y. with Official exec v.p. Herb Jaffe, who's now turned all his attention to national sales and agentry-packaging, and v.p. Bobby Sanford, who originally started the agency sideline for Official by bringing in his own stable. After a couple of months, Benson takes off for the Coast to get the new branch started by September. First new piece of business in the house since Benson's advent is a representation deal with the Aubrey Schenck-Howard W. Koch Bel-Air Productions, which has been turning out 12 western features a year for United Artists, on a new hourlong western telefilm series titled "Fort Courageous," which starts making the agency rounds next week.

Areas of expansion include increasing the stable of writers and directors—mystery novelists Bill & Audrey Roos have already been added. In the works are packaging arrangements for a couple of Broadway plays next fall, plus packaging deals on motion pictures, along with normal representation for one-shot teleplays and assignments, etc. Also involved will be literary representation. Jaffe, who has moved out of the syndication operation entirely at Official, and Sanford, who is devoting full time to the agency, will continue to head up N. Y. operations while Benson is on the Coast.

Santley's 78 Patti Segs

Joseph Santley flew back to the Coast Monday night (30) upon completion of 78 quarter-hour filmed Patti Page stanzas representing a season's run. Films were shot at the Fox studios in N. Y.

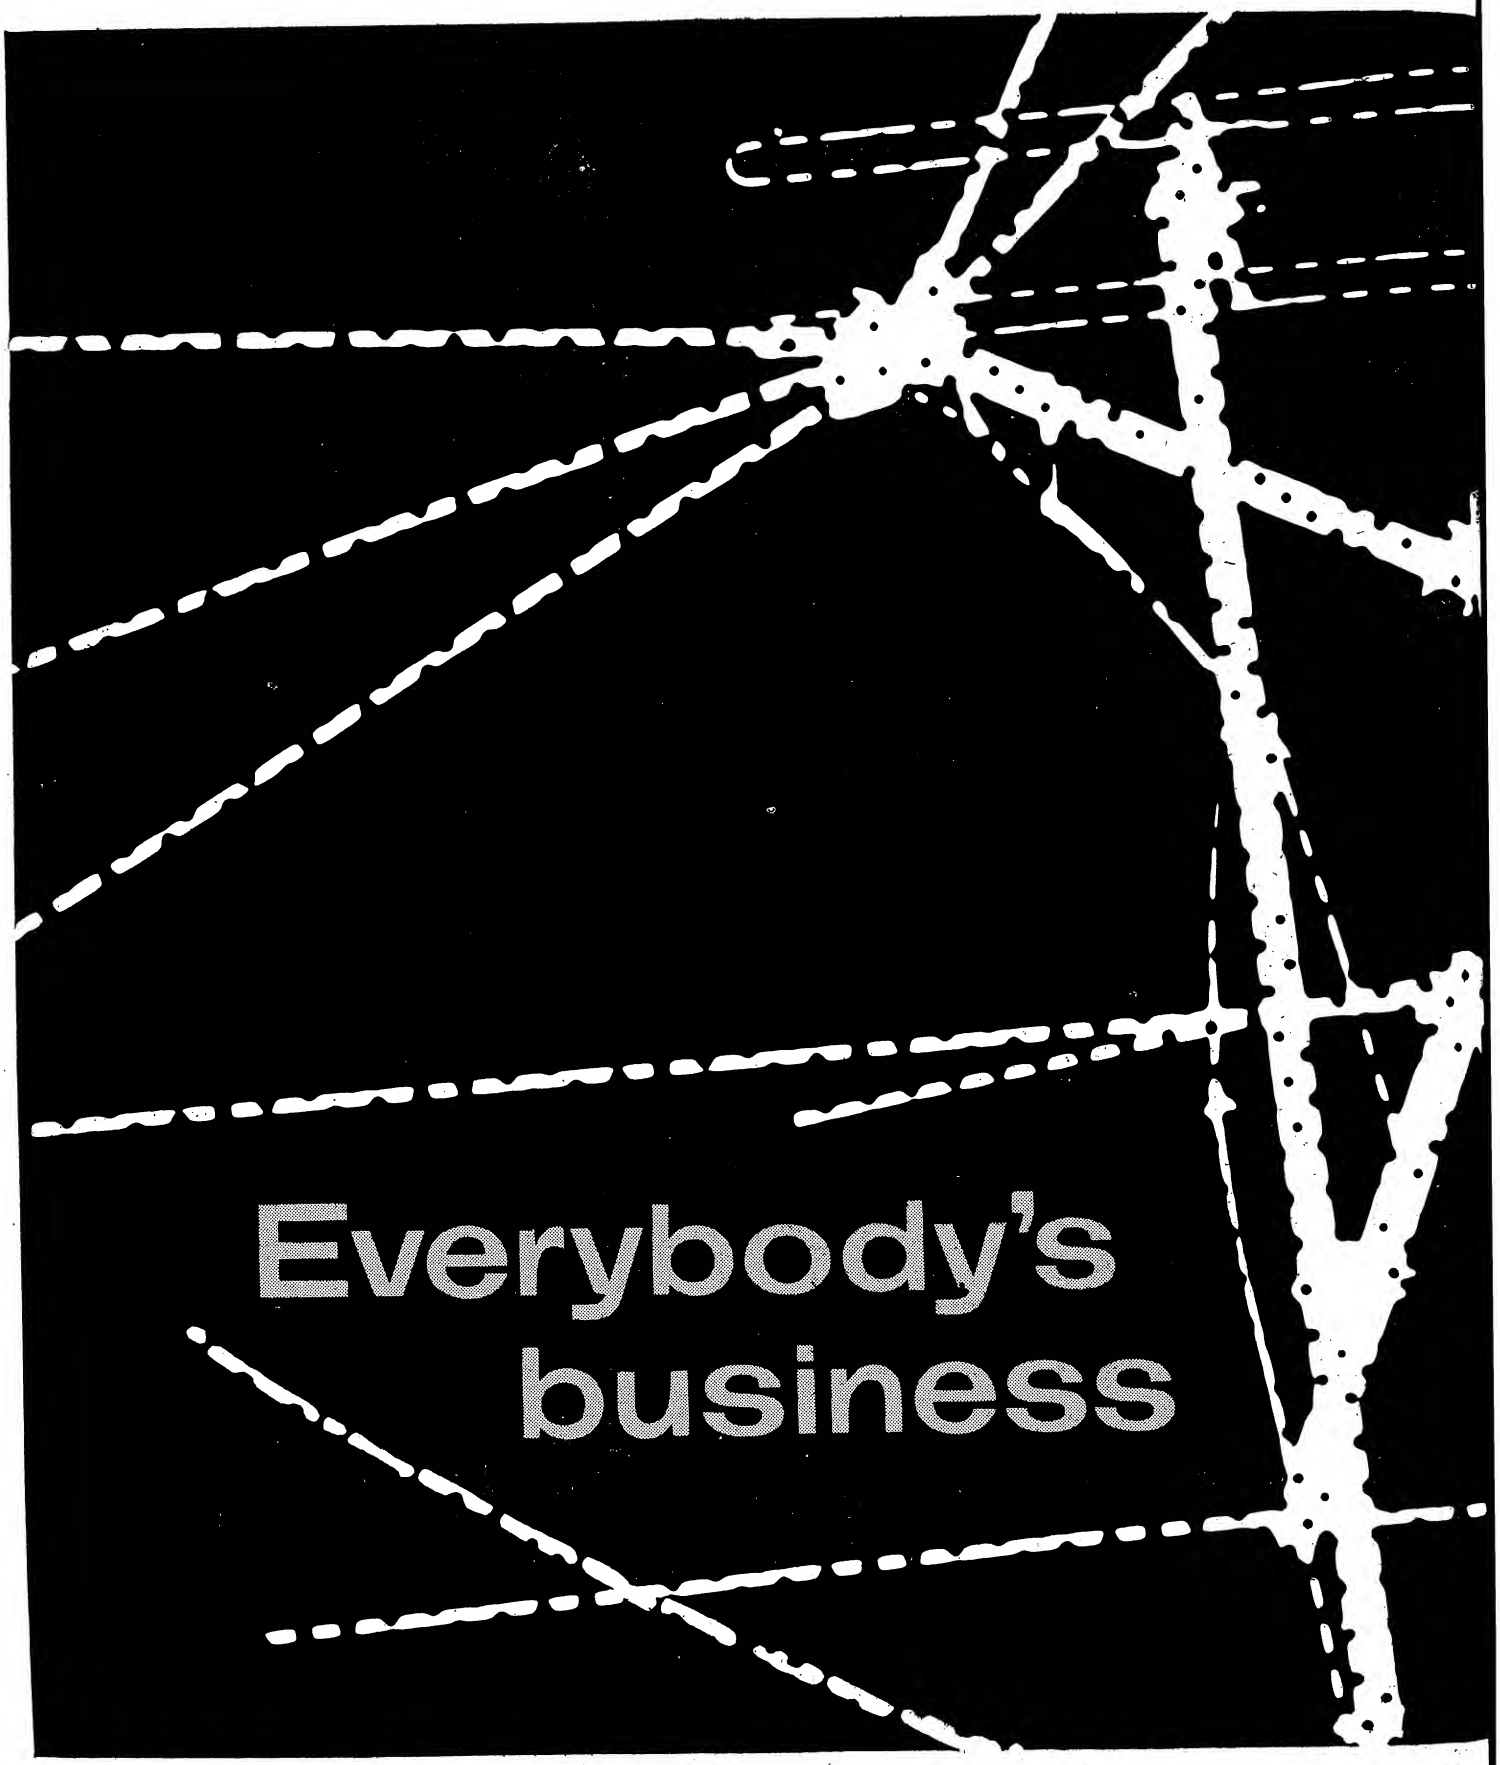
Program, seen on NBC-TV, has been sold for Canada, England and Australia showcasing as well.

Ziv Scouts Ampex On Vidpix Savings

Possible applications to the telefilm industry of the newly developed Ampex video tape recorder will be the subject of a month-long study by Ziv Television Programs, starting next week. Ziv prez John Sinn is in the process of naming a five-man Ziv committee to undertake the study from the standpoints of production, distribution and field applications, with color use another key aspect. Five-man group will comprise two studio execs, two homeoffice distribution chiefs and one field salesman.

Of perhaps chief interest to Ziv in particular is the potential applications of the new tape to color. Ziv has a huge backlog of color negatives (last year's new footage was 72% tint) but hasn't made many tint prints because the cost of the initial release print in color runs as high as $4,000 per half-hour. If the tape can eliminate this high print cost by virtue of an electronic camera setup plus multiple tape playbacks to simulate prints, Ziv would enjoy a huge savings when it's ready to start selling tint.

Other areas of the survey will cover the possible effect of the tape in easing time availability problems on the local level. Ziv is hopeful that with the high-quality tape, stations may feel more disposed to the use of delayed broadcasts of network entries, thereby creating better and more time slots for syndicated shows. Another area of exploration would be that of print life, an examination of whether the more expensive but longer-lasting tape would be more economical than the cheaper but shorter-lived celluloid motion picture prints.



Ironing board covers are just as much at home on network television as automobiles. A small-budget manufacturer of lawn seed thinks of it as a basic medium just as readily as a big-budget manufacturer of refrigerators.

New sales patterns developed by NBC have placed network television within the reach of every category of business. And as these sales patterns continue to free network television from the rigid system of sponsorship inherited from radio, more and more advertisers will be able to profit from its unparalleled impact.

There are more advertisers on TODAY alone than there were on the leading radio network a decade ago. The widely applied TODAY pattern of participation has opened television to many new advertisers looking for flexible, economical, highly merchandisable ways to use the medium. And the Color Spectaculars offer new ways for more sponsors to capitalize on the audience appeal of big 90-minute shows and to begin reaping the benefits of displaying their products in Color.

With programming aimed at attracting all the American publics, and with it pioneering sales patterns, NBC places network television at the service of everybody's business.

TV's Quieting Influence on Mental Patients Seen in Hosp Test; News Low

Washington, May 1.

Television has a quieting influence on patients in a mental institution.

This is the conclusion of the survey just made at St. Elizabeth's, the huge Federal hospital in Washington for mentally disturbed. Comments Dr. Winfred Overholzer, superintendent of the institution:

"It is sometimes difficult to say just what patients think about radio, although, in general, they appear to enjoy musical programs.

"There is no question, however, about their reaction to tv. Young and old, disturbed and quiet, confused and clear alike, take great pleasure in watching tv. It has been noticed that on wards where patients are active, a temporary interruption in tv service is likely to mean an increase in the number of minor altercations and arguments, a fact which would illustrate the value of tv on the wards of a mental hospital."

St. Elizabeth's has 21-inch screen sets scattered throughout the sitting rooms of its wards. Its brand new Dorothea Dix Pavilion provides a television set for each 12 patients, indicating the importance attached to the medium by the institution.

The St. Elizabeth's survey showed that male patients prefer sports events of all kinds, with prizefights and races topping the list, and quiz shows. The women's top choices are People's Theatre, Arthur Godfrey and quiz programs.

St. Elizabeth's has many Negro patients and it is interesting that the most popular single radio show is Elder Micheaux's Sunday broadcasts, among both men and women patients.

The poll takers were surprised to learn that news—on both radio and tv—stood at the bottom of the popularity list. It was explained that patients are interested in news but have plenty of time to read the daily papers—and prefer to have their news that way.

Sponsor identification was virtually nil among the hospital patients. Physicians speculated that since they can't go out and purchase the merchandise anyway, they never bothered with the commercials.

While women shows on both radio and television received few votes among the patients, veteran D. C. telecaster Ruth Crane, who helped with the poll, was recognized by quite a number of the men and women interviewed as "the Ruth Crane on tv."

thing ready by January," he said. Then, if sponsors start their shopping for the fall season in February or March, Screen Gems will be able to come up with the pilots even if nobody else is ready.

What with the accent these days on network sale, Screen Gems isn't alone in its Operation Longrange. Time was when a telefilm distrib could throw a new show on the market via syndication any time of the year. But now with every property first being offered up for national sale and then, if it misses, going into syndication, the timing has become vital. Television Programs of America offers another example; its "Tugboat Annie" pilot, just being completed, has been in the works for two years, ever since board chairman Ed Small acquired the rights from author Norman Reilly Raine. Its "Grand Hotel" is a next-year project, though TPA has had the rights for over a year. A newly announced sea-adventure series, "Shark Malone," hasn't even got a production schedule yet, though scripts are being worked on.

Other examples abound: Ziv has had its "I Love a Mystery" and its husband-and-wife dramatic series on the lists since last summer; Official Films (via Hannah-Weinstein in England) has "Tangier" and "Mr. Pastry" on the drawingboards for months; CBS Television Film Sales is still in the researching stage on its "Sir Francis Drake," which is tentatively set to start shooting this summer.

The vidpix pundits aren't entirely happy about this state of affairs, for competitive reasons. It requires them, for one thing, to be able to call programming trends long in advance, a real toughie for anybody from a network president down. For another, when a certain type of program fare clicks, they can't get in fast enough with their own version. Case in point was "Robin Hood," which Official brought in while already planning two other costumers. Because of the "Robin Hood" click, everyone was high on costume drama, but Official, with its "Sir Launcelot" and "Buccaneer" already in the works, was able to get in first. That's not to say that there isn't some flexibility or that a pilot can't be pushed out in a couple of months if deemed top priority, but in the normal course of business this is becoming tougher and tougher.

in "Mickey Mouse Club," when the web ran short on kid underwriters. A few of this genre have also bought into syndicated shows.

And back to network, CBS-TV took cognizance of the dearth of kidvid sponsors rather early in the game, when it established its 7:30 to 8 p.m. strip as a kid-and-adult mutation, and with partial results among sponsors and in ratings.

One of the sourest situations any syndicator has had to face has been MCA on the Autry-Rogers pix. While the ex-theatrical features have connected neatly in many markets, areas such as N. Y. (via WOR-TV) offer a perfect example of what the lack of kid sponsors has done. WOR ratings are okay in comparison to other syndicated product in or around that time, but the station has had a rough time convincing sponsors that Autry and Rogers or anything like them have a permanent appeal among adults. Carry the whole affair one step further, there are even those sponsors (cigs, beers primarily) which firmly reject adjacencies to kid shows, both because they feel kid show tieups don't provide the audience they want and because of viewer objections to the likes of a cig pitch being alongside a kid show.

Big Adult Audience

Syndicators insist — and ratings bear them out—that many kid stanzas garner a large adult audience, even larger at times than the kid audience for which a particular show is primarily intended. One source, striking an average, said that kidvid gets 30 to 40% of its audience after supper from the kids while the rest of the viewership is adult. In middle-sized tv markets, as noted by ARB in March, sample stanzas from 6 to 7:30 show these audience composition results: "Ramar of the Jungle," Seattle-Tacoma, 26% of total audience are men, 32% women; for adventure shows in the "Soldiers of Fortune" class (which many in the trade consider to be more for adults than "Ramar"), the proportion of adults to kid viewers is about the same. Thirty-percent of the "Superman" audience in Detroit is made up of adults; "Sgt. Preston" a network show has 69% of its viewers in the grownup category. No less than 36%of "Little Rascal" audience in Washington is adult; and for the networked "My Friend Flicka" 68% of the D. C. audience is beyond the gradeschool age. ARB shows that the breakdown pictures in Atlanta and Cincy are comparable.

In the days of "Abbott and Costello" on the syndication mart from MCA, the situation comedy grabbed off some of the finest mixed adult-kid audiences around. Though some syndicators believe that comedy is the vidfilm answer to getting the adult sponsors and at the same time offering enough appeal to kids so that they don't force a tuneout, agencies and advertisers still aren't buying the idea to wholeheartedly. Cowboy series have done pretty well in the mix-'em-up regard too, but, again, the number of for-adult sponsorships remain limited. If neither of those show types is the answer, syndicators are asking: "What type is?"

U. S. Steel Hour

Reports have it that Rod Serling's play on the "United States Steel Hour" last Wednesday night (25) was watered down by the sponsor anxious not to offend any potential customers, presumably in the south. As presented, however, the drama did not seem to suffer from the dilution. In fact, the major defect of the drama was its insistence on driving home its message with a sledgehammer.

Serling had a good message against provincialism, against prejudice and for fair play to all. "Noon On Doomsday" underlined the case for justice with considerable force in a piece that was as much soapbox as drama. The whole thing, however, was carried off effectively by virtue of a pungently dialoged script and excellent performances, notably by Albert Salmi and Everett Sloane.

The locale of the play, New England, was an initial improbability. (Here, an ironic hand must have been responsible for turning the small N.E. town, the cradle of American democracy, into a festering bed of hate and prejudice.) The action involved a town bully who is acquitted of murdering a "foreigner" because the townspeople resent outsiders. Sloane, playing an elderly judge whose son defended the killer, is revolted by the spectacle and finally succeeds in awakening the conscience of his neighbors. Salmi was superb as the drunken brawler. Jack Warden skillfully played a N. Y. newspaperman although the role was farfetched. Other cast members, including Philip Abbott and Lois Smith, also contributed good bits.

Denny Vaughan Show (Canada)

As guestar on "The Denny Vaughan Show," Gracie Fields made her Canadian tv debut on Tuesday (24) via CBS-TV, Toronto, for the full network treatment. From her opening "We're All for One," a marching son, Miss Fields immediately generated on her falsetto and flute-like soprano, plus salesmanship that showed up the rest of the program. Miss Fields, generous with some 15 mins. of the half-hour Lever Bros. sponsorship, instantly revealed why she is a darling of the British music halls, then belting across a medley of new songs that included "All at Once You Love Him," a ballad, and "Don't be Angry with Me, Sergeant," this a rollicking Army song with plenty of purple but inoffensive lyrics.

Her other medley included such oldtime, trademarked faves as "Now Is the Hour," "Walter" and "Biggest Aspidastra," with a finale of "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing" and "September Song." Throughout the style and tempo switches, Miss Fields had no difficulty in demonstrating why she is an experienced songstress, comedienne and actress. She was backed by Rudy Toth's 19-man orch. Other commendables on the first half were Denny Vaughan, current singing craze of Canadian teenagers; Joan Fairfax for a couple of ballads; The Bobolinks, three boys and two girls, for choral work; The Cynthia Barrett Dancers (3).

Pan Atlantic will ditto for South and Central America for tv and theatres and Canada for tv, while International holds theatrical and tv rights for the rest of the world. These three subsids and Western, it's revealed, entered into the $9,994,541 loan agreement which raised the coin for purchase of the RKO library. Proxy statement further discloses that Fox, who had sold Western for 1,000,000 shares plus options on an additional 600,000, now holds a total of 875,000 shares, or in excess of 10% of the outstanding C&C Super stock as of March 31.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Under Milton Berle's NBC pact he gets $300,000 next season for the four spectaculars he plans doing, instead of a regular series.

Death of Sen. Alben Barkley Monday (30) caught a couple of CBS Newsfilm cameramen with their magazines down, but the web alertly made up for the mishap with some exclusive tapes of the circumstances. Web had two of its cameramen covering Barkley's speech at Washington & Lee U. in Lexington, Va., but they were loading new magazines into their cameras just when Barkley slumped over in the middle of the speech.

Not to be caught entirely without material, they looked for covering items and learned that John Jennings, a journalism senior at the university, had been taping Barkley's speech, and they purchased exclusive rights to the tapes. The tapes included his last words, the sound of the fall, the subsequent hush and the off-mike cries of "get a doctor!" CBS piped the tapes into N. Y., where they were used for audio on the Ron Cochran "Late News" on WCBS-TV (video was merely a still of Barkley), after spotting on CBS Radio. "The Morning Show" on CBS-TV yesterday (Tues.) used the tapes too, as did a couple of radio newscasts.

Harry Feeney, who moved over this week from CBS Radio trade press editor to a ditto chore at CBS-TV, was given a gold desk calendar clock from the press staff he departed. An inscription created by Ed Reynolds, manager of the press dept., and which Feeney has not yet seen because the clock is at the engraver's, reads: "To Harry Feeney, who never watched a clock in his life."

Aaron Beckwith, veep and eastern sales chief for MCA-TV Ltd., has been a gratis "consultant" for his alma mater for the past several years, and tomorrow (Thurs.) Syracuse U. is taking official note of the fact. A regular twice-yearly lecturer on radio and tv at the upstate N. Y. college and active in job placement for alumni, the syndication exec (Class of '35) is getting the Syracuse Radio-TV Center award for "outstanding contribution."

Phil Dean Associates has been retained as national consumer and trade press handler for WTOP-plus-tv, Washington, and WMBR-plus-tv, Jacksonville, owned by the Washington Post. Dean, vet network and station publicist, was tapped for the chore by John S. Hayes, prez of the newspaper's broadcast division.

Dean, who'll work out of New York, was formerly exploitation manager of NBC and later its N. Y. owned & operated, WRCA-plus-tv, thence establishing his own p.r. company. He also reps WINS, N. Y.; WVEC-TV, Norfolk, Va.; WWLP (tv), Springfield, Mass., and WTRI (tv) Albany.

A vidfilm in the Christophers series, done by Ray Bolger, will be seen in N. Y. on WABC-TV next Sunday (6). Particular stanza in the regular Father James Keller-emceed series has occasioned extra-heavy fan mail in its playdates elsewhere on video.

In it, Bolger adlibs an explanation of the U. S.'s "Great American Seal."

WCBS, N. Y. flagship of CBS Radio, has latched on to tomorrow's (Thurs.) Broadway opening of "Most Happy Fella" by inaugurating a letter writing contest under the name of the legiter, pegged on which personality the contestants consider "The Most Happy Fella" on the station. Contest will run three weeks, with letters addressed to "Most Happy Station."

AFTRA-SAG Row Coming to Boil In Tape Emergence

Chicago, May 1.

The arrival of the television tape era, as heralded by the premier showing of the Ampex Corp.'s videotaper at the NARTB convention here two weeks ago, is expected to bring to a fast boil the jurisdictional squabble between the American Federation of Radio-Television Artists and the Screen Actors Guild.

With both unions adopting a "no-retreat" stance, the alarm has been sounded that there's trouble ahead until the AFTRA-SAG boundry lines are clearly spelled out.

It's considered likely the issue of which union has jurisdiction over which television "reproduction" process will end up in the lap of the National Labor Relations Board. And there's always the threat that one or the other union will use the strike weapon to backstop its claims.

SAG has already lodged protests with CBS-TV over the recently negotiated "clarification" of the AFTRA network codes which, in effect, gives the latter union control over such electronic filming devices as DuMont's Electronicam used on the Jackie Gleason "Honeymooners." Meanwhile, AFTRA is mapping an appeal to an American Arbitration Assn. ruling which held that that particular show was done in the "motion picture manner" and therefore not subject to the "live" union's claims.

It appears obvious that SAG is ready to do battle over what it considers encroachments in its field in the "rider" recently attached to the AFTRA web codes which gives the radio-tv union jurisdiction over shows "produced or recorded by means of any electronic video equipment (including a combination electronic and motion picture or 'slave' camera) used in connection with live broadcasting or in connection with electronic video recording . . ."

SAG points to its contracts with the Alliance of Television Film Producers and the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers which it claims gives it control over motion pictures "including those made with tape or other electronic devices." Initial Screen Actors' complaint was aimed at CBS as a signatory to the '55 Memorandum of Agreement to the tele supplement of the SAG-Producers Basic Agreement. Union has started a series of high level discussions with the network over the "conflict" in the two pacts with the warning the issue must be resolved soon "to avoid a most serious controversy."

By the same token, now that video tape is a reality opening up a whole new range for the medium, AFTRA assuredly will go all out to "protect" its interests in the "recording" area as laid out in the "clarifications" to the network codes.

At the moment CBS, as a signatory of both the SAG-Producers memorandum and the "clarified" AFTRA code and also involved as the showcasing network of the Electronicam process via Gleason's "Honeymooners," is feeling the first heat thrown off by the intra-union tiff. But with both labor organizations seemingly ready to go to the mat over what each considers a "fundamental principle," the wrangle can be expected to touch other fronts unless a peaceful AFTRA-SAG modus vivendi is found quickly.

Reunion at 30 Rock

It was exactly 10 years ago that Columbia Pictures released its "Tars and Spars" film. In the cast, along with Alfred Drake, were Sid Caesar and Janet Blair. Heading up exploitation on the pic was Al Rylander.

Now they're all, with the exception of Drake, permanently reunited at NBC's 30 Rockefeller Plaza, with Caesar only last week pacting Miss Blair as his femme vis-a-vis next season as successor to Nanette Fabray. Rylander has meanwhile transferred his exploitation allegiance to NBC with the Caesar show as one of his major "babies."

Chi's Hopes High On ABC-TV's Ayem

Chicago, May 1.

Revelation that ABC-TV is prepping a fullscale programming invasion of the morning hours next fall has prompted some hopes here that the Windy City may be repped in the a.m. lineup. It's believed not beyond the realm of possibility, that the web toppers may work Don McNeill, possibly with his "Breakfast Club" vehicle currently SRO on the radio net, into the autumn pulans, especially in view of the fact ABC-TV plans to stress personality "salesmen."

McNeill and his biz partner Ralph Bergsten will be in New York, May 23, when the toastmaster subs for Garry Moore on CBS-TV's "I've Got a Secret," and they have a conference scheduled with ABC prez Robert Kintner. Fact that McNeill is still anxious to "prove his point" in tv after a couple of abortive trial heats leads to the supposition that the subject of his role in the web's tele future will be broached.

McNeill's "Breakfast Club" was simulcasted on the tv network for a year until it ran out of sponsorship gas in February '55. At that time, however, is was ABC-TV's only daytime venture and was "isolated" in its early morning location.

Chevillat & Singer's European Junket As Hypo for 'Great Life'

Dick Chevillat and Ray Singer took off for Europe on a six-week junket to unearth locales for the NBC-TV "It's a Great Life" series. They're writers-producers of the telepix situationer slotted 7 p.m. Sunday, opposite CBS-TV's high-rated "Lassie," and with Chrysler dumping "Life," the job of coming up with another underwriter has been tossed into the network's lap. Chevillat and Singer are under contract to NBC and they'll work up another series while in Europe.

The overseas jaunt by the duo follows by a few days the "go Euroye" trip of producer-writer, Nat Hiken, who's looking over military bases (notably Rome and Naples) for some of next season's installments of the CBS Phil Silvers vidpixer. In the case of "Life," the season's windup on June 3 will be titled "Passport for Amy" with that character headed for the Continent, thus leaving the way open for the show to resume the European thread next season.

Mull 'Down You Go' As NBC-TV Summer Sub

"Down You Go," ABC-TV Thursday night quizzer, is being looked over by NBC-TV as a summer replacement for the Saturday "Big Surprise." Latter's sponsors, Purex and Speidel, are interested in retaining the time franchise via "Go."

Only last week Purex bought a couple of other hot weather niches on NBC, Friday night at 10:30 and Saturday night at 9:30, latter optioned for six alternating shows. No formats are set as yet.

More agency hopping is anticipated along Madison Ave.—and because of something that was hardly an important consideration to bluechippers until recently. Lacking confidence in their present agencies to handle adequately tv spot's growing importance, some advertisers are known to be looking around for percenteries hep to this complex half of video.

Apart from maybe a dozen to 15 key agencies in national spot, most of the rest are accused of sloughing off that part of video. Irony is that many agencies go hog wild arranging grandiose network purchases when the work that goes into buying via coaxial doesn't require anywhere near the attention to detail, the knowhow or the manpower that national spot does, say observers. (It was only a few weeks ago that bankrollers made public their gripes about having to pay 15% to agencies for network shows, since this kind of agency function require little effort.)

National spot expenditures were rapidly gaining ground on the $119,000,000 grossed by network tv in the last quarter of 1955, with nearly $104,000,000 of its own, according to Television Advertising Bureau. So literally millions of dollars have been disbursed recently by agencies in behalf of clients, yet the majority of hucksters turn handling of national spot biz over to $5,000 to $9,000 a year employees, while the veeps and other key agency personnel devote practically all of their time to the glamor side—networking. Media executives range from occasionally intense to mostly casual in their attention to time buying. Regular buyers, it's believed, are generally left to their own wiles in implementing spot purchases.

Two basic reasons are felt to be the cause of the weakness of most agencies in fulfilling national spot needs of their accounts. Restless advertisers are after agencies strong in their ability to find good spot vacancies on tv stations and in their ability to devise palatable commercials which will "sell" on a local level for as long as a month or two at a stretch, since it's less feasible to change the content of a spot commercial as often as with a network pitch.

Overhaul Traffic Depts.

The agencies with the smooth-functioning traffic departments, able to get the tiny commercial reels to stations on time and certifying that the pitch is destined for the right slot, is in demand. Also a key factor in the imminent reshuffling of agencies is that most of them have failed to develop their own version of a "station relations department." Two years ago, agencies such as Ted Bates and Y&R began organizing internal groups to romance tele stations, in order to get clearances for spot advertising; even today, when national spot time is supposed to be so tightly bound up, it's unequivocally stated by insiders that if you're on topflight terms with station management excellent spot time can be cleared with no trouble.

The fallibility of depending on ratings along in determining where to place national spot coin is well known, so the agency "station relations" serve another function besides buttering up the station boys for a better deal. In their travels, these roving "good will ambassadors" also get a chance to look in first-hand on which stanzas are clicking where.

A point in the argument that so few agencies are equipped to turn out an entertaining and influential spot commercial is the observation that of late so many agencies have been plagiarizing the much-talked-about Harry and Bert commercial for Piels out of Young & Rubicam. Until lately, national spot commercials were generally given little original treatment and the copycatting is taken as a sign that Madison Ave needs an overhaul in the creative copy departments. The percenteries with the spot plusses are the very ones the unhappy underwriters are after.

CHAMPION!

Make a list of the fastest-moving Westerns in television, and you're bound to include Annie Oakley, Range Rider, Gene Autry and Buffalo Bill, Jr.– all produced by Flying A Pictures. And now there's another Flying A thoroughbred– The Adventures of Champion, starring Champion the Wonder Horse... the story of a wild stallion, a boy and his dog in lawless cattle country.

One of the best-known animal heroes in showbusiness, Champion has been featured in more than 100 television programs, 85 motion pictures, all of Gene Autry's tours and Championship Rodeos... and in Champion comic books with annual sales of more than three million copies!

On the CBS Television Network, The Adventures of Champion clocked a 17.9 rating at 7:30 pm*– a neatly balanced audience of 26% men, 29% women and 45% children. Which bears out Billboard's evaluation: "Champion is solid entertainment... excellent production... over all, the kind of fare that parents can sit down with their children to watch!"

The kind of fare you'd do well to look into... by calling CBS Television Film Sales, distributor of the fastest-moving films in television.

Filmways Sets Own 'Tailored for TV' Opticals Dept.; See Wide Tint Use

First New York producer of television commercials to sport its own fullscale, made-for-television special effects department is Filmways Inc., which has purchased the first new Oxberry Optical Printer. New machine, which costs about $25,000 and can provide up to 100 different special effects plus new accomplishments in color opticals, will be used by Filmways for its own production but may also be employed by Filmways for an optical service for the industry.

Up to now, virtually all commercial producers have used the half-dozen or so major optical houses in N. Y. to create their special effects in commercials. A couple of producers have some equipment of their own. But Filmways, with the purchase of the new Oxberry unit from Animation Equipment Co.—machine gets its first public display at the Society of Motion Picture Engineers convention this week at the Statler, N. Y.—becomes the first fully equipped producer with optical facilities under its own roof. Moreover, most present optical equipment is tailored for motion picture use, with the special effects running two feet or more, often too long for the quickie 30-second or 60-second commercial. Aside from the variety of different opticals, Filmways will be making shorter—one and one-and-a-half-foot opticals. Moreover, opticals have a growing importance in television because many commercials use them extensively, since the blurb itself is supposed to be an attention-getter.

Machine's greatest possibilities, however, lie in the field of color, according to Filmways exec v.p. Martin Ransohoff, and Sid Greene, who recently jointed Filmways as head of animation and special effects after a 25-year span in the field that started with Warner Bros. and has embraced several top firms in the lab and special effect fields. They point out that the new Oxberry unit is the first which is able to provide enough light intensity to permit the use of the variety and effectiveness in special effects for color that is already available for black and white. Because special effects essentially involves taking another picture of a positive print, light loss sometimes makes opticals impossible and always makes them difficult in color. New machine has a lamp housing unit and a lens combination that provides enough light to overcome this obstacle, they say.

Filmways is currently negotiating an agreement under which it will provide optical service to a limited group of other producers. It would provide the optical "mats" either on a library basis or on a rental arrangement. Filmways, incidentally, has claimed other "firsts" to its credit: the first specially-built camera car in the east, the first new rear-screen projection unit in the east, and the first N. Y. producer to set a reciprocal servicing arrangement with a Coast production outfit, in this case McCadden Productions.

Sterling Expands Vidfilm Catalog

Sterling Television now has distribution rights to the George Raft vidfilm skein, "I Am the Law," which MCA-TV has handled for the past couple of semesters. "Hollywood Preview," the Halsan Production, also goes over to Sterling. It was formerly distributed by Flamingo Films.

There are 26 half-hours in the "Law" package. "Preview," with Conrad Nagel hosting, is produced on a weekly basis.

Sterling has made the first sale of its complete package of short subjects to WABD, N.Y. Labeling the 2,000 shorties as the "largest library" of its kind for video, Sterling wrapped up the entire list in a new catalog, to kick off the "one-big-package" sales scheme.

'Code 3' Regional Sales

With signing of National Biscuit Co. to a regional alternate-week buy in the northwest, ABC Film Syndication put its new "Code 3" series on the regional syndicated market on a national basis. ABC enters the field with about 30 markets already sold, via Liebmann Brewery, Signal Oil and Nabisco sales, all in the west except for a couple of eastern cities taken by Liebmann. Opening of the series for sale followed last week's annual sales meeting in N. Y. of ABC Syndication's field force.

Nabisco took on the series alternating with Signal in Seattle, Spokane and Sacremento, but is clearing time in additional markets for the show, which is produced for ABC by Hal Roach Jr. and Ben Fox.

Ziv's Down Under 8-Show Upbeat

Ziv's International Division invaded Australia with a vengeance last week, selling a total of eight shows Down Under, six of them to commercial telecasters and two to government-owned channels. International chief Ed Stern then proceeded to the Philippines where he sold three Spanish-dubbed series to DZAQ-TV in Manila.

Six-show deal, covering "Man Called X," "Highway Patrol," "Mr. District Attorney," "Cisco Kid," "Boston Blackie" and "Times Sq. Playhouses," was set with Amalgamated Television Services Pty. Ltd. for Sydney and Melbourne. Australian Broadcasting Commission deal for two shows covered "Science Fiction Theatre" and "Favorite Story." Three Philippine entries are "Highway Patrol," "Science Fiction" and "Favorite Story."

JAY SMOLIN EXITS NBC TO JOIN HYMAN

Next week Jay H. Smolin ankles NBC Television Films to take over as overall chief of promotion, publicity and advertising for Eliot Hyman's Associated Artists Productions, company with video rights to the Warner Bros. feature film backlog. Smolin was director of sales promotion for the NBC arm.

Paul Kwartin, who a few weeks ago was scheduled to take the new Smolin post, will continue as head of AAP's national sales unit instead. Carol Levine continues as director of publicity under Smolin.

NBC's Coast Telepix Facilities Expanded

Hollywood, May 1.

In move to concentrate production of pilots and series under his own aegis, NBC is taking over four stages at California Studios on a yearly rental. Thomas Sarnoff, NBC-TV director of production and biz affairs here, closed the deal. Film department manager Fenton Coe will supervise the studio activity.

As yet, it hasn't been determined which of the net's filmed shows will move to California lot at Melrose and Bronson, but Sarnoff indicated that "Life of Riley" and "Medic" may be among them. NBC-TV's telepixing activities are currently scattered among Goldwyn, Roach and General Service studios. Sarnoff added that other of California's nine stages may be acquired on a rental basis, if available and needed for future series, should pilots sell.

ALAN LADD'S 'BOX 13'

Hollywood, May 1.

Alan Ladd's Jaguar Productions, which produced the "Box 13" radio series three years ago, is planning to make a telefilm series from the property. While Ladd will produce, but not appear in the video version, he starred in the pilot film, already in the can. He'll seek an unknown for the continuing role of "Dan Holiday."

ABC-TV is reported interested

12-Market Sale Of 'Crusade in Europe'

Unity, the Jerry Hyams vidfilmery which reactivated "Crusade in Europe," the series which played on ABC-TV about five years ago, has sold the skein of 26 20-minute pix in a dozen markets in the past three weeks. Produced by March of Time for 20th Fox, vidfilms were based on the Eisenhower book of the same name.

Hyams released the package at the NARTB convention. Unique-lengthed show has been picked up by WABD, N. Y., and XETV, San Diego, among others.

Gotham's 'Battle Of the Features'

With NBC-TV cutting away the "Howdy Doody" show 5:30 weekdays and returning the 5:30-6 p.m. half-hour to the stations, its N. Y. flagship, WRCA-TV, is moving into a feature film operation that will cut across rival WCBS-TV's two feature shows, "Late Matinee" and "The Early Show." New feature showcaser, airing cross-the-board at 5:30-6:45, will be called "Movie Show Time" and will have deejay Johnny Andrews as host.

Station isn't contemplating the acquisition of any new feature product for the segment at this point, but will use product it already has under contract, mostly Motion Pictures for Television features. If more product is needed, it will go into the market for it at a later date. "Movie Time" replaces "Howdy," along with syndicated film and some live audience-participationers. It cuts directly across the WCBS feature shows, since "Matinee" runs 5 to 6 and "Early Show" 6:15 to 7:10 p.m., with news in between. New WRCA-TV show starts June 4.

WPIX BUYS 112 'FOUR-STAR' SEGS

In a deal with Official Films, WPIX has pacted for 112 half-hour "Four-Star Playhouse" reruns in N. Y., beginning next fall on the Daily News-owned outlet. Actually, Official acquired 153 "Playhouse" pix in its recent Four Star Productions deal, but Fred Thrower, boss of the tv station, is only taking those in the series that star Dick Powell, David Niven, Ida Lupino and Charles Boyer.

Thrower doesn't plan to pick a time for the series until later in the semester.

'Secret Mission' Into Syndication for NTA

National Telefilm Associates has acquired distribution rights to "Secret Mission," series of 13 half-hour adventure dramas based on incidents in World War II and is placing this series, together with its new Lilli Palmer-hosted "Theatre" drama series, on the syndication market for regional and local sale.

"Mission" had been produced on the Coast by Films for Television of Hollywood Inc. and been taken over by producer Jack Skirball, who made the deal with NTA. "Theatre" is the anthology series produced in Britain by Harry Alan Towers, with Miss Palmer hosting what are for the most part plays based on classic stories. Stars in the latter series include Flora Robson, Wendy Hiller, Marius Goring, Margaret Leighton and Eric Portman.

'Kid Alley' Series Set

Hollywood, May 1.

Thirty-nine stanza comedy teleseries featuring an all-moppet cast, "Kid Alley," will be the first project of the newly-formed Joyce International Picture Inc., with Al Joyce and scripter Jay Ingram co-producing.

Shooting on three half-hour pilots will tentatively get underway within three weeks, according to Joyce, with Jodie Copelan, who recently finished directing the "Sky King" teleseries, essaying like duties on "Alley." Joyce disclosed a nationwide search for moppet talent between six and twelve-year-old age bracket, for the series.

TONIGHT A SHIP WILL SINK in the icy waters of the North Atlantic.

She will go down by the bow—with a gaping wound in her side—the most luxurious of all luxury liners.

Tonight, it is again—April 14, 1912. It is "A Night to Remember," the night the Titanic went down. And you will see it happen.

The response to this epic drama . . . as performed on the Kraft Television Theater 5 weeks ago . . . was unique in television history. Within five minutes of the end of the show, telephone switchboards at NBC network stations around the country were jammed with calls demanding a repeat performance.

The book, "A Night to Remember," was written by a member of the J. Walter Thompson Company. It was adapted, cast, produced and directed by the J. Walter Thompson Company for the Kraft Television Theater.

Bringing the Titanic's last hours, live, to TV was a task of almost unbelievable complexity. In the hour-long show were 133 episodes. There were 100 camera cues in the first act alone. There were 107 actors—almost all of them had lines.

You can see it again—tonight—on the Kraft Television Theater. NBC Channel 4 at 9 o'clock.

European TV

pily, this is not so. By screening audition episodes, one soon learns that 'Life of Riley' may be liked in Switzerland but be a total loss in France; that 'The Falcon' may be rejected in Switzerland but be well received in Belgium. Practically speaking, it would seem necessary to cover one's cost of dubbing in one market, and perhaps make a small profit; and then rely on picking up such additional revenue as might be possible in other countries having the same language."

Documentaries

On markets for special programs:

There definitely would be a market in Europe for documentary series like "Victory at Sea" or for special shows like "Assignment: India" or the recent NBC show of the Antarctic, provided these could be supplied with natural sound and music, plus a written script capable of translation into the language of the country.

None of the European tv services can afford big undertakings like "Assignment: India" or other shows of this type. But they would be anxious to include such documentaries in their program schedules if they could be made available by someone like NBC. It is recommended that consideration be given to the cost of supplying 16m reduction prints in black-and-white, plus written scripts, for use in Europe.

Program Exchange

On exchange of programs:

For a number of years, NBC has been an associate member of the European Broadcasting Union, the only U. S. network so identified. This has created enormous good will toward NBC and has opened the way for cordial reception of any proposals for exchanging programs. One possibility, already being explored, is that of originating a "Wide Wide World" show on Eurovision in the autumn of 1956. There is no reason why this should not be pursued further; and any ideas along these lines would be well received by members of the EBU.

It is thought probable that live pickups from the Soviet Union and elsewhere behind the Iron Curtain may be feasible within a year or 18 months. The Russians are understood to have extended their network to Polish frontier, and it only requires a link across Poland to make Eurovision as East-West affair.

Iron Curtain

On the Iron Curtain:

Eastern Germany is busily pumping Communist tv programs over the border into Western Germany, and in some areas of Western Germany no other programs can be received. However, the Communists are preparing to block any regular flow of tv programs in the opposite direction. Executives of West German TV Service report that wooden towers with jamming equipment are springing up all along the frontier, like an electronic picket fence. These jammers have not yet been used, but they appear to be ready when needed.

Commercial TV

Breakdown of commercial tv:

Because most countries prohibit telecasting except by their national services, it has been necessary to establish commercial stations in principalities like Luxembourg and Monaco or in the autonomous Saar. Hence we have: 1. Tele-Luxembourg, reaching 20,000 sets in France, Belgium and Luxembourg; 2. Tele-Saar, reaching 2,000 sets in the Saar and French Lorraine; and 3. Tele-Monte Carlo, reaching 5,000 sets, mostly in the south of France.

It is likely that the Dutch Parliament will authorize commercial tv in Holland on the pattern now existing in Great Britain. If affirmative action is taken within the next few months, Holland may have a commercial station on the air by the middle of 1957.

Some possibility also exists for commercial tv in Germany. What form this will take is yet uncertain. It may begin experimentally with one hour daily of commercial programming on the existing German TV Network.

Elsewhere, the likelihood of commercial tv is too remote to be worth discussing. (Wheeler breaks down Tele-Luxembourg minutely as to power, set ownership and distribution, weekly programming hours (32) and composition, rates for spots and sponsorship, etc., as he does also on Tele-Saar and Tele-Monte Carlo.)

Belgium

There's a section devoted to each country. This begins with Belgium, of which the main values are:

About 85,000 sets and increasing at about 7,000-8,000 per month. Eventually, 1,000,000 receivers, against current 2,000,000 radio sets. Three transmitters, at Brussels, Liege and Antwerp, with others to follow but dates uncertain due to controversy on high or low power. Two national tv services in effect, one for French, the other for Flemish. No tax on sets, which cost between $250 and $300 for 14-inchers. License fee may be imposed. No commercial tv and no visible agitation for a competitive service. The two national services program about four hours a day, six days a week, but with overlapping on the other's day off, operation spans seven days. About 50% of French service piped in from Paris live. Three film features every fortnight — French films or dubbed into French. So far, only two U. S. tv film series, "Kit Carson" and "Captain Gallant," both dubbed into French.

Flemish programs about 40% on film, including two feature-length movies per week, and has used several U. S. tv series. They are happy with subtitles, since the Flemish-speaking people have grown used to them at their local theatres. Among series televised have been "I Am the Law," "Soldiers of Fortune," "Ramar of Jungle," "All Star Theatre" and "Fabian of the Yard." They are buying 26 episodes of "Steve Donovan, Western Marshal." Standard price paid by each of the Belgian TV Services is $3 per minute of screen time. They have agreed to pay $100 per episode, however, for "Steve Donovan," plus all costs of subtitling. Policy is one run only. Reaction to such programming is favorable. Remittances to U. S. are not limited and there are no currency controls. Usually possible to arrange quarterly remittances, as the films are used. No taxes imposed on contracts made payable in New York.

Denmark

Danish tv seems likely to expand rapidly in the next few years. Sets, about 18,000, but increasing at 2,000 per month, with expected maximum 350,000 in about eight years, against 1,300,000 radio sets. Viewers pay $7 for tv license. Sets —all built in Denmark—cost about $280, of which roughly one-fifth is tax. Program schedule is 10 hours weekly, consisting of three live, three home-grown film and balance live remotes or film acquired from external sources. Program composition divided about equally between artistic, discussion, actualities and light entertainment. Foreign films never used unless dubbed into Danish. Subtitling unsatisfactory. No. U. S. tv films have yet been shown, but havev taken specimen episodes from Screen Gems on "Rin Tin Tin" and "Ford Theatre" for experimental dubbing. Will run on closed circuit first. No currency restrictions. Likelihood of sales in Denmark not great.

France

Rapidly expanding but firmly in a government mould. Operated by Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise (RTF), which in turn is controlled by Ministry of Justice and other departments. About 350,000 sets licensed at $12.85 annually, with monthly rate of increase pegged at 10,000. By end of this year, 450,000, and by end of 1957, 700,000, with 1,000,000 mark expected in 1958. Eleven more stations being built this year, six more next year, eight in 1958 and nine in 1959, for eventual total of 45. Large number of "television clubs"—single sets that serve a whole village.

Programming, about 44 hours weekly, with about 12½% on film, from six studios, two in Paris and the others at Lille, Lyon, Marseilles and Strasbourg. Where film used, dialog must be in French. Few U. S. films aired, largely on dubbing problem. "Kit Carson" fairly successful last year. Also bought "Captain Gallant," but decided this was unsuitable for use in France because of locale and plot. Understood that prices of these films dubbed in French were between $750 and $1,000 per episode, for one run. Columbia Pictures dubbing 13 of "Rin Tin Tin" into French, for about $1,120 per episode. There would be little remittance in U. S. dollars, since dubbing costs now run about $1,000.

Western Germany

Probably the most rapidly-expanding tv service in Europe is that of West German Republic and eventually may also be the wealthiest. Tv license $20 a year. About 350,000 sets, 800,000 by year's end, 1,000,000 by Easter of 1957. Thirty transmitters authorized, 21 in operation. Hamburg produces 46% of network programming, Munich 18%. Each station organizes its programs independently. Strong emphasis on live, and films almost invariably old German movies, documentaries or foreign pix dubbed into German. In Northwest Germany, only two U. S. films have been shown, one on Nevada, the other on the Grand Canyon. No anxiety to increase use of film or hours of programming, latter averaging three hours weekdays, four Sundays.

Said a German executive: "We do not want our people wasting as much time as you do in the United States. Television has a place in showing sporting events, cultural programs and educational activities. But presently we do not plan more than about four hours of television transmission daily."

Church and educational groups are powerful in curbing broadcast time. German tv executives tend to discourage potential film suppliers by quoting standard rate of $370 for one network showing of a 26-minute film. However, Screen Gems recently sold a number of dubbed "Rin Tin to Sender Freis Berlin (for network use) on experimental basis. Understood price about $1,800, but costs of dubbing (done in Berlin) borne by Screen Gems. Dubbing high, generally between $1,425 and $2,380 for half-hour. Some station managers interested in American films, if dubbed, particularly Berlin and Baden-Baden, but most executives argue that it is uneconomic.

Programming tends to be heavy stuff—over a week a viewer may see four plays, an opera, five lectures combining instruction, talks and cultural movies; several light talks, a ballet, two puppet plays and a newsreel televised every other day. Numerous features on Germanslet themselves go with German customs and folklore. On Saturday evenings, the Germans let themselves go with two hours of light entertainment.

Asked if tv might not eventually reduce the number of radio listeners, a German tv executive replied, "Oh, no! We have considered that. When we have something on the radio which we think people ought to hear, we simply won't program an alternative on television."

There's agitation for commercial competition, but some officials of the German Service believe that by the time competition arrives the present service will be so strong financially that they can crush the upstart by outbidding on talent and program material.

Sale of film held to be on a regional basis, by contacting managers of individual stations; but sale to one would be equivalent to a sale to all since that station would network the series.

The world's most complicated system of operating a tv service exists in Holland, outgrowth of even more complicated pair of radio services. Basic programming setup of two and a half hours daily, four days a week. Apart from full-length movie, only about 10% of programs are film, including children's newsreel in which material is obtained by exchange with other Eurovision countries. This kind of programming has won little from the average viewer. About 70,000 sets, increasing at 1,000 a month. There's a real prospect of commercial tv, with application being made for network charter similar to that of Great Britain. No taxation of remittance problems on contracts made with foreign firms.

Switzerland

Still on experimental basis here. About 12,000 sets, 60% in German-speaking area, 30% in French-speaking and 10% in Italian-speaking. Despite language difficulties and most mountainous terrain of Europe, sets growing at between 600 and 900 a month. There may be as many as 400,000 eventually. Swiss TV Service programs about 14 hours a week, with no service on Tuesdays. A few U.S. telepix series have been sold, but only those dubbed into French. Swiss liked "Mr. District Attorney" but cancelled "Favorite Story" as "too American." Now running "Rin Tin," dubbed into French. Payment at rate of $390 for 26-minute film.

Swiss don't like sentimental films, westerns or films of violence like "Dragnet." Children's programs are expected to be purely educational. Any suggestion of programs like "Hopalong Cassidy" in afternoon time are met with grim laughter. (Swiss children are forbidden to go to any movie house until they are 16.) Possibility of commercial tv discussed occasionally, but not regarded as likely development, largely because of agitation from newspaper owners. No taxation or currency problems.

Cooperating with Wheeler in the survey were these from NBC: Leif Eid, Paul Archinard, Frank Bourgholtzer and Gary Stindt.

Parisians Still Refuse to Take Their TV Seriously Despite Big Set Sales

Paris, May 1.

Last week a strike kept the leading Gallic video program, Jean Nohain's "Trente Six Chandelles," off the air. It's long been held as being responsible for theatrical patronage slackness. A check showed that even without this program the theatregoing was still low. All this may be coincidence and statistical error, but it again points up the fact that tv is still not the monster to other adjuncts of show biz as yet. The French still like to go out and prefer cafe gab and live shows to the little screen, but the climbing set sales and operations by the state controlled Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, plus the privately owned periphery stations beaming into the border territories, denote that within a year tv will be something to be reckoned with.

At present the RTF tv output is centered in Paris in one building at Rue Cognacq-Jay with six studios and nine cars for traveling outside programs. Twenty transmitters now service about 50% of France tied up by 38 relay stations with 42 hours transmission per week. The RTF hopes to cover all of France by the end of 1957 when the true impact and effect of tv should be known and felt. Number of sets are up to about 700,000 and are expanding rapidly. RTF recently had its leading animators refraining from doing any programs for competing outside tv setups as Tele-Monte Carlo, Tele Saar and Tele-Luxembourg.

The French, with their 819 line screen, probably have the best definition extant but still have a long way to go in the filling in of these lines with taking programming. The aforementioned "Trente Six Chandelles" is a biweekly feature in variety format that has caught on, but its production values and sight and sound timing still need plenty of proper handling before it is really a highgrade entry. Other biggie is Henri Spade's three-hour biweekly "Joie De Vivre" which takes one star or personality and delves into his life and feeling in mixing it up with production numbers and visiting friends of the personality. Spade has a feeling for bringing out the character of his visitors and this is unusally a spontaneous-seeming show.

Many other variety shows, live plays, interviews, news vidpix and films fill out the rest of the time on tv here. Other enterprises, such as Eurovision linking up eight Continental countries, also attest to the building aspects of tv which in the next few years should become a big "something for nothing" spec entry even though State controlled. Talk of commercial television is a long way off here, if ever. Experiments have been made in color but this too is still unsatisfactory in output and the difficulties of converting present sets or replacing them is also a main problem.

Video sets are still somewhat too expensive for the average worker and many tele clubs have been set up in smaller towns where tv is shared since it is usually put in the local schoolhouse for the children during the day and for the adults at night. Cultural and educational programs, since it is state controlled, are also very important factors of video here. However, the advances and the mounting sales of sets, plus the approaching complete saturation of Gallic territory by tv beamings, will soon tell the story of its place in the show biz hierarchy. So far most other forms of entertainment are not worried yet and feel sure that it will never bring about the far-reaching effects it produced in America on the film industry. This is conjecture and 1957 should begin to shed light on this.

TV Pedagogs Have Their Problems

Not every good teacher can become a Dr. Frank Baxter with a comfortable network tv berth as well as regular classroom chores, but there are a lot of pedagogs who divide their time between straight educational tv and schoolroom duties, and they're having their troubles. "Talent" has become a problem for the academicians since more and more schools and colleges get involved in educational video, so the Educational Television and Radio Center, in Ann Arbor, surveyed management of 10 educational tv stations for answers to these questions:

How much time should teachers spend working in tv? Should they also try to carry a normal work load? How should they be paid for their video efforts?

First off, the schools serving the 10 tv educationalers involved in the poll believe they're responsible for supplying teachers for tv courses and lecture series. Faculty performers are not paid by their schools in either time off or money for guest one-shotters on tv'ers. But, as a rule, a teacher's classroom load is reduced proportionately to the time he devotes to rehearsals and on-air exposure when he's a tv regular. Or at least that is the case at seven of the 10 schools polled.

Ten managers also report that when teaching loads cannot be reduced, tv "talent" is paid above regular salaries. Two exceptions were found where schools pay regular tv salaries rather than first try to cut work loads. A third institution reported no fixed policy, and that its faculty "performed" on a purely voluntary basis in spare time.

Big point is that "educational stardom" for a tv teacher may influence promotions for faculty members at one of the schools.

More coin for teachers on video is being applied for via Ford Foundation. It recently stated on this aspect of educational tv by opening grants of $37,000 over three years to alleviate the double-duty problem.

Set Regional Auditions On 'Mickey Mouse Club'

First of about 10 regional auditions for kid talent for Walt Disney's "Mickey Mouse Club" series gets underway this Saturday (5) in Newark, with Bamberger's Dept. Store handling the auditions. A second series of auditions has been set for the Hecht Co. in Washington, date still to be announced.

In-store auditions will be followed next Saturday (12) by a "junior spectacular" on WABC-TV, the ABC-TV flagship in N. Y., with eight to 12 of the moppet finalists participating on the show, to be emceed by Jimmy Dodd, leader of the "MMC" juve group, the Mouseketeers. Same pattern will be used by ABC affiliates around the country, each of them kinescoping its local show and sending the prints to the Disney studios for final selections of winning talent. Winners get a trip to California and a guest shot on the show.

MYSTERYTIME
(Mike Malloy, Private Eye)
With Steve Brodie, Betty Lou Gerson, Bobby Jordan, Sam Edwards, Tom Hubbard
Producer: Al Gannaway
25 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7:30 p.m.
ABC, from Hollywood (transcribed)

In a retreat from the unsuccessful "New Sounds" pattern, ABC copped a page from Mutual Broadcasting's workbook by stripping a quintet of mystery shows. The technique has been one of Mutual's more successful participation advertising gimmicks. It might work for ABC too, but the network marred its chances by beginning the 7:30 entry on Monday (30) with a bad "Mike Malloy, Private Eye."

Steve Brodie, as Malloy, in a live production from the Coast, simply didn't adjust to current whodunit tastes, sharpened and sophisticated by the Jack Webb-"Dragnet" quasi-realistic school. The Malloy character, the hard-boiled-with-heart-of-gold type grunted out long monologs in monotone, occasionally exchanging whiplash remarks, such as "Well, what's up?" and "This trip's homicide," with other characters in search of a plot. Nobody got upset in this stanza: even as this sexy-voiced gal phonied up a casual murder confession, she was making love to Malloy; after Malloy escaped death by a hair's breath, he had time for easy contemplation about the effects of a lighted cigaret thrown in a gasoline drum.

The network, establishing Clark Andrews as exec producer of the five-night-a-week layout, has picked "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," as the Tuesday nighter (with John Gielgud and Ralph Richardson), "Masters of Mystery" (live N. Y. production with help of Ronald Dawson and Robert Alan Aurthur) on Wednesday; "Mystery Classics" (Harry Alan Towers production) for Thursday, and "Police Blotter" (live N. Y. show scribed by Ira Marion and Sheldon Stark). Art.

CBS Radio Workshop

Music presented on "The Record Collectors" Friday (27) via the CBS Radio Workshop was well worth dialers' attention but the accompanying commentary left much to be desired. Obviously script writers William Woodson, Larry Thor and Lou Houston thought they had a fresh approach to an old subject when they concocted two pompous windbags who professed to be experts on oldtime disks.

"Dr. Vincent Arbogast," described as a breeder of giant frogs, and "Titus McFatridge" waxed eloquently on the merits of the platters of yesteryear as contrasted to today's hi-fi recordings. But their silly comments served to intrude upon the musical portion of the airer instead of enhancing it. "Arbogast" was portrayed by Howard McNear while Houston essayed "McFatridge."

Fortunately, "Record Collector" partially redeemed itself with such fine bits of recording memorabilia as Nora Bayes' 1919 waxing of "The Village Vamp" and Margaret Young's 1922 platter of "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans." Miss Young was on hand to intro her niece, Margaret Whiting, who provided a contemporary touch with her cutting of "I've Told Every Little Star" from "a recent LP album I did for Capitol" (plug, plug). Another interesting guester was composer-conductor Lyn Murray. Gilb.

Pauline Frederick Show

Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., U. S. delegate to United Nations, said that radio and television are doing "a good job" on covering the UN, in a transcribed broadcast with Sylvester L. Weaver Jr., NBC board chairman, and Pauline Frederick, over the network Wednesday (25). Quarter-hour opened with the reading by Weaver of the citation awarding Miss Frederick McCall's "Golden Mike" for 1956, as the outstanding woman in radio and television.

The trio engaged in an interesting round-table on how the United Nations—which Miss Frederick called "the world's No. 1 story"—could be more effectively presented to the public. Networks' only woman commentator raised the specific question; what can be done to make the non-controversial and often unanimous actions of the UN reportable on an equal-position basis with murders, fires and other news-arresting developments? After commenting that no editor would want murder or arson committed to accelerate the sales of papers, Lodge praised present UN radio and video coverage. Weaver revealed that he had attended the first UN meeting, at San Francisco, "as a sailor." He was so impressed with its potentials that he made a trip around the world after discharge. Jaco.

'Make Up Your Mind' Going Off CBS Radio

Art Henley's "Make Up Your Mind" morning show on CBS Radio goes off after the May 18 broadcast after a three-year run on the web.

Henley says show is moving to another web but is withholding further details until finalization of plans.

JIM HILL REPORTS
Producer-director-writer: Hill
25 Mins.; Sun. (22), 9:05 a.m.
JACUZZI PUMP
WCCO, Minneapolis

Jim Hill, WCCO farm director, was delegated by the U.S. Agricultural department to accompany Ruth Marie Peterson, Minnesota dairy queen, to Japan's World Trade Fair to help promote American dairy products sales as its exhibit there and throughout the nation. His trip was the subject of this interesting audio report that engrossingly and trenchantly included his observations, experiences and viewpoints.

WCCO prides itself on the size of its farm audience and the services which it performs for agriculture, and this program proved to be right in that groove. While Hill described the Japanese scene and customs in some detail, giving general interest to his recital, he particularly elaborated on Nipponese dairy farming. This latter undoubtedly struck a responsive chord with rural listeners in this big dairy belt.

Hill emphasized that Japanese dairying and plants are largely obsolete in comparison to American standards, that the Japanese were eager to learn of this country's methods and that Miss Peterson was received and treated regally. He commented on the people's friendliness and the shame still felt because of their leaders' attack on Pearl Harbor.

Among other things, Hill brought out that Japanese cows and dairy plants are kept scrupulously clean, but that the milk goes into dirty pails exposed to the sun for hours. Because of the resultant high bacterial count the milk is pasteurized at an extremely high temperature and emerges with a cooked taste.

There's much poverty, farms are as small as two acres, herds comprise as few as two cows, a prosperous farm family's income is $1,500 a year, diets are extremely simple and no people probably work harder, Hill related. Rees.

CONVENTION DIGEST
With Allen Gray, others
Producer-director: Val Linder
Writer: Gray
30 Mins.; Thurs. (19), 8 p.m.
WCCO, Minneapolis

Probably for the first time, a digest of a trade convention, in this instance the Minnesota Food Retailers Association's 60th annual meeting, was made into a transcribed radio program. And because it concerned the handling and selling of food and was presented in the well-organized staffer Allen Gray manner, it undoubtedly held considerable interest for the average consumer tuner-in as well as those storekeepers who didn't attend the convention, but obtained helpful tips thusly.

In tape recording the entire convention, attended by 2,500 grocers, and then compressing the highlights into the 30-minute show, WCCO achieved something out of the ordinary that stood on its documentary entertainment feet, thanks mainly, perhaps, to Gray who conducts the station's Housewives' Protective League which is sponsored by products sold to housewives. For many dialers who have never attended a trade convention it must have been enlightening. And for the average householders there were shopping hints.

Included in the digest were excerpts from various talks on merchandising, promotions, inventory controls, pricing, turnover, ways to make stores more attractive and successful storekeeping generally. There also were snatches of convention routine otherwise. All was put together neatly. Rees.

eliminate present numerical restrictions on station ownership and substitute a "more realistic" control, based on population served, by a group or chain of stations under single ownership. This would open the door to competing networks and small market stations, said Bricker.

In a chapter devoted to "superstations" with large area coverage, the report stated that the leading tv station in New York made $8,206,000 profits, before Federal taxes, in 1954 which was more than 16 times its reported net investment as of that year. The second N. Y. station, it said, had $6,086,000 profits, or more than 16 times its net investment.

Highlights of the report:

1. CBS and NBC and their eight owned and operated tv stations realized profits, before taxes, in 1954 equivalent to 46% of the profits of the entire tv industry with its four networks and 410 stations.

2. CBS and its three o & o outlets had profits equivalent to over 28% of the entire industry profits.

3. NBC and its five o & o stations had profits equivalent to more than 17% of the industry.

4. The two webs and their o & o stations had profits in 1954 equivalent to 99% of their reported investment. CBS profits were equivalent to 108% of its investment, NBC's to 87%.

5. Profits of CBS o & o stations in 1954 were equal to 370% of their total investment; profits of NBC's five o & o outlets were equal to 297% of their investment.

6. Network operations alone of CBS, exclusive of its stations, earned $13,101 in 1954, before taxes, or 65% of its investment. NBC's network operations, exclusive of stations, earned $4,017,000 or 28% of its investment.

7. CBS and NBC networks, together with 73 of their affiliate stations in Zone 1 (northeastern U. S.), had profits, before taxes, in 1954 of $90,600,000, "an amount exceeding the total $90,300,000 net income for the entire industry."

8. Profits of large network affiliated stations in 1954 alone ran as high as 1,834% of their reported investment.

Unless Congress acts "forthwith and forthrightly" to correct this "unhealthy" situation, the report concluded, the possibilities of developing a nationwide competitive tv system in the U. S. will be seriously hindered.

Robt. Sarnoff

Magic Flute," Sadler's Wells Ballet, etc., Sarnoff said they showed what could be done only by a network in carrying quality programs to the mass audience.

"Yet," he said, "this nationwide network service is less than a decade old. Considering its youth, its record of progress, I believe, is impressive. No other program source and no other medium can approach the scope, variety and volume of daily services provided by networks.

"Television as a national communications system cannot advance by aping Hollywood, nor by confining itself to stereotype programming. Its greatest strides have come through the development of its own techniques. Networks have also pioneered in the technical development which has advanced the broadcasting art and industry.

"With color ahead, with scores of new and fine programs in the planning stage, with increasing public acceptance of our product, I believe the future of network television is immeasurable."

Harold E. Fellows, NARTB prexy, emceed for the speakers including the late Sen. Alben Barkley and Sen. William E. Knowland, Lawrence Spivak, poet Robert Frost, and NBC vice president Frank M. Russell.

Also offered were a film on highlights of "Meet the Press" over the year, and a gagged-up show, with a double talk guest who was introduced as Prof. Farnsworth, of Harvard, a foreign affairs expert.

In the audience were 31 Senators, 150 Representatives and numerous ambassadors and others who have been on the show one time or more.

Jane Pickens' Taped Reports From Abroad

Jane Pickens, like Buff Cobb a couple of weeks back, is going to make with a European jaunt with a proviso for some pocket money along the way. She and her husband, William C. Langley, set for a tour of Europe via the Continent's inland waterways, have set a deal with NBC's "Weekday" and "Monitor" for a series of taped reports plus whatever spot news they pick up.

Reports, which start on the two AM'ers May 21, are Miss Pickens' first husband-and-wife try. Pair are to tour the waterways of Holland, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Germany and Sweden on their own yacht, Cotton. They planed to Amsterdam over the weekend to board the yacht, first making arrangements with foreign legations here for government cooperation abroad. Also in the works are interviews with top government officials in each country.

San Antonio — Ray Miller has been named news and program director of KTSA here. He comes here from KELP, El Paso. Miller will assume his new duties when Gordon McClendon formally takes over KTSA. The sale is pending FCC approval. McClendon also owns KELP.

uled as a political showcase. Harris kept the politics to a minimum, tossing in only one or two references to his—the Liberal—party and staying well in his role as the federal cabinet's finance boss. With less vital topics, production will have to work in more showmanship although how a dry gab session can be prodded to life will be a problem.

CBC is keeping as far away from production on these shows as it can, confining itself to technical matters such as camera movement and selection, lighting and studio facilities and leaving the rest to the party officials. Conlon, for example, was not a CBC choice as interviewer and is not a CBC staffer. He was selected by the Liberal party office from an advertising agency (Cockfield Brown) for the chore. CBC set down basic rules for the series including speakers, interviewers, discussion, quizzing is okay if the party takes responsibility for them, what they say and how they are identified; films, slides, music, animation and photographs are not allowed; all shows must be live. The Canadian Broadcasting Act bans dramatized political airers.

This series may turn out to be the 1956 version of the old political oratory meeting, sans shouting, free meals and dramatic buildup. It's tame fare, but it gets the facts across briefly and relatively painlessly. There will be 10 shows, ending Aug. 10. Gorm.

THE OHIO STORY
With Nelson Olmstead, others
Producer: Stuart Buchanin
Director: Ray Cully, Cinecraft
10 Mins.: Sun., 3:20 p.m.
OHIO BELL TELEPHONE
WJW-TV, Cleveland
(McCann-Erickson)

For an educational-entertainment offering, this 10-minute weekly segment packs a healthy wallop of information and production. Woven around incidents and events on the Ohio scene, and with Nelson Olmstead scoring as the narrator, the filmed package can also be tagged a "public service" presentation in its exposure of significant happenings on the Buckeye scene.

In the last two stanzas caught, "The Ohio Story" presented a film report of a trip aboard a lakes freighter, thus highlighting a vital avenue of Ohio industry, while in the previous week the show told the story of Tom Ewing, who started as county prosecutor and eventually became U. S. Secretary of the Treasury. An all-star cast of professionals from the Play House added to the dramatic effectiveness of "The Prosecutor." The filmed commercial, voiced by Ted Malone, was neatly integrated into package production by Stu Buchanan. Mark.

DESIGN IN EVERYDAY THINGS
With Bob Anderson, Tom Kines
Writer: Ed Rollins
Producer-Director: Michael Hind-Smith
30 Mins.; Fri. (20), 1:45 p.m.
CBC, from Ottawa

First in Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s new series of live telecasts to grade schools came off very well, despite cramped studio. Michael Hind-Smith's direction was skilled and perceptive, and production generally effective. Ed Rollins provided him a very good script, but it might have had a touch more humor.

Show, done in collab with the Canadian capital's Design Centre, aimed at interesting students in using their brains and taste when making and buying things. A pair of teenagers—quite well played by Kay McBurney and George Bloom, local high-school students with some acting experience—are choosing a wedding gift for their teacher. They meet an understanding salesman, who steers them off some bum choices—using the boy's football as an example of good design—and introduces them to a designer. He gets them thinking and talking, eventually tells them they've helped influence his ideas. They wind up buying a well-designed vase and still have enough money left to fill it with roses. Then a brief blackboard-style sum-up with commentary.

Bob Anderson, local indie film producer, and Tom Kines, pro singer-actor, played salesman and designer with moderate warmth and ease. Former was occasionally unctuous, though, and latter a bit stiff in movement. Miss McBurney appeared to have no makeup whatever, and therefore looked drab. Gard.

ting that he wasn't repped on the sound medium any more.

Short and snappy were the speeches of Red Barber and Ed Murrow, as befitting their pro attainments. Barber thought radio might go into a big spurt as tv tapered off. Murrow opined that dummies are "funnier and more interesting than people." Silvers was doing his chore by ear, saying that tv was a "wonderful function and I'll try to enjoy it soon." Peter Lind Hayes (& Mary Healy) reminisced about Bergen and Vallee, terming the latter the "mentor" and said that his seven-year-old son thinks radio is the new medium since for him radio "came out at the same time as tv." Another speaker was Arthur Hull Hayes, prexy of CBS Radio.

Robert J. Burton, president of RTES, served as toastmaster and did a runthrough of the dais for the bow-taking—J. L. Van Volkenburg, prez of CBS-TV; Howard G. Barnes, program v.p. of CBS; Don Durgin, veep-in-charge of ABC; Hubbell Robinson, CBS-TV exec v.p.; Robert A. Schmid, v.p.-director of Mutual; David A. (Sonny) Werblin, v.p. of Music Corp. of America; Morton Werner, NBC v.p.

Bergen wound it up with snappy one-liners, going into high gear after bringing on McCarthy. Bergen said CBS calls Silvers' show "You'll Never Get Rich" but that NBC "calls it by the next line." McCarthy kept hurling payoff insults at the photog up front to bring the howls. Bergen wound up with an RTES plaque reading: "This award is presented to Edgar Bergen upon the occasion of his 20th anniversary as a star in radio broadcasting. His varied and creative talents have made a permanent contribution to the development and advancement of radio. By bringing wholesome entertainment to the American public for two decades he has made his name and those of his 'associates,' Charlie McCarthy and Mortimer Snerd, beloved in every household."

the purchase of KEYD radio for $35,000. And WCOW, a daylight operation, has taken over the MBS programs relinquished by WDGY.

Under their new Crowell-Collier ownership, WTCN-TV and Radio will continue their ABC affiliation. Also, Bitner, who sold his interests to CC, and Miller Robertson will remain as president and general manager, respectively. Few, if any, other personnel changes are anticipated. However, Dan Menard comes on from Pittsburgh to be the new KEYD-TV general manager, replacing Robert Pursell.

Pursell was brought here from California last year. He'll head the group buying the KEYD-TV radio end.

While all these upheavals have stirred up much local conversation there's no gainsaying that KSTP and WCCO, local NBC and CBS affiliates, respectively, continue to be highly profitable operations.

'Discussion' Series Set for WRCA-TV Bow

"Discussion," roundtable program dealing with subjects of current interest, will be aired on WRCA, N. Preemer will have Jimmy Powers, sports columnist and commentator, Al Schacht and other sports authorities giving opinions on "Has Baseball Gone Theatrical?" Leon Pearson will be the moderator.

Other topics to be discussed include: "Should I send my child to a private school?" "Will we ever solve the traffic mess?", "What's wrong with Broadway?", "Is rock 'n' roll' a musical menace?", and "Is New York a good place to visit but a poor place to live?"

"Discussion" will be directed by Cal Darnell. Steve White is producer.

Plattsburg, N.Y.—Since George BarenBregge left sales at WABD, N.Y.C., to take over as topper at WIRI-TV here, plans have been underway to change the NBC-ABC affil call letters. As of yesterday (Tues.) station became WPTZ.

Political Pressures on Pay-TV and the opposition got in its licks, Pastore's political instincts began to regis'er. While Marcus Cohn, counsel for the exhibitors' Committee Against Pay-to-See, was testifying, he interrupted to say, "I tell you very frankly I don't know whether this thing will be allowed but if it is it will have to be regulated."

Later, during Salant's testimony for CBS, he interrupted again. "The impression I'm beginning to get," he observed, "is that the best programs will drift to pay-tv and that the public will get (free) what's left over."

Afterward, when he was questioned by reporters, Pastore said he would reserve his opinion as to whe'her he would recommend to the Committee that it request the FCC to issue an immediate decision on the pending subscription proceeding, as urged by the proponents.

Politically, the opposi ion to subscription seems to carry a case of potential dynamite which members of Congress can sniff. Among the anti-forces were the AFL-CIO, the vast organization of radio-tv dealers throughout the country, various women's groups, the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, the National Federation of Music Clubs, etc.

Under the circumstances, it appears highly doubtful that Congress will take affirma'ive action on the subscription issue. But in view of the allocation situation, it is unlikely that the legislators would interfere with an FCC au'horization to try out the service in a selected market, as proposed by Ray Kohn of Allentown, Pa., to determine whether pay tv can provide the economic base for new stations to establish themselves.

Grand Junction, Colo. — KFXJ, operated by Rex Howell, will get a new set of call letters on the celebration of its 30th anni, May 1. New tag will be KREX and the companion tele station, in operation two years, will be known as KREX-TV. Old call letters will be retained by Howell. They'll be affixed to the new station firm is opening at Montrose, Colo.

"It distresses all of us who have known radio in its good days, and its glorious moments, to think of its being debased, and to see it sink into the blaring, senseless mediocrity of the juke box. For the quick-buck boys who have never thought much ahead of the next spot announcement, this may be hunky-dory. They had just as soon sell old bones as fresh flowers. But to the rest of us, this does make a difference, and only as we make a determined and intelligent effort can radio have any significant future. I am absolutely convinced that this job is ours, and ours alone. I think that for the most part the public and the advertisers have developed an almost apathetic attitude toward radio. They will accept it as long as it is not offensive to them, but they have not sufficient inherent interest in it to initiate or enthusiastically support any attempt to revive or improve it."

"So with this situation staring us in the face, "what do women need to keep pace?" I should say, first of all, a completely realistic approach—the intelligence to realize that radio, as a medium and as a business, has changed materially, and the courage to face up the full facts of that change.

I think that secondly you will need the confidence that although radio is not the glamour business it was twenty years ago, it can still be a well-balanced service for the public and an excellent buy for advertisers.

Thirdly, I think you will need the determination and the ingenuity to keep this great medium lovely and useful."

Fellows' Address

Women broadcasters have special virtues and talents which "commend them for duty in the general area of public relations," Harold E. Fellows, president and chairman of the board, National Assn. of Radio and Television Broadcasters, told the 600 delegates.

Fellows said: "In the first place, they are intelligent and persuasive —or they wouldn't hold the jobs to which they have been assigned. I know it is popular for the average male executive, particularly when making a public appearance before a group like this to say: 'I don't draw any distinction between men and women when they apply for a job. I base my entire judgment upon their native and acquired ability.' Well, I'm not going to say that's a lot of malarkey—because it isn't always true that it is malarkey—but on more occasions than not, it certainly isn't the full truth.

"Let's acknowledge it — it's tougher for a woman to get a job, and harder for her to keep it, in any business or profession today that she may select, with minor exceptions, than it is for a man.

"The situation has been changing over the years, since the time when women were franchised—but it has been an evolutionary thing and not a revolutionary thing — and we have not yet reached that point where equal rights in this respect do truly exist. Therefore, those women who have managed to advance themselves—through sheer determination and application and ability—to positions, such as those held by many of you here in this room, have acquired, along the way, whether they realize it or not, many of the arts and skills of the public relations practitioner.

"These are arts and skills which are badly needed in the broadcasting business today—and I believe you should be no more reticent in volunteering your abilities in this respect to the management of your respective organizations than you are in volunteering such other abilities as you have—in the field of writing, broadcasting, beauty curture, home economics, and the like."

Fellows told the AWRT members that some 400 women comprise approximately 37% of the total FCC personnel. "This is the kind of statistic that has meaning to a station operator," he said.

He pointed out: "Recently, as you know, there have been public utterances to the effect that there should be a nation-wide monitoring system sponsored by government to check up on the program and advertising content of radio and television networks and stations. When responsible people in high places make such proposals, I am sure they do it with a sense of alarm. So, in addition to telling the positive story about broadcasting's great contributions, each of us must bend every effort, day by day and hour by hour, toward making it a greater medium of information and entertainment for the American people."

Gordon Davis' Advice

"Don't be a carbon copy and merely funnel information to your audience," Gordon Davis, general manager KYW, Cleveland, O., told the BMI program clinic at the AWRT convention.

"The station which forges ahead on its own newsbeat far outdistances the ones which just depend on wire services," he said, referring to the latter as "mere electronic channels."

"One can always tell the station that is 'digging' on its own inspiring listeners with dynamic vitality," he said. Davis advised a three-dimensional approach to attain programming depth as the primary key to success.

Emphasizing the basic necessity for warmth of personality for good listenership, he told the distaffers to "Consider yourself human beings.

"Although the broadcaster must be an expert and ahead of the aud, she should not get too far ahead as to leave them behind."

Setting a top-interest showmanship goal, designed for all listeners, rather than a specific group, was advised as the keynote of successful radio programming," Ralf Brent, vice president, WIP, Philadelphia, speaking on "Program and Station Promotion—Public Service," he said.

McCall Awards To Femme B'casters

Boston, May 1.

Seven women received McCall's annual mike awards at the McCall's award dinner at the AWRT convention in Hotel Somerset Saturday night (28).

Pauline Frederick, NBC, New York, was named "the outstanding woman" in radio and television for 1955." Only woman network news commentator in the U. S., Miss Frederick is w.k. for her Monday through Friday NBC radio program, "Pauline Frederick Reporting."

Otis Lee Wiese, editor and publisher of McCall's, presented the mike awards, established in 1951 to focus nationwide attention on public service accomplishments of women in the broadcasting industry.

Two San Francisco women, Dorothy Lee Hansen, KGO-TV, and Majorie King, KNBC, were winners of award honors; Mrs. Hansen for "outstanding service for youth" in the broadcaster category; Miss King as the "Executive performing the greatest service for women."

Other winners were: Vi Stokesberry, WQAM, Miami, Fla., "Executive service to the community;" Lillian Lee, WABE, Atlanta, Ga., "Executive service to youth" for a project submitted by the Atlanta Chapter of AWRT; Maggi Byrne, WNKB, Cleveland, "Broadcaster, service for women;" Joan Crowther, WNHC-TV, New Haven, Conn., "Broadcaster, service to community."

Miss Crowther was the first New England winner in the five years the awards have been in existence.

Miss Frederick, daily NBC news analyst and correspondent to the United Nations, was named for the top award for her "ingenious and competent reporting and more important, for possessing the courage to say what she believes."

Nancy's 'Count Sheep' Mated With 'Asleep'

Nancy Berg's "Count Sheep" crossboarder on WRCA-TV, N. Y., at 1 a.m. will be mated starting Monday (7) with another capsule lullaby, "When the Children Are Asleep." It'll run to 1:10 under psychiatrist Gerald J. Taylor, who'll deal with viewer questions on problems of modern living and child rearing.

"Asleep" will be sound recording over still and motion pictures. Producer is Ted Nathanson and director is Jim Elson.

into the neighborhoods and 'shout it from the housetops.'

"Through the project, we can associate ourselves with a particular area, work with the people in the community and showcase their amateur talent side by side with our WGN performers."

In this instance ticket distribution will be handled through the high schools in the Yards area, tied in with the Council's campaign spotlighting the positive side of the teenage picture. Thus the "good will" angles for WGN are many-sided with plenty of opportunities for productive two-way promotional hookups with the various neighborhood groups around the town.

FBI Looks Into TV 'Monopoly,' Too

Hollywood, May 1.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents have begun a probe in Hollywood of charges made recently before a U. S. Senate Committee that the tv networks are "monopolistic" in their practices. The charge was made by KTTV boss Richard Moore when he testified before the Senate group, and echoed later here by Dick Powell, owner-producer-star of "Four Star Productions."

Powell's angry charge that the networks are courting antitrust action came after his vidfilmer's Four-Star Playhouse was taken off CBS-TV, to be replaced next season by the web's new "Playhouse 90" series. FBI agent John Cashel questioned Powell regarding the network violations of monopoly laws, and Powell reports "I told him I only knew for fact that our show, Four-Star Playhouse was taken away for the show CBS wanted to put in. I told him I thought the networks were courting monopoly suits with such actions.

"FBI agents are around-town talking to everybody, I understand. They are gathering what evidence they can regarding the truth of charges of monopolistic practices, checking to see if monopoly actually exists in network operations," said Powell.

Contacted for details, John F. Malone, special agent in charge FBI office Los Angeles, commented "the Bureau not in a position to confirm or deny" details of investigations underway.

ton, comes the day when they can dust off their "back in business" shingle, it remains a moot point whether the agencies will welcome any such restoration of program control. Strictly from a standpoint of economics, there will have to be a radical upgrading of that 15% commission from the client to justify the added creative manpower burden. Just bringing in those commercial "productions" alone, they'll testify, is a man's sized job and a drain on all existing creative personnel. A lot of the % houses frankly concede they'd just as soon let well enough alone, even though it means foregoing control.

That any such divorcement will create an unprecedented upheaval and realignment (not to mention a whole new way of life, bookkeeping and otherwise) for the networks is a foregone conclusion. What it will mean in terms of maintaining programming standards is anybody's guess. Even staunch pro-agency champions readily concede that, with the networks' know-how, coin and talent and creative manpower availabilities, it's NBC and CBS primarily who deserve the major credit for sparking the spectrum with tv's most provocative and entertaining shows.

Frank Cooper

sold an original to CBS-TV for its "Playhouse 90" for next fall, reportedly for some high coin. New in the Cooper stable are Dave Greggory and Milton Pascal, with their first new scripting chore being the Johnny Carson daytimer on CBS-TV.

Just signed for representation on the writing-producing-directing end are Walter & Peg McGraw, who just completed the pilot of "New York Confidential" for Television Programs of America; Ray Allen and Harvey Bullock, scripters for Robert Q. Lewis for the past five years; and Paul Tripp, the "Mr. I-Magination," who is currently doing production-scripting chores on the WCBS-TV, N. Y. "On the Carousel." Cooper office has also optioned Metopera basso Cesari Siepi for a projected series being developed by Lou Salamon of the "Wide Wide World" production team and Henry Meyer, author of "Signora," novel slated for Broadway production by Rodgers & Hammerstein. Also new to the Cooper writer stable are Lester White and Johnny Rapp, writers for Bob Hope.

New clients at the talent end, for video representation, include Phil Spitalny and the Hour of Charm, the comedy team of Gene Wesson & Gordon Polk (currently at Ruban Bleu, N. Y.), Robert Strauss, Donald Cook and Bill Stern. New producer client is Irving Pincus.

Loretta's New Cycle

Hollywood, May 1.

Filming on next season's NBC-TV "Loretta Young Show" is slated to get under way again at Goldwyn studios on June 11, with Miss Young, currently vacationing, returning to the lot in mid-May to start preparations.

In new pact with sponsoring Procter & Gamble, the anthology series has been extended to 45 weeks, from present 39.

ABC-TV Sets Granik's 'Women Want to Know'

Theodore Granik, long associated with NBC-TV with his pubservice packages, has set a deal with ABC-TV for a new political paneller, "Women Want to Know," an obvious followup to his "Youth Wants to Know." New series has been signed by Coty for sponsorship and is set for a Tuesday night 10:30-11 ride on the network starting May 15.

Faye Emerson will moderate the series, with Toni Gillman and Virgilia Peterson likely to be permanent panelists.

WATV's Nightly Sports Show from Al Schacht's

WATV, the video station across the river from N.Y. in Newark, is contemplating an hour-long nighttime sports show as a remote from Al Schacht's eatery in Manhattan. Irv Rosenhaus, boss of WATV, is understood to be on the verge of a deal with producer Joe Roberts, who is also an executive for International Boxing Club.

Roberts, it's reported, has signed Journal-American sports editor Max Kase to emcee the nightly participating stanza. Aside from live guest shots and gab, sports film will be included in the Monday-through-Friday program. If the deal is inked, it'll be the first nightly remote done from across the river by the Jersey-based operation. Time tentatively set for "Sports in Review" is 11 to midnight.

Froug Named on Coast

As indicated last week, William Froug has stepped into Guy della Cioppa's shoes as CBS Radio's programming director on the Coast, along with the v.p. stripes held by Cioppa. Latter moved into the tv sphere as Hollywood programming chief in the shuffle involving Jack Rayel (named exec producer of "Ford Star Jubilee") and Harry Ackerman, who departs "Jubilee" as special projects chieftain to incept his Ticonderoga Productions.

DISKS' LONG-PLAY SECURITY

Copyright Office Into DeSylva Case Vs. Widow, See Early High Ct. Ruling

Washington, May 1.

Affecting a key copyright problem in the music business, the U.S. Supreme Court is expected to hand down a decision sometime in June in the George G. (Buddy) DeSylva case. Hearings before the court were concluded last Thursday (26) after lawyers for the opposing sides presented verbal arguments, each lasting about one hour. In addition, organized segments of the music and motion picture business offered briefs as amicus curiae (friends of the court) in an effort to reverse a lower court decision which affected the entire show biz pattern of dealing with the heirs of authors. The Copyright office, however, also filed a brief with a contrary stand.

Case is the involved legal tangle between Marie DeSylva, widow of the late DeSylva, and Stephen William Ballentine, DeSylva's illegitimate son. Action originally was brought by the boy's mother and guardian, Marie Ballentine, in Los Angeles in 1952.

High Court has been hearing an appeal, taken by Mrs. DeSylva, of a Court of Appeals ruling last year which granted the boy equal rights with Mrs. DeSylva in the vast copyrights now held in the name of the estate.

Ramifications of the action are so widespread that the Motion Picture Assn., the Music Publishers Protective Assn., the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers and Songwriters Protective Assn. contending that any change in the presently established procedure would be unworkable. Defense, however, has been strongly aided by a brief filed by the Copyright Office, which recites

New Wave Of TV Plug Tunes

A new wave of tunes getting the video plug treatment has now begun. Johnny Desmond, who starred in the "Robert Montgomery Presents" show Monday night (30), plugged a tune, "Please Don't Forget Me, Dear," which he also wrote and published. Coming up Sunday (6), on the NBC-TV "Frontier" series will be an oatune, "A Somewhere Voice," after which the half-hour drama is titled. Tune was written by Peter Cadby and is published by Lou Levy's BMI firm, Duchess Music. The flip of the above Desmond number, "A Little Love Can Go a Long, Long Way," also from a tv show on the "Goodyear Playhouse," is also showing up strong.

Another disk company-tv promotion tieup has been worked out by MGM Records and ABC-TV's "Star Time" for the Rosalind Paige waxing "Have Faith and Have Patience."

Thrush will star in the series' May 24 stanza in a teleplay based on the song. Diskery will have the platter on release around the country in time to cash in on the plug.

Ben Grauer, Riverside, Into Spoken Word Wax

Bill Grauer Jr. and Orrin Keepnews, head of Riverside Records, are setting up a new firm, Modern Voices Inc., together with Ben Grauer, the radio-tv announcer, who will be exec producer of the new operation. New firm will specialize in LP versions of important literary and dramatic works, including voices of writers. Platters will be distributed through Riverside, which specializes in jazz and folk music.

The two Grauers are cousins. Bill Grauer and Keepnews also have produced "an encyclopedia of jazz" platter series for supermarket merchandising.

Advertising Pays

Irwin Luck, the 19-year-old Miami student who rented a billboard on 42d Street, N.Y., to get one of his songs auditioned and recorded by Perry Como, has finally come up with a disk. But not by Como.

Luck's tune, "The Whistle Song," was cut by Stan Rubin's Tigertown Five last week. The young cleffer paid $850 for the billboard space. In order to recoup that coin from the sale of disks at the writer's share of 1c. per copy, Rubin will have to sell 85,000 disks of Luck's number.

Paxton Sets New Co. With Estate Of Dick Whiting

Publisher George Paxton has wrapped up the renewals on the late Richard Whiting's tunes. In a deal firmed last week on the Coast with the Whiting estate, Paxton formed Richard Music to hold the renewal copyrights as they come in. Paxton and the estate will partner in the new firm. The estate comprises songstress Margaret Whiting, her sister Barbara and their mother. A previously reported dicker via Hill & Range apparently fell through. It is also not made clear if the lyric writers' rights have been cleared by Paxon.

The new firm will kick off with 13 Whiting tunes. Among them are "Sleepy Time Gal," "Horses, Horses," "Ukulele Lady," "Honey" and "Precious." A flock of other Whiting tunes will be available to Richard Music within the next five years. All the Whiting songs will automatically go into Richard except those that are in litigation and those with other contractural obligations.

Also available to Paxton for the Richard Music operation will be several Whiting melodies never before published. Paxton plans to assign lyricists for the various tunes.

Whiting died in 1938.

Victor Repackages Toscy's Beethoven Set; More Stereo Tapes Out

Arturo Toscanini's limited edition album of the nine Beethoven symphonies, which sold originally for $52.40, is now being repackaged in a general trade edition tagged at $28. Set comprises seven 12-inch LPS.

Victor's longhair department also rushing into release the first recordings of the Russian cellist Mstislav Rostropovich made outside the Soviet Union. He recently debuted in Carnegie Hall. The Victor disks were taped in London.

In the tape field, meantime, Victor is releasing works by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. The tape, in stereophonic form, is being issued before the regular disk version. Four pop tapes, including one jazz set and vocals by Kay Starr, Perry Como and Harry Bellafonte, are also due.

MGM IN DISTRIB REVAMP

In a distributor realignment at MGM Records last week, Sandel Co. was named Minneapolis distrib, replacing Lew Bonn Co.

Other distrib changes are Jack Cannon replacing Marvin Townsend as sales manager for the Cincinnati branch of Sanborn Music, a country singer from Nashville.

BOOST PKGES. AS MONEY-IN-BANK

Record company album production is gaining momentum. Most of the diskeries have already stepped up their release schedules and some are even hitting the market with new packages almost at the same rate as new pop singles.

More erratic state of the pop singles biz is sparking the big swing over to albums. Another important factor in the diskeries' upped album release schedule is the new spinning spotlight they've been getting from the disk jockeys around the country. The platter spinners are giving the new LP product more spinning time than ever before and on some stations, the albums are starting to take the play away from the pop singles.

In line with this deejay concentration on album product, the disk companies are expanding their album service operation and broadening their cuffo lists to the disk spinners. A few years ago, the companies sent cuffo albums to no more than 50 key jockeys, now it's expected that the list will go as high as 1,800.

Many diskery execs figure that albums are a safer money-making

Decca Earnings At 890G for Qtr.

Decca Records' profits are continuing to climb. For the first three months of this year, ending March 31, the diskery net earnings amounted to $890,444, including the company's share in the undistributed earnings of its subsidiary Universal Pictures. Net was equal to 55c per share on the 1,602,501 shares outstanding.

In the same period last year, Decca's earnings were $816,339, equal to 50c per share on the same number of shares.

GLEN GRAY TO RESUME BATONING FOR CAPITOL

Hollywood, May 1.

Capitol Records is bringing Glen Gray out of retirement to resume on disks. Vet batoneer has signed a term contract and will come to the Coast shortly for the first recording sessions, which will be made under his old billing of Glen Gray and the Casa Loma orchestra.

At one time one of the best known pop leaders in the business, Gray has been living in the east for several years. His sessions for Capitol will be produced by Dave Cavanaugh.

Coast label also has signed Martha Lou Harp, vocalist, who'll work out of New York with recording sessions to be produced by Andy Wiswell.

Crosby Cuts Decca Set Under New, Unsigned Deal

Hollywood, May 1.

Although the contract has not been officially signed, Bing Crosby has completed the first album turned out under the terms of his new deal with Decca. Package probably will be for fall release. It consists of a dozen standards, woven together by a special idea which the label isn't discussing.

Crosby has continued to record for Decca despite the expiration of his old deal. All details of the new agreement are understood to have been settled and formal signing awaits only the drafting of the papers.

Decca Inks Two

Decca Records has augmented its artists roster with two new signings.

Diskery inked Bob Harman, a Virginia pianist, and Joan Hager

EMI, Lou Levy Split Rights To Russian Tapes

With a flock of topflight longhair instrumentalists, such as David Oistrakh and Emil Gilels, emerging from behind the Iron Curtain, interest in Soviet-made recordings has been perking recently. Lou Levy, who has had a deal with the Russians since 1950, has just renewed his pact with the Soviets for rights to Soviet-made tapes in the North American continent.

The British company, Electrical & Musical Industries (EMI), has, meantime, become the first major disk label to make a deal with the Russians for such tapes. EMI has wrapped up rights for Europe and Asia and will distribute the disks through their various foreign affiliates.

Levy, who pioneered the music operation with the Soviets via his Am-Russ catalog buy back in 1950, has been dealing with the Russians with the full approval of the U. S. State Department. All of the imported Russian tapes, incidentally, are closely listened to by Federal agents. Thus far, the Russians have not been discovered trying to import anything but music via this route.

Levy, who splits his take with the Russian authors and composers society, has sold over 200 tapes to U. S. diskeries. Most of the sales have gone to independent classical firms like Westminster, Concert Hall, Vanguard, Period, etc. More recently, Levy has sold a "Shostakovich Plays Shostakovich" package to Capitol.

Levy's extension of the deal with the Soviets was wrapped up last week by Sal Chiantia, Levy's English firm topper, and Mike Stillman, head of the Am-Russ catalog. Chiantia left Russia after a few days while Stillman remained in Moscow for further talks.

Antitrust Laws Are Factor in Splitup Of EMI, RCA Affiliation

London, May 1.

Three important factors which led to the severance of their "long and happy association with RCA" were outlined last week by J. F. Lockwood, chairman of EMI (Electric & Musical Industries). Firstly, EMI owns two subsidiaries in America, Capitol and Angel Records. It was very difficult, with the antitrust laws, for EMI to be a strong competitor of RCA in the U. S. and an ally in the UK.

Secondly, he said, "In view of our present strength in the U. S., it would be more profitable to exploit the HMV label ourselves in the American market, which is seven times the size of the UK market. Any sales, therefore, lost in the UK as a result of our not having RCA titles are much more than offset by our sales in the U. S. of HMV titles, he observed.

A third reason advanced by Lockwood was that RCA wants to have their titles issued in Britain under their own trademark. They did not consider a shortterm matrix agreement warranted their reducing the UK HMV catalog in order to promote the RCA trademark.

The legal effort of Billy Rose to get back his copyright on "That Old Gang of Mine" from Bourne Music was given a sharp setback in N. Y. Federal Court last week when Judge Thomas F. Murphy turned down a petition by Rose to examine the books of the publisher. Rose, who has been joined in the suit by co-writers Ray Henderson and the late Mort Dixon, has claimed that the original renewal assignment was not a valid contract. The case which has been pending for almost three years, comes to trial next Monday (7) in N. Y Federal Court.

Although Judge Murphy only ruled against Rose on his bid for a "sweeping discovery and inspection" of Bourne's books, the substance of his ruling was a flat rejection of Rose's claim to get the copyright back. The judge said that Rose did not show "good cause" in petitioning for the right of his accountants to audit Bourne's books and records covering a period from 1923 to the present time in an effort to ascertain the exact amount of coin received by Bourne as well as the amounts spent by Bourne on exploitation throughout these years.

Rose, Henderson and Dixon claim in their suit that Bourne did not have the right to continue publication of the song after its original copyright term had expired in 1951. Bourne, on the other hand, answered that the authors had assigned all copyrights including the right of renewal to the publisher. The cleffers admitted this, but said the renewal had been "unconscionable" because it had been made prior to the advent of sound film and television. Rose also claimed that Bourne had failed to exploit the song ade-

Jo Stafford Gets 60G Deal From Col

Jo Stafford has repacted with Columbia Records for another five years at a $60,000 annual guarantee. Thrush has been with the label for the past five and one-half years.

According to Col sales figures, Miss Stafford's disks have already passed the 33,000,000 mark. Her new pact stipulates that she makes several waxings a year with Col's foreign artists to cash in on her hefty overseas draw. First disk under the new pact will be cut on the Coast next week.

In an offbeat promotion for a pop artist, Col took out a full page ad in the news section of the New York Times Sunday (28) pointing up thrush's diskery affiliation and the coin grossed by her diskings. A similar ad is being set for the Wall St. Journal.

Meantime, her manager Mike Nidorf is in Gotham for huddles with General Artists Corp. on future television assignments. Miss Stafford had been out of action for close to five months to care for her new baby.

Meantime, Col's legalites are on the Coast wrapping up a new deal with Doris Day. Rumors that Miss Day would exit Col to form her own label or to join the indie Dot label have been scotched by Columbia.

Johnny Marks to Let Another Pub Pay Him

Publisher - tunesmith Johnny Marks pulled a novel switch last week in turning over his new tune, "Free," to a rival publisher. Tommy Valando picked up the tune for his Laurel Music firm.

It's the first song that Marks has placed outside of his St. Nicholas Music operation in eight years. Song his been recorded by Tommy Leonetti for Capitol Records.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Danny Knight: "The Searchers"-"The Somewhere Voice" (MGM). "The Searchers," title tune of the upcoming John Wayne starrer, is a stirring western-flavored item in the "High Noon" groove and packs as much punch. Danny Knight gives it a high voltage reading and makes the side a solid payoff bet on all levels. "The Somewhere Voice," on the flip side, is just a melancholy ballad.

Sarah Vaughan: "Hot and Cold Running Tears"-"That's Not The Kind of Love I Want" (Mercury). Sarah Vaughan is due for lots of spinning play with "Hot and Cold Running Tears." It's a brightly paced number which she belts out with hep beat. Should go especially well in the coinboxes. Ballad on the reverse never gets to mean much.

The Rover Boys: "Graduation Day"-"I Hear Music" (ABC-Paramount). Although the idea in "Graduation Day" is similar to The Four Lads' recent click, "Moments To Remember," it still is strong enough to make a dent on its own. With The Rover Boys giving it a flavorsome workover, side builds plenty of appeal for the coke set. The Boys are in high spirits on "I-Hear Music," giving it a bright lilt that will win spins.

David Whitfield: "My September Love"-"The Rudder and the Rock" (London). Once again David Whitfield has a big ballad in "My September Love" and he gives it all it's worth. Side is already a noise-maker in England and it should repeat in the U.S. market. Tune is a posh, romantic item aptly suited to Whitfield's vibrant attack. Sound effect gimmicks of thunder and sea-gulls are the only noteworthy parts of "The Rudder and the Rock."

Jerri Adams: "Walk Fast"-"If I Forget You" (Columbia). Jerri Adams' neat song-selling manner is shown to advantage on "Walk Fast." It's a tidy ballad entry that blends lyric and melody for good results. Her vocalizing tops it off in fine style. "If I Forget You" puts her in bigger-voiced groove and it, too, comes off as a good spinning bet.

Enzo Stuarti: "O, Madonna!"-"Yours Is My Heart Alone" (Jubilee). Enzo Stuarti is out of the Mario Lanza big-voiced tenor school and this debut slicing gets him off to a good start. He has a takeoff potential in "O, Madonna!" which sets his vibrant pipes against a lilting and frolicsome melodic background. Stuarti puts plenty of schmaltz into the oldie, "Yours Is My Heart Alone."

Lou Monte: "Ask Your Heart"-"Id've Baked A Cake" (RCA Victor). Bright and frisky flavor of "Ask Your Heart" is given added zest via Lou Monte's buoyant vocal attack. Beat and lyric idea is loaded with teenage appeal. Monte returns to the Italiano kick on "Id've Baked A Cake," but it doesn't come out too well.

Roberta Sherwood: "Lazy River"-"This Train" (Decca). This coupling has been culled from Decca's "Introducing Roberta Sherwood" album and will serve as an excellent shill for the package as well as get strong spinning attention on its own. Thrush is an interesting song stylist whose vocal attack commands attention. She sets a proper moody note to "Lazy River" and gets an exciting gospel feeling into "This Train."

Somethin' Smith & The Redheads: "In A Shanty In Old Stanty Town"-"Coal Dust on the Fiddle" (Epic). Somethin' Smith is at his best when he has a well-remembered oldie to play with. His banjo work and vocal combo arrangements bring an appealing shuffle beat quality to "Shanty" and should make it a coin machine fave. "Coal Dust on the Fiddle" is a light-hearted entry which Smith handles with a brisk melody flair.

Johnny Desmond: "A Little Love Can Go A Long, Long Way"-"Please Don't Forget Me, Dear" (Coral). "A Little Love" is a tender little ballad styled along the folk idiom lines and Desmond gives it the right vocal touch. Side doesn't shape as a world-beater but it is a pleasant programming bet. Back side is a slow and somewhat ineffectual ballad.

Alvy West: "Ya Ya Ya"-"Blue Bongo" (ABC-Paramount). This instrumental coupling by Alvy West should attract some deejay interest. Both sides are tasty and appealing and make for okay programming fodder. "Ya Ya Ya" is the more interesting side and West gets a nifty assist from a choral backing by the Rosyln Teen-Agers.

Dick Kuhn: "My Whistling Heart"-"Whistling The Blues" (Mercury). Working with a solid orch backing, Kuhn whistles across a happy item tagged "My Whistling Heart" and a slower paced "Whistling The Blues." "My Whistling Heart" has the better chance to nab some spinning play.

Album Reviews

Columbia Records is on a Gallic kick with a "Paris in the Spring" promotion highlighted by four new French packages. The bright side of Paris and its melodies get excellent coverage by Patachou in "Patachou's Paris." With an assist from Michel Legrand's orch, she emerges as a cheery chanteuse with a flock of happy melodies to play with. The seamier side of life along the Seine is worked over by Juliette Greco, a thrush with a deep stylistic quality. Her song topics are pretty macabre but it hits with emotional impact. Jacqueline Francois' "April in Paris" set showcases her silky tones to advantage. Backed by orchs batoned by Michel Legrand and Paul Durand, Mme. Francois covers a variety of moods with taste and charm. Henri Salvador, French singer-comic, comes off excellently as a carefree troubador with a lilt and sparkle in his vocal styling. He gets a bright assist from Michel Legrand's orch.

Mantovani: "Waltzes of Irving Berlin" (London). The lush instrumental technique that Mantovani always puts into his musical fare is excellently suited to the rich melodic line that Irving Berlin has put into his waltzes. The Mantovani - Berlin teamup is a natural for deejay programming and shapes as a hot seller on the retail level. Included are "All Alone," "Always," "The Girl That I Marry" and "I Forgot to Remember" to name just four of the dozen in the set.

Carmen McRae: "Torchy" (Decca). Although Carmen McRae is still claimed by the jazz buffs, she's been steadily developing a pop appeal. The gap between jazz and pop vocalists has been narrowing over the years, of course, and Miss McRae has been partly instrumental in the move. This set, for example, will find fans on both sides of the fence. Her stylistic phrasing and her taste in repertoire is topgrade and will appeal to all. Another plus is the solid orch backing split between Jack Pleis and Ralph Burns.

Chris Connor: (Atlantic). Chris Connor is from the cool school but she never takes the standards to far afield to disturb the uninitiated. She has a hep understanding of the lyric as she brings in her modern jazz innovations. In her repertoire are such composers as Cole Porter, Duke Ellington, Rodgers & Hart, Frederick Loewe and Alan Jay Lerner, and Ralph Blaine and Hugh Martin among others. The instrumental backing ranges from a four-piece combo to a 19-piece orch.

Helen Forrest: "Voice of the Name Bands" (Capitol). During the heyday of the band business, Helen Forrest was associated with some of the top name orchs of the period. She held the femme vocalist's seat with Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman and Harry James and became associated with a flock of hits of that era. This set recaptures that period somewhat, although the band backings by Billy May and Dave Cavanaugh don't have the same vitality of the originals. Miss Forrest, however, still retains that lyric flair and she works her way through a dozen standards that stir up memories.

Diskers Cool To MOA Convention

The Music Operators of America convention isn't stirring up major record company enthusiasm this year. Conclave is skedded for Chicago this weekend (6-8).

The diskeries aren't exactly brushing off the MOE meet this year but they are pulling in their outlay in exhibition and display. Several of the top companies are only making a token gesture toward the MOA by sending only a few sales and publicity staffers to represent them this year. At past conclaves, the diskeries went all out on representation and shelled out lots of coin for exhibition booths and displays.

Reason for the cool-off, according to one major company exec, is that the MOA's prime interest is no longer in merchandising of disks. Last year's meet set the tone of the confabs with a concentration on the Washington legislation to tax jukeboxes with a royalty rap. "It's their problem and not ours," the exec added.

Other MOA topics that run contrary to disk company interests are the conclave's concern with its own record company activities.

Jane Powell to Verve

Verve Records, Norman Granz recent entry into the pop field, has signed Jane Powell to an exclusive recording contract calling for eight singles and two LP albums per year. Deal is for a year with options for four more. Buddy Bregman, artists & repertory chief for the label, will act as musical conductor on all Miss Powell's dates. Initial session will be held next month.

Save for occasional one-shots and the MGM diskings of soundtracks via her former film studio contract, actress has not been under disk pact before.

Dandridge to Debut On Wax Via Brit. Label

Deal is in the works for Dorothy Dandridge to make her disk debut on a British label. Singer now is in London, appearing at the Savoy.

Miss Dandridge is accompanied by Marty Paich, top Coast jazz pianist, who would direct the album if the deal is concluded. Coincidentally, singer's only previous wax contact was in England five years ago when she cut several sides on an experimental basis and then, dissatisfied, refused to allow their release.

Scheck Asks $75,000 In Moppet Mgt. Suit

A $75,000 damage suit was filed in N. Y. Supreme Court last week by George Scheck against orch leader Art Mooney, Loew's Inc., and Samuel and Beatrice Gordon, parents of six-year old singer Barry Gordon.

Action asks that Mooney and Loew's (via its MGM Records subsid) be enjoined from interfering with plaintiff's contract with the juve. Scheck also asks that the court to direct Mooney and Loew's from entering any agreements on the management of the moppet singer and that previous contracts be nullified.

Scheck alleges that he has a firm five-year managerial pact with the juve, which began in 1953, and that Mooney and Loew's are inducing the parents to breach the contract.

Paul Cunningham, New ASCAP Prexy, Ups Pub Relations, Assures Juke Ops

Paul Cunningham, veteran songwriter who was elected as the seventh president of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, plans to step up public relations activity in telling "the ASCAP story" to the trade and to the public. Himself former chairman of the Society's public relations committee, Cunningham will continue to stage shows for various organizations in Washington, D. C., and other cities.

Cunningham, who has been ASCAP's rep in the nation's capitol for the past several years and has been active in furthering the revision of the Copyright Act to remove the exemption of jukeboxes from the licensing provision, again reiterated the Society's position that it wants to "do business" with the coin machine industry. "Their fears that ASCAP wants to impose fees that will put them out of business is completely unreasonable. We want to keep them in business and we are ready to sit down at any time to discuss an equitable settlement." Cunningham emphasized that numerous other organizations, besides ASCAP, have been supporting moves in Congress to amend the Copyright Act.

Cunningham, who has spent most of the past few years away from the Society's headquarters, said he intends to study the intra-organizational operations and problems. At the present time, he felt, he was not ready to state his attitude towards the question of network sustaining program plug values, a problem that has sparked considerable resentment in the ranks. Cunningham said he would do all in his power "to carry on the traditions of his predecessors in strengthening ASCAP for the benefit of all the members." Since its organization in 1914, ASCAP has had six other presidents: George Maxwell, the first president and only publisher who served in that post; Gene Buck, Deems Taylor, Fred E. Ahlert, Otto A. Harbach and Stanley Adams, Cunningham's immediate predecessor.

All other ASCAP officers were reelected at the board meeting last week when a new director Maurice (Mickey) Scopp, exec v.p. of the Big Three Music Corp., was named to fill the vacancy created by the exit of Abe Olman, previous Big Three topper. ASCAP officers reelected were Otto A. Harbach and Louis Bernstein, vice-prexies; John Tasker Howard, secretary; Saul H. Bourne, treasurer; George W. Meyer, assistant secretary; and Frank H. Connor, assistant treasurer.

Meantime, writers elected to the Society's board of appeals were Abel Baer, John Redmond and Douglas Moore. For the publishers, George Paxton, Joseph H. Santly and Joseph Fischer were named.

A Humming Business

Hollywood, May 1.

RCA Victor has a new approach to some standard and public domain material in a new album by the Voices of Walter Schumann, due for release in July.

Although it's a presentation of a vocal group, the package has no lyric content. Instead, the voices carry the melodic line, sometimes simulating instruments, in a choral effect. Approximately, the album will be called "Not a Word Was Spoken."

Auric to Clef Tunes For AA's Lollo Film

French composer Georges Auric has been tagged by Allied Artists to clef five numbers for the Gina Lollobrigida-Anthony Quinn starrer "Notre Dame de Paris."

The five tunes will be sung in the pic by Miss Lollobrigida.

WALT DISNEY ON WAX TO PLUG KIDDIE PARK

Hollywood, May 1.

Walt Disney will become a disk personality this summer—appearing as narrator of a projected new album, "A Musical Tour of Disneyland Park." Package will be produced and released by Disneyland Music. Album will cover, via original music, the highlights of the amusement park which has become the tourist attraction of Southern California. Label hopes to have it on the market before the tourist season is in full swing.

Disneyland Records, already in release with "Song of the South," will specialize in packaged goods, each of which will have some connection with a Disney project. Next to go is a soundtrack album from "Pinocchio," to be followed by a player piano album utilizing the oldtime instruments on display at Disneyland, and a "barbershop quartet" album of p.d. material as sung at Disneyland in the recreation of a small town of a few generations ago.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Local 47 'Trial' Sparks Furor Re Basic U. S. Rights

Hollywood, May 1.

A new furor over whether union members "waive" certain Constitutional rights as a part of their union membership has erupted here in the wake of the American Federation of Musicians' "trial" of 13 Local 47 members. The issue has created another schism in the strife-ridden Local which has been engaged in a bitter dispute with AFM chief James Caesar Petrillo for some months.

Uproar was touched off with the release of a portion of transcripts of the "trial" of the local musicians, who were charged with violating federation by-laws, and advocating "dual unionism," as a result of their activities on behalf of the dissident faction which has voted president John te Groen and recording secretary Maury Paul out of office. A decision based on the "trial" is expected within the next few weeks, in advance of the AFM convention in Atlantic City in June to which the musicians may appeal if found guilty.

Transcript quoted Los Angeles attorney Michael G. Luddy, who represented te Groen and financial secretary G. R. Hennon—the "plaintiffs" in the action—as emphasizing that "there are rules of law which are applicable to unions that are not applicable to ordinary citizens as such."

Luddy, according to the transcript, added:

"It is unfortunate that there are people who belong to labor organizations that think that the constitutional rights which are provided for in the constitution of their own state or of the United States are equally applicable even after they have become a member of a labor organization and bind themselves by contract to obey and to respect any orders which may be entered by their local or by the parent organization.

Luddy emphasized that under general law, the Federal government derives its powers through those rights delegated by states or individuals. In a union, he contended, the locals (and the individual members) have only those rights which are delegated to them by the parent body. As an example, he cited the AFM structure, which he said is universal among unions, that a member may go to court against the union only after exhausting all remedies available under the by-law.

"Technically," said Luddy, "this infringes on his Constitutional right to go to court whenever he pleases. Similarly, a newspaperman has the right, in a free press, to write what he pleases. But if what he writes is libelous, he knows that he faces court action."

Other Los Angeles attorneys queried, however, questioned whether a union, or any organization, can hold an individual to regulations under which he waives his basic constitutional rights. The transcript, which has gained wide circulation in the last few days, has incensed members of the dissident faction.

Meanwhile, Cecil F. Read, leader of Local 47 insurgents, planed to Washington over the weekend for a series of conferences with Government copyright officials on proposed changes in the copyright law. Coast musicians have been contending that the copyright law should be revised to include some question of "property rights" in the music they record. At the height of the Local 47 strife, Read was asked by the Copyright Office to offer suggestions in view of pending official discussions regarding copyright changes.

As a result of an exchange of letters, Read departed for Washington with a series of recommendations embodying the viewpoint of the local members. He was accompanied by legal counsel Robert R. Rissman.

National Jazz and Rhythm & Blues Disk Jockey Assn. holds a meeting in Chicago May 18-20, the second since its inception in N. Y. last February when 30 deejays attended.

DESPITE COL DEAL, NBC TO BALLY 'FELLA' PREEM

Frank Loesser's tuner, "The Most Happy Fella" is set for a five-hour promotion on NBC-Radio tomorrow (Thurs.), the day of its Broadway preem.

Net's "Weekday" stanza will bring its mikes backstage at the Imperial Theatre for interviews with the producers, the cast, the director and Loesser. Diskings of tunes from the score will be spotted throughout. Unusual aspect of the promotion is that the original cast album of the tuner has already been wrapped up by Columbia, a CBS affiliate.

Kenton Orch Draws Uneven B.O. in Berlin

Berlin, April 23.

Stan Kenton's second Berlin appearance (the first one was in 1953) was a moderate success. Critical reaction to his music was mixed as usual, but they all cheered him as an interesting personality and first-class showman.

Kenton gave two concerts at the Sporthalle am Funkturm, one in the afternoon with many seats empty, and a second one in the evening to near-capacity. The audience was well disciplined, this being in sharp contrast to many jazz concerts held in recent months at the Sportspalast.

Copyright Office In DeSylva Case

the history and administrative procedure of the Copyright law.

Basically, the problem is that the practice has been to regard the copyright law wording as setting up separate classes of heirs. Wording of the law vests the right to renew copyrights after the expiration of the original 28-year period, with the author or, in the event of his death, with "widow, widower or children." Common practice has been to regard this as establishing the widow as the primary recipient of the right, with children coming under the privilege only in the event the widow has also passed away.

Mrs. Ballentine's position, denied by Federal Judge Ernest A. Tolin but upheld by the Circuit Court, is that "widow or children" constitutes a complete class in itself and that both widow and children share equally in the renewal rights.

Copyright Office Brief

It was understood that the Copyright office brief underlines this viewpoint, contending that the legislative history and purpose of the statute, as well as available notes on legislative committee discussion of changes, did not intend to separate the widow from the children in sharing renewal rights.

In opposing this view, one of the briefs filed by show biz organizations accents the fact that the contender in this case is an illegitimate child. "It would be almost impossible," the brief states, "to be certain that a grant of exclusive rights for the renewal period had been secured since in clearing such rights there is no procedure available for ascertaining the identity of, or procuring a grant of right from, illegitimate children."

Case already has had one important legal aspect when Judge Tolin ruled the boy, now 12, is indeed the child of the late songwriter-producer. Testimony introduced at that time quoted DeSylva as acknowledging the youngster and declaring that he hoped the boy would regard him as his father.

Since ASCAP regards widows first and since virtually all contracts based on rights of this kind follow the same pattern, a Supreme Court ruling in favor of the youngster could cast a legal cloud on many existing contracts and force show biz into a completely new procedure for handling such situations in the future.

Max Fink is repping the Ballentines. Theodore Kiendl argued in the Supreme Court for Mrs. DeSylva, with Pat McCormick her regular attorney.

Palitz Joins Jubilee Setup Via 25% Buy-In

Morty Palitz has moved back into the record business via a 25% buy-in of Jubilee Records. Palitz, who's been freelancing disk assignments since leaving the pop artists & repertoire chief's post at Decca several years ago, will take over as Jubilee's veepee and general manager.

He'll helm all facets of the operation including a&r, sales and distribution. With the Palitz move-in, Jubilee topper Jerry Blaine, who announced last year that he sold the firm to a "syndicate," will gear for an expansion program for the diskery and its subsid label, Josie. Palitz expects to establish a regular single release schedule, issuing new platters at least twice a month and he plans to set up an album release pattern of at least two a month.

No changes in Jubilee's operational personnel are contemplated now but in line with the product expansion, Jubilee expects to add more distributors around the country to handle the line. Blaine expects that three more branches will be added within the next six months. Jubilee is distributed by Cosnat, also owned by Blaine but apart from his disk company operation.

As part of the Jubilee expansion program, Palitz plans to bring major artists on to the roster. He's currently dickering with diskers whose pacts with major companies are about to wind up.

Also in the offing is a plan to bring Cosnat and the Jubilee operation under one overall banner. It the works now is a plan to float a stock issue for Cosnat to finance the expansion. Blaine is also active in the music publishing field with Jubilee Music, an ASCAP firm in which he's partnered with Max Dreyfus, Chappell topper, and Bendel Music, a BMI firm.

BELAFONTE ACCOMPER PINCHED IN DOPE RAP

Philadelphia, May 1.

Millard Thomas, guitar accompanist of Harry Belafonte, was arrested by members of a Philadelphia police narcotics squad on the street here a few minutes before he was to appear in the musical, "Sing, Man, Sing," at the Academy of Music. The production, which was being given by the Philadelphia Forum (a branch of the Inquirer Charities, Inc.), was held up 20 minutes. Belafonte finally went on with the aid of a multiple piece unit in the wings.

Detectives allegedly found two jars of marijuana in Thomas' hotel room. An examination by a police surgeon for use proved negative. Thomas was booked for illegal possession of the dope. He also admitted an acquaintance with Carmen Phillips, of Chicago, a dancer at the Latin Casino, who had been picked up earlier by police for marijuana smoking.

Kapp Pushes Packages With Deal for Dealers

Kapp Records is stepping up its drive into the packaged goods market with the release of eight new 12-inch LP albums this week. Sparking the push will be a special promotion for dealers. Dealer promotion consists of one cuffo album for every 12 ordered during May. MGM Records worked out a similar "Baker's Dozen" promotion several months ago. Backing the cuffo album offer, will be special displays, direct mailings to dealers, catalogs for consumers and extensive radio promotion.

The LPs were grooved by Roger Williams, Jane Morgan, The Hi-Lo's, The Jackie Davis Trio, The Smooth Swinging Siravo Band, Johnny Holiday, Jerry Fielding's Orch and Russ Miller.

Thorpe Into Hospital

Jerry Thorpe, RCA Victor disk publicity chief, into the New York Eye & Ear Infirmary for a second operation on his eyes.

He'll be out about a month.

Jazz Festival To Exit Newport

Boston, May 1.

The American Jazz Festival kisses Newport, R. I. goodbye after this year's concerts July 5-7, and efforts are in the works to find a new site in a community approximately the size of the town where the jazz bash has been held for the past three years. George Wein, director of the jazz festival and operator of Storyville here, said the decision to exit Newport was made by Louis L. Lorillard, festival president, after the Rhode Island legislature failed to appropriate $10,000 to support the affair.

Last year there was a hassle over where the jazz festival would be presented in Newport. After the jazz org bought Bellecourt mansion, neighbors complained and the town refused to allow the concert on the grounds. The jazz festival moved into Freebody Park and used the mansion for conferences.

Lorillard and Wein said the money would be raised "somehow" for this year's festival and reported that "several places out of Rhode Island (among them Bridgeport) were bidding for it."

Foreshadowing the Rhode Island exit was the changing of the jazz bash name this year from "Newport Jazz Festival" to "American Jazz Festival." Headquarters for the jazz festival were opened this week at the Hotel Viking in Newport. Lineup for the fourth jazz session includes: Louis Armstrong, Count Basie, Dave Brubeck, Sarah Vaughan, Toshiko Akiyoshi, Japanese jazz pianist; Jutta Hipp, German jazz pianist; Dizzy Gillespie, Eddie Condon and Fredricka Gulda, classical pianist.

Decca Goes Electronic With Ad Dept. Machine

Decca has streamlined its advertising department with a new gadget called the "electronic messenger."

There are only two of these machines in operation in New York. The device, which transmits on regular telephone lines, sends copy and layouts to the label's typographer and receives the finished product back.

Hub Jazz Benefits

Boston, May 1.

A jazz bash in Lynn Sports Center on June 9, will star Woodie Herman crew in benefit for the child care services of the North Shore Children's Friend Society.

On June 29, the Castle Hill Foundation starts a season of eight week-end concerts in Ipswich with Count Basie and his orch in jazz and swing.

Inside Stuff—Music

Two generations ago the five-string banjo was the most popular American musical instrument and was generally considered the only one of native American origin. Today, the five-string has long been out of popular favor, but it has its devotees. An estimated 150 will gather this weekend at Lewisburg, Pa., for the semi-annual get-together of the National Assn. of Five-String Banjoists. Among the exponents will be 77-year-old Fred Van Eps of Plainfield, N. J. Van Eps, generally considered one of the top living banjoists is the subject of a recent four-part biographical series by Jim Walsh in Hobbies magazine. He began making home recorded cylinders 62 years ago, and graduated to professional playing for Edison in 1897. For the next 30 years he was among the most popular recording artists. Today, although a prosperous manufacturer of recording equipment, he still makes banjo records under his own Five-String Banjo label.

A detailed and illuminating study of ASCAP's operation within the structure of the antitrust laws is included in this year's publication of the "Copyright Law Symposium" (Columbia U. Press, $4), in an essay titled "Collecting Collectively: ASCAP's Perennial Dilemma," by J. Robert Shull, of the Duke Univ. School of Law. The annual tome, seventh in the series, is sponsored by ASCAP among law students in its "Nathan Burkan Memorial Competition." Top prize essay, which gets a $500 award, was "Publication and the British Copyright Law," by Raya S. Dreben of the Harvard Law School. Book includes a total of six essay covering various phases of American and international copyright law.

Robert Lissauer, who recently formed his own publishing company, Mode Music, and himself a songwriter, believes in giving top billing to cleffers on his sheet music. He's devoting the back cover of his sheet music to biographical data about the cleffers. First writers to get the treatment are Jack Heinz and Edward Thomas, who wrote "High Steel," a tune etched for Capitol by Lonnie Sattin. Latter gets the front cover picture.

Title for the new Joe (Fingers) Carr waxing of "Lucky Pierre" was inspired by a WERR (Buffalo) deejay using the nom-de-broadcast of Lucky Pierre. Tune, a French import, was originally tagged "La Saint Amour." George Lee, who publishes it in the U. S. via his Zodiac Music firm, was on a plugging trek through Buffalo when he came across the deejay Lucky Pierre and the idea for the new title.

Columbia Records has hopped on the Mozart bicentennial celebration with a special contest for eighth grade classes in U. S. schools. Classes are to submit any creative study related to Mozart. First prize will be 100 Columbia LPs and one Col hi-fi phonograph.

Cornell Cuts Brit. Tour Short for Video Series

London, May 1.

U. S. singer Don Cornell is cutting short his present British variety tour by four weeks. He has cancelled appearances at Nottingham, Chiswick, Cardiff and Manchester and flies back to the States on May 20, one month earlier than originally planned.

Reason is that he has been offered his own tv series for CBS in New York and wants to fly back to start rehearsals.

A. C. Maestro Carries Knife in Trumpet Case

Atlantic City, May 1.

Alfred (Pete) Miller, 38, bandleader at the 500 Club here, is free in $1,000 bail awaiting a hearing in Municipal Court on an atrocious assault and battery charge. Police accuse Miller of stabbing Frank Barone, a patron of the club, in the chest in the club early last week.

Police say that Miller admits using the knife, which he carried in his trumpet case.

Pincus Expands

George Pincus is expanding the operation of his three music firms, Pincus Music, Gil Music and George George Music.

Julie Losch has been tapped to represent the firms on the Coast while Saul Cohen will cover the New England area. Pincus' sons, Lee and Irwin, will continue to handle the eastern and midwestern territories.

bet than the pop singles. One diskery artists & repertoire man put it this way: "We blow $4,000 on a single that never takes off. The same money invested in an album inevitably pays off its investment."

The diskery sales execs are in favor of the album upbeat because the selling pattern is more orthodox.

Many major company diskers believe that the indies have been able to move in on the pop singles field because they were able to peddle their disks at the distributor level for as little as 32c. The major companies, operating with a fixed overhead, don't have that maneuverability and their distributor price stayed about 10c higher. The indies can't wheel and deal the same way in the album market so the competition is on an equal level.

Judge Rips Billy Rose Petition

quately and hence was not entitled to the renewal term.

Louis Nizer (Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim), Bourne's attorney, argued before Judge Murphy that Rose's claims were an attempt to circumvent the holdings of the U.S. Supreme Court in the "Irish Eyes" case which had held that renewal copyrights were assignable. Nizer said that in the pretrial examination, the plaintiffs admitted that they had received royalty payments of over $35,000 during the 33 years since the song was copyrighted and that such payments included royalties for the use of the song in films and on video. Nizer pointed out that the authors had never "complained" when they received the money. Nizer also pointed out that Bourne had made the song a big hit and that it was recorded by Perry Como only a few years ago.

Judge Murphy's decision completely upholds Bourne's position and held that, in spite of the well-known liberality of the courts in permitting inspections of an adversary's books and records, such relief should not be granted in the present case.

He said: "Courts have always been keenly alive to the burdens, by way of expense, loss of time, and exposure of private business affairs, which discovery imposes upon anyone required to submit to it—burdens which have increased a hundred fold with the volume and complexity of modern business—and have fully appreciated the great wrong of subjecting an innocent defendant to them, merely to let a plaintiff who may think that he has been wronged learn that he has not . . . A plaintiff, before he is granted sweeping discovery, must somehow convince the court that there is, at least, reasonable grounds to believe that a cause of action exists, and can be proved if the necessary facilities are afforded him."

In the present case, the judge said the plaintiff's "have offered no evidence or even a suggestion in the moving papers tending to show what made the assignment of the renewal contract unconscionable other than the vague allegations that the defendant and its predecessor have enjoyed great benefits over and above those contemplated by the parties in 1923. There is no evidence that the contract was corruptly entered into or made under fraudulent representation or that there was a clear mistake or suppression of important facts or that it was made under other circumstances amounting to a compulsion or under such coercion of circumstances that enforcement would be unconscionable."

Finding that Rose had been guilty of gross laches (negligence) by delaying his application to inspect the books until the eve of the trial, the judge also rejected the writers claim that Bourne had failed to exploit the song in accordance with the contract.

The judge also pointed out that a number of attempts to try the case previously had failed, due to requests of the plaintiffs. The most recent postponement was made on March 26, the date that Mort Dixon died. Since the start of the trial, the plaintiffs switched attorneys and substituted the form of Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood for the former legal reps, Hays, St. John, Abramson & Heilbron.

Four Lads Booked Into Hollywood Palladium

Hollywood's Palladium Ballroom switches from its regular danceband policy next week when The Four Lads move in May 9. Last time Palladium had a non-band headliner was four years ago with a Guy Mitchell booking.

The Lads, who've come up with two consecutive 1,000,000-plus disk sellers in "Moments to Remember" and "No Not Much," wound up a hefty grossing date at the Thunderbird, Las Vegas, last week.

New York, New York

Dear Mike:

I want to take this opportunity to tell you how successful the Four Lads opening was here at the Thunderbird. They were very enthusiastically received and the audience reaction was very exciting.

I am sure you will be pleased to hear that on the first Saturday of their engagement the Four Lads shattered all existing attendance records since the opening of the Thunderbird. This should be particularly gratifying to you and the boys since we have enjoyed the pleasure of playing many of the great singing stars of the entertainment world, including Dorothy Collins, Arthur Lee Simpkins, Patti Page, Mills Brothers, Allan Jones, Johnny Desmond, Rosemary Clooney, Peggy Lee and Kay Starr among others.

I am very happy that the Thunderbird had the opportunity of presenting the Four Lads in their first appearance in Las Vegas, the entertainment capital of the world. I am sure the rest of their engagement will be just as exciting and we of the Thunderbird will be looking forward to their return engagement.

Very truly yours,
Marty Hicks

Network Coin Oiling Show Tours; NBC Shells Out 300G for Water Spec

The networks are going into the live aspects of show business in an increasingly greater degree. With the NBC backing of the touring edition of the Esther Williams water spec, NBC has made its first excursion into the variety field. Previously, both NBC and CBS have limited its investments to legit, films and to a symph tour.

The Esther Williams show is expected to cost around $300,000 and will tour Europe, U.S., and provide the network with four televised spectaculars. Plans for the specs, although known for some months in the trade, were announced at a press conference last week at the Hotel Plaza, by Miss Williams and network reps headed by Tom McAvitty, NBC-veepee in charge of the television network.

Thus far, NBC has backed the productions of "Call Me Madam," "Me & Juliet," "Wish You Were Here," "The Sebastians" the projected tour of the NBC Opera Co., a jaunt of the NBC Symph headed by Arturo Toscanini. In addition, it will tour Lester Cowan's "Oh Susannah" after its showing as a spec. For its pogment of $500,000 for the tv showing of the film, "Richard III," NBC will receive a percentage of the theatrical film rentals

CBS-TV has put its money on "My Fair Lady" one of the solid legit hits on the boards.

The venture in the variety field indicates that the network is willing to put its money into any worthwhile entertainment venture that promises to lend itself to transformation into a spec. The advantages of obtaining spec properties in that manner lies in several directions. Firstly, these personal appearance projects are self-liquidating, and in most of them, have realized a hefty profit. If successful on the road, the net gets the spec rights at virtually no costs and also has a firm control on the property, both as material and the personalities involved.

For the entertainment industry, the results are also beneficial. The networks are in a position to shell out a lot of venture capital into touring shows. The networks can provide new twists to touring show biz, simply because of the fact that they must be on the lookout for new kinds of shows to transform to specs.

Several talent agencies have already taken that facet into consideration and are blueprinting shows that might interest the webs. Such ventures would, it's felt in the talent agencies, provide a peg upon which to interest the network in new performers, writers, etc. It could also become a vehicle in which to build programs without going through the trouble of making a pilot film.

These steps would, of course, increase network dominance in show biz. The medium, at present, is the most important item, and soon with continued financing of major shows, the chains could also become the most important user of talent away from the networks.

St. Loo Spot Folds After Fed. Tax Lien

St. Louis, May 1.

The Encore Room, one of the plushier bistros on the west end strip here, has shuttered last week when the local Internal Revenue Service slapped a Government lien for $2,963 in withholding taxes. George Kritzberger, of the service, said the lien charged Ted Flaherty, op of the room, failed to pay withholding taxes.

Parties associated with the spot said the place was closed because business was slow and the landlord wanted the place to rent to someone else.

Gotta Pay 10% Fed. Tax At Shows in Free Fairs

Washinton, May 1.

Grandstand seats for rodeos, races, etc., at country fairs are subject to the 10% admissions tax, even if admission to the fair is free.

This ruling has just been made by the Internal Revenue Service. IRS was asked for a ruling in a case where admission to the fair and limited standing room for the events are free.

Chi Biz Convensh Hypo

Chicago, April 24.

Conventions have added $1,000,000,000 to Chicago's income over the last 10 years, executive director Chester A. Wilkins of the Chicago Convention Bureau said last week. There were 10,219 conventions here from 1946 to 1955, Wilkins continued.

The number of convention visitors has shown a steady increase over that period and reached a peak of 1,276,330 last year. This total was only exceeded by the 1,596,210 convention delegates who met here in 1933, attracted by the Century of Progress exposition.

Show Biz Kudosed By Armed Forces For Help to USO

The amusement industry was kudosed by every branch of the Armed Forces at a USO luncheon given to the entertainment industry Friday (27) at Sardi's, N. Y., for its aid in entertaining servicemen on leave in New York. The Broadwayites were praised by Air Force Brigadier Gen. Norman D. Sillin for "helping us retain our inventory of trained and skilled personnel," thus saving the U. S. taxpayer considerable sums in training replacements. New York was described in addition by Navy and Army brass as an aid in morale since it was a good town for a GI on leave.

Occasion for the gathering was an expression of thanks by USO to Broadwayites for giving ducats and passes to the servicemen. Awards were presented to sports as well as entertainment industryites for their help.

James Sauter, former prexy of USO Camp Shows and chairman of the Awards Committee, sparked the event. Sauter has been associated with troop entertainment since before World War II, and has served on many industry committees. Edward Spencer, chairman of the NYC USO Committee, was toastmaster, with other speakers including Oscar Hammerstein II, who declared that the industryites deemed it a privilege to serve; Edwin Bond, USO executive director, and representatives of all branches of the services.

Certificates of award went to reps of legit producers, film and legit theatres, concert halls, networks, radio stations, and baseball and football clubs.

BELAFONTE, NAT COLE MOP UP AT PITT B.O.

Pittsburgh, May 1.

Both Harry Belafonte and the Nat (King) Cole-Ted Heath package drew SRO here last week at 3,800-seat Syria Mosque. Belafonte's "Sing, Man, Sing" was slightly the better of the two attractions, because of a scale that went a little higher, getting a net of around $21,500 in two performances.

Although suffering from severe laryngitis, which got so bad there were doubts half an hour before curtain time whether he'd make the second night, Belafonte went on. General opinion was that he was in no shape to perform, however, and cheers at the finish were more for his courage than his performance.

Unlike Belafonte, whose two shows were on successive nights, the Cole-Heath unit condensed theirs into a single evening, and got over $20,000. Tickets were all gone days in advance.

Cole's $16,807 in Columbus

Columbus, May 1.

Nat Cole grossed $16,807 in a two-performance stand here last Tuesday (24). Other performers were June Christy, the Four Freshmen, Gary Morton, Patty Thomas and Ted Heath and his orchestra.

Elephant Escapes, 11 Hurt at Texas Circus

Waxahachie, Tex., May 1.

A total of 11 persons were injured Friday night (27) here when an elephat got loose at a performance of the Al Kelly & Miller Bros. Circus and caused part of the audience to stampede for an exit. Circus officials said the animal apparently got excited as it was led to the main tent.

The elephant was caught by circus personnel, and the performance went ahead, with most of the audience remaining for it.

AGVA Circus Tiff Hotter; Two More Acts Leave Show

The battle between the American Guild of Variety Artists and the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus has reached the name calling stages. After the blast last week at AGVA by Ringling prexy John Ringling North, AGVA national administrative secretary Jackie Bright retaliated with new charges against the big top. AGVA and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters are picketing the show during its current run at the Madison Square Garden, N. Y.

Bright charged that the membership in the union would not cost $165, as North charged, to those from the circus. Bright stated that North was told at the outset of negotiations that the AGVA board had insituted a special charge for new circus members, offering initation at half the regular rate and dues of $9 a quarter, which North turned down. Bright also charged that North was not paying performers for working at his hotel in Sarasota, Fla., during the winter season.

Meanwhile, AGVA pulled out equestrienne Marion Seifert and Lynn Brent of the Alzanas, the aerial act.

Syndicate Takes Over Seville in Miami B'ch At $7,000,000 Rental

Miami Beach, May 1.

The Seville, the new 280-room Beachfront nitery completed for this season's occupancy, has been leased to a syndicate headed by Morton F. Fisk and hotelier Robert Robinson. Inn was completed last December on the site of the former Grossinger Hotel, and was built by Irving Kipnes and Morris Becker. Lease to the Fisk-Robinson syndicate is for a period of 10 years at an aggregate rental of $7,000,000. Originally, hotel cost $8,000,000.

Fisk, who will be president of the Seville, is exec veepee of the Arrco Playing Card Co. of Chicago and Toronto. He also heads the Garfield News Co., with head offices in Toronto, which operates newstands and restaurants. Robinson, who will be exec veepee and general manager, was formerly with the San Marino Hotel and prior to that with the Georgian and Carlton hotels, all in Miami Beach.

Seville opened with Charles Reader as the talent buyer and bandleader. Toward the end of the season, he confined his activities to batoning.

Caterina Valente Into Pierre Hotel, N. Y.

The Cotillion Room of the Pierre Hotel, N. Y., has booked Caterina Valente as the initial attraction for next season. Italian import will go in Sept. 25. William Morris Agency set the deal.

Upon closing for the season on June 3 Cotillion Room will undergo considerable alteration. Major change will be the lowering of the ceiling so that greater intimacy can be obtained.

Niteries Now Seen as Rehabilitation Centres for Comics Kayoed on Video

Models Bow in AGVA

Boston, May 1.

First entrance of models into AGVA occurred here today when 40 Hub fashion and photographer's models were signed in by Smiley Hart, national AGVA rep in New England. The 40 will appear at the General Motors Motorama Show opening tomorrow (Wed.) at Commonwealth Armory. Hart said that the 40 were the first in a drive that will take in all models in the area.

Hart also said that a battle looms in Boston on the Ringling Bros. circus, booked for early May in Boston Garden, should John Ringling North fail to sign a contract in New York.

Halt Las Vegas Bookings as Row With AFM Looms

Las Vegas, May 1.

Nitery bookings in Las Vegas are being held up pending settlement of negotiations between the hotels and the American Federation of Musicians. The hotels are fearful of making commitments pending inking of a new contract. AFM is seeking a 20% increase which the innkeepers are unwilling to dole out.

Presently, the hotelmen have stopped buying inasmuch as the AFM contract runs out around May 9.

It's believed that a walkout of the musicians would force a similar action by the American Guild of Variety Artists. A strike in the casino country would cripple the largest segment of the nitery business in the world, and repercussions would be felt in the earnings statements of the major talent agencies as well as the travel offices. It's also feared that the adverse publicity of a tieup might affect the Las Vegas business upbeat which has been evident for several months.

Unless hotels obtain non-union musicians, it's believed that floorshows would be out for the duration of a strike. AFM, because of a pact signed several years ago with AGVA, has jurisdiction over musical acts, and performers who could provide their own accompaniment as well as background for other turns.

'WATER FOLLIES' PLAYS MEXICO CITY IN JUNE

Boston, April 24.

Sam Snyder, back in Boston after a tour of Australia during which his "Water Follies" played to over 500,000 and grossed about $750,000 in 10 weeks, has skedded the show for Mexico City opening June 8 for 16 days. The first U.S. engagement will be in Orange, N. J., for a hospital fund, opening May 28 for 6 days.

Four water performers have been brought from Australia. They are: Kevin Newell, Barry Grunwald, Barbara Atkins and Pam McGee. Featured performer in "Water Follies" is Eddie Rose who is in his 12th year with the org as water comedian.

Snyder said that he has 20 weeks booked in the U.S. and Canada before returning to New Zealand and Australia. The show opens in New Zealand last two weeks in December and then plays 16 weeks in Australia starting in January. The company comprises 38 and carries 35 tons of equipment including two portable pools, a portable stage and lighting equipment.

HANS LEDERER TO EUROPE

Hans Lederer, of the N. Y. office of the Lew & Leslie Grade Agency of London, leaves for Europe Saturday (5) for conferences with homeoffice execs and for a gander at European circuses and fairs. He'll be gone until the end of June.

Lederer is head of the outdoor division of Grade's U. S. operations.

Cafe departments of the various talent agencies are faced with a tough problem—rehabilitation of comics that flunk out on major video assignments. The funnymen that come off the shows are initially hard sales, and the cafe salesman must plug on them with more concentration than if the zanies were just starting out on a nitery career.

The agents point out that there have been innumerable cases in which comedians were offered extremely high sums for nitery appearances, while they are starring on a top-rated show. However, once the sponsor or network drops the show, the comedian cannot be sold at the fraction of the figure that they turned down.

At the present time, the percenters point out that there are a lot of tele bigtimers on the available lists for niteries. Each one presents a problem in selling and it cannot be done on the basis of price alone. As a matter of fact, the agencies feel that it is better to hold onto a four-figure salary in order to maintain the comic's desirability. The few dates that are obtained help to establish the asking price, and thereafter, salary must be established on the basis of drawing power.

The cafe operator is a rough hurdle to overcome in this respect. Many of them feel that the comic has been deteriorating in full view of millions of listeners, and there's little reason to believe that this process has endeared him to paying customers. It's also argued that the comic has used up the bulk of his routines while attempting to maintain his television status. Thus many believe that they're better off trying a new comic at a considerably lower figure.

Nonetheless, the agencies have been successful in getting quite a few comics on the nitery routes again. The agents have long argued that the tele failure doesn't presage the lack of entertainment values. After all, it was their initial success in the niteries that brought them to the attention of video magnates, and having been brought up in the live appearance field, the comedians have acquired a knowhow that hadn't been captured by the video cameras.

Frequently paving the way for a cafe comeback are the club dates. A few good returns at some of the big convention stands has been instrumental in exciting a lot of interest.

The datediggers know that as time goes on, the cafe department will assume great importance as a rehabilitation centre for comedians rejected by teevee. The mortality in that medium is becoming greater with the years, and some of the top funnymen in the business will find themselves working the saloons again at the whim of a rating. Some agents have urged comics to hide their cafe routines from the television audience—they may come in handy much sooner than anticipated.

Twin Coaches Ops Hit By 67G Fed Tax Claim

Pittsburgh, May 1.

Tony and Rose Calderone, owners of the Twin Coaches, 1,100-seat nitery on the highway which plays top names, were slapped last week with a $67,135 general tax lien by the Federal government.

The government says the Calderones owe $57,388 for the last three months of '54 and $9,747 for the first half of '55.

Pierce Quits Chi AGVA

Chicago, April 24.

Eddie Pierce, long active in show biz circles as actor and agent, and lately as American Guild of Variety Artists rep here, last week exited the local AGVA office here after 1½ years as rep. No replacement yet.

At the same time, Bob London, son of Sam (Blackie) London, who heads the AGVA office in Cleveland, has joined the Chi AGVA staff and will train under midwest regional director Ernie Fast, as a traveling AGVA rep in the midwest territory.

Dear Carmen:

This is to let you know how pleased and happy you've made us with your sensational four-week engagement at The Embers.

The reception accorded you and your new quartet at The Embers is a tribute even to an artist of your stature. From opening night on, the ropes were up with turnaway business nightly. Our only regret is that we couldn't accomodate all the people who came to see your exciting new group.

In short, Carmen, your engagement at The Embers was a memorable one among the many memorable engagements we've had here.

Thank you and come back soon. We're looking forward to your return engagement.

Staging An Act for the Hotel Circuit Now Calls for a Small Fort Knox

The costs of staging acts for the hotel circuit are going up considerably. Singers, who have done singles for many years, are now finding it necessary to go in for a lot of theatrical devices if they are to hit the svelte hotel time. In many cases the money put into a turn is nearing the $50,000 mark. Sometimes a turn must work at least a year to break even on the outlay, and then may find that more heavy expenditures must be made to replenish material.

The turn that is regarded to have really made it important for singles to add a lot of production is Kay Thompson, who initially added the Williams Bros., and result was a brief smash. Since then, some of the top acts around the circuit have gone in for a lot of expensive production. Lilo and Constance Bennett are among the others who have shelled out fairly huge sums for an act.

The new trend has provided a field day for gents such as Charles O'Curran, Herb Ross, Irvin Graham, Eli Basse and others. They've been able to pick up a lot of coin in production and writing.

However, the cost of an act is no guarantee that it will be a hit on the circuits. There have been several turns that were abandoned after the first few dates.

The bulk of the produced acts have come to niteries from other fields. Lilo came from legit musicals; Marguerite Piazza from opera; Kay Thompson had a wider background in radio and films than she did in cafes when she started initially. Originally Denise Darcel came around with a male quartet backing her. Miss Darcel's intro to show biz was in films, and played a lot of coffee and cake dates before gaining some degree of acceptance.

Singers Drop Trappings

It's noted that some of the singers are dropping the expensive production trappings as soon as they're able. In the first place, the road payroll sometimes becomes unbearable, and not too many spots can afford to cover the gigantic nut. Again, the frequent shifts of background personnel provide headaches and sometimes cause the cancellation of dates. Thus, the sheer weight of the act sometimes forces the central figure to shed the high cost appendages.

Unfortunately, this doesn't always pare expenses. Obtaining a conductor or a recognized accompanist will sometimes cost as much as a vocal trio, but other costs such as travel and hotel are lowered.

The trend is also hitting male performers. Paul Hartman opens the Plaza Hotel, N. Y., tomorrow (Thurs.) with dancer Betty Luster and singer Ondine Forrest backing him.

The major aim of bulk of the acts is a long Las Vegas run to break even. But if costs keep mounting as they are with producers, choreographers, arrangers, song and material writers coming in for their share for under-the-line costs and conductors and/or accompanists and song-and-dance colleagues in for over-the-line costs, turns of this type may ultimately price themselves out of business.

EARTHA KITT, DANIELS CLICK IN BRIT. PREEMS

London, May 1.

Two American performers contributed standout jobs in a pair of London openings yesterday (Mon.). Billy Daniels at the Palladium was the top exhibit in a moderate bill overweighted with disk vocalists, and Eartha Kitt gave the Cafe de Paris one of the biggest nights of the year.

Miss Kitt drew an overflow house and gave a smash performance in this top British nitery showcase.

At preem show, Daniels gave a comparatively brief performance, possibly because of the inbalance of singers on the bill. Nonetheless he drew the top hand of the occasion. On the bill with Daniels are Teddy Johnson, Howard Jones & Reg Arnold, Dennis Lotis, Les Cinq Peres, Eve Boswell, Pearl Carr, Three Kaye Sisters, and Lita Roza. Others include The Nitwits (comedy band), Eddie Ash (juggler) and magician Channing Pollack. Latter was also a hit on this layout. Tommy Trinder emceed effectively.

Daniels Late for Date

London, May 1.

Billy Daniels arrived in London last Wednesday (25) after having been delayed several days by the court in the U. S. over his involvement in a recent shooting.

The delay meant that Daniels was unable to fulfil his scheduled appearance on the "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" commercial tv show, and also his week in variety at Glasgow Empire.

Billy Eckstine pinchhitted for Daniels on the tv show, and U. S. vocal instrumental team Howell & Radcliffe were brought in to head the bill at Glasgow. Daniels opened at the London Palladium last Monday (30) for a fortnight.

ASL Shakespeare Ball Has More Poetry Than Nudity; Bard's Bad B.O.

Apparently, the art colony around New York regards Shakespeare in the same light as high school students—elevating but not much fun. This feeling regarding the bard was reflected in the costumes at the Art Students League ball, held Friday (27) at the Roosevelt Hotel, N.Y.

Like a theatrical presentation at the theatre, the function had more decorum than the usual type of offering, less abandon, and paralleling the theatre, it's a prestige offering with downbeat b.o.

The artists' quest for culture and respectability is also evident by the choice of queen of the ball. Last year, the reigning beauty was Anita Ekberg and this year it's Shirley Jones. It could be that the League is going after the family trade. It hasn't gotten that far as yet since there are still enough offbeat costumes and personnel that makes the ASL and the Artists Equity Ball the top costume events in New York.

The incidence of nudity was at its lowest peak. Those that did come in sub-regulation raiment didn't bother to tag onto a Shakespearean character. There was a girl in a moth costume, who came in with a gent similarly garbed, that represented no particular connection with the Bard.

In fact most of the costumes were more literary and had less license. Even the limpwristers were more subdued than usual. After all, Shakespeare does command a certain amount of respect, and the New York Bohemians (most of them) behaved accordingly. Jose.

Trotter Building N.C. Hotel

Greensboro, N. C., May 1.

John Scott Trotter, bandleader for the George Gobel show and a native North Carolinian, is going to build a hotel at Chapel Hill, home of the University of North Carolina, where Trotter was educated.

The bandleader has owned Chapel Hill property for a number of years. Land adjacent to Trotter holdings had been purchased, and the Cafe Mouza on this property as well as a building on the older holding will both be torn down for the hotel.

United Hotels Corp. is acquiring Wilbur Clark's Desert Inn, Las Vegas, combining it with the Capri at Miami Beach in a new corporate subsidiary. Resultantly every holder of 100 shares in the parent Shawano Development Corp. will get a share in the United setup as bonus.

Clark will become president of United Hotels as part of deal.

Circus Review

Omaha Shrine Circus

Omaha, April 21.

Rink Wright presentation, with Tony Ridola, Bozo Harrell, Jules Jacot, Aero Stylites (2), Aerial Butterflies (6), The Roberts (2), the Selons (3), Les Bons (3), The Karrells (9), Valentine Sisters (2), Rudynoffs (3), Charley Allen's Bears, Al & Jeri Antonucci Chimps, St. Leon Troupe (8), Portis M. Sims Ponies, Luvas Sisters (2), James & Jo Madison with Tom Packs Elephants, Johnson & Owens, Noble Trio, Two Voleras, Jack Joyce, Wallendas (9), Deislers (3), Keith P. Latey Band (18). At City Aud, Omaha; $2 top.

The 27th annual Shrine Indoor Circus this year ran into its annual headache: The dates again were after the regular circus season has begun, thereby giving independent booker Rink Wright trouble in securing top acts. However, the ex-performer managed to corral enough standouts not on the sawdust trial at present to keep the management and customers satisfied.

The standout act, hands down, has the veteran Wallendas on the high wire. They again wind up with a seven-person pyramid without a net to earn an ovation. In addition, they supply a good ladder act as the Karrels and offer two fine trap acts as the Aero Stylites and the Aerial Butterflies.

On the ground, the key contribution is by the St. Leon Troupe with their A-1 teeter-board tricks. Topper is a 2½ with twist into a chair. The eight persons work at an exceptionally fast pace and the two gals—both lookers—are definitely assets.

Of the animal acts, James & Jo Madison, presenting the five Tom Packs Elephants, and Jules Jacot's lions and tigers are the best. An offbeat note is that Jacot's group of five lions and one tiger is announced as the "world's largest." Clyde Beatty should get a chuckle out of that.

Only bad routining appeared to be the spotting of the Deislers on the flying traps in the windup. They follow the Wallendas and are a big letdown, with the common passing leap their top stunt.

Circus acts of the standard variety include Jack Joyce, with three camels, two llamas, a zebra and a pony; Noble Trio, with a novel horizontal bar rigging; the Luvas Sisters, aerialists climaxing with a free heel catch; Charley Allen's well-groomed bears; Al & Jeri Antonucci's comic chimps; the Roberts, casting; Tony Ridola, stepladder fall; and Bozo Harrell, heavy juggling. charities.

AERIALIST HURT

Omaha, May 1.

Emily Greenwald, 31, an aerialist at the Shrine Indoor Circus, was seriously injured last week when she fell and plunged 40 feet from a spinning ring held in the teeth of her husband, Albert Greenwald.

Circus officials said the cause of the fall was the breaking of one of the wrist straps inside the ring.

Satchmo, Randall Barter Deal On Despite Snafus

A last minute snafu on two sides of the Atlantic nearly forced the cancellation of the Louis Armstrong tour in England and the Freddie Randall band in the U. S. Hitches have been patched up. On a mutual arrangement between the British Musicians Union and the American Federation of Musicans, the British crew will join Irving Feld's rock 'n' roller during its southern tour in New Orleans on May 19, and continuing on to Birmingham, Chattanooga, Raleigh, and winding up June 3 in Washington.

Armstrong's tribulations started with the sudden induction of Gary Crosby into the Army last week. Son of Der Bingle was slated to tour with Satchmo in England. At the same time, it was found that because there were no dates for the Randall crew, the tour would have to be cancelled. However, a last minute deal with Feld saved the situation for both outfits.

As it now stands, Armstrong and his All Stars plane out today (Wed.) and open Friday (4) at Empress Hall, London, for 10 days. They follow with a tour of the provinces starting May 14 at Manchester, and follow with Glasgow, Newcastle, Birmingham, Leicester, Dublin and Liverpool.

Ella Logan and Peg-Leg Bates have been signed to accompany Armstrong on the British jaunt.

Palace's 7th Anni

The Palace Theatre, N. Y., will mark its seventh anniversary since its return to a vaude policy with the layout starting May 18. Booker Danny Friendly is attempting to line up a special bill.

So far, however, no acts have been set.

Troupers Set Dinner

The Troupers, the femme theatrical charity group, will hold its annual dinner Sunday (6) at the Latin Quarter, N. Y. Milton Berle, whose late mother Sandra was active with the Troupers, will be the guest of honor at the shindig.

Proceeds of the event will go to the fund aiding children of the theatrical indigent.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

Pearl Bailey; Nat Brandwynne and Mischa Borr bands; $2.50 couvert.

The Waldorf has been hitting the jackpot with what (for it) are offbeat bookings, i.e. in the idiom of Benny Goodman ("best Holy Week business," says the Waldorf's Claude C. Philippe), and now Pearl Bailey, certainly a lusty-style songstress for the chichi Empire Room. Fact is she's a suave performer who doesn't have to shout to belt 'em out and the Monday night preem assumed the stature of an "event" before it was over. (Of course the Waldorf's Chevalier and Ray Bolger are more conventional—they did boffo biz—but only latterly have song stylists like Harry Belafonte and Dorothy Dandridge been slotted).

Miss Bailey, who started as a band singer with Cootie Williams, has a tongue-in-cheek authority and an ingratiating modesty which combine into one terrific end-result. The fact that Ella Logan and the just-closed Ray Bolger (on the eve of his Monday midnight Am-Airlines' flight to a Vegas date) were al fresco cafe floor collaborators in a snatch of a number was merely that much of a plus. It certainly was a nice "party" fillip, unusual for a floor, especially one on Park Ave., and again attests to the camaraderie of the show biz spirit. Incidentally, Miss Logan is a natural for this room.

Miss Bailey's prowess with a lyric is now standard but somehow the recent snowballing impact of her legit ("House of Flowers"), pix (two of them, one with Bob Hope) and her Ciro's (Hollywood) engagements has given her an nth degree maturity which is a jackpot payoff for the Empire Room customers.

She belts 'em, she croons 'em, she waxes lazy in a ringsider's borrowed chair, and she cajoles 'em, as she winds up with a boffo audience impression.

Per usual the two dansapation staples at the Hilton flagship, Nat Brandwynne and Mischa Borr bands, get 'em up on the parquet and keep 'em stepping. Abel.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 25.

Liberace, George Liberace in "Come As You Were" revue, with Vampira, Specialists (6), Dancers (12), G. Liberace & Ray Sinatra Orch (24); staged by Jack Baker; special songs & lyrics Frank Still, Michael London; lighting Ed Blondell; costumes Max Berman; orchestrations, Gordon Robinson; produced & directed by Liberace; $2 minimum.

For his return marking the first anni of the Riviera, Liberace has dreamed up a special showcase for his pianistic talent titled "Come As You Were." The fortnight run of the lavish, occasionally ostentatious revue will fill table capacity of the Clover room to the utmost, with maitre-de Jack Denison having to possibly turn away hundreds during the limited Liberace engagement.

A decidedly unusual aspect of the revue has to do with its ultimate goal—to become a color spec emanating from one of the networks on the Coast. With this in mind, Liberace spent $35,000 in mounting the production. The care with which he exercised each detail is clearly revealed throughout the 75 minutes which is completely divorced from the format of the vaude-nitery type of presentation along the Vegas Strip. It's a dare, but it works.

The seven scenes of "Come As You Were," are derived from the Bridey Murphy theme. The device propelling Liberace into the several flashbacks is catching, with Vampira, the keystone. She is the video character from Coast channels who typed herself after the w.k. Charles Addams femme, and with ghoulish though amusing dialog is terrif with Liberace.

He makes his entrance alone to open with some chatter, kidding his recent film and a warbling job on "Glorious Technicolor, Stereophonic Sound," before setting up the idea for the revue. Moving to the special set alongside the proscenium, he begins the story thread while thrusting lines with Vampira in her "Tomb." After she puts him into a trance, a glittering scene depicts "The Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel—1946," with Liberace at the Baldwin, George Liberace conducting "Jubiliberace Mambo," and "Girls In My Picture Book." A parade of lovelies illustrates this, culminating in the surprise entrance of Liberace's mother.

In "Orchestra Hall Chicago—1939," a concertized arrangement of Liszt's Concerto in A Major introduces the more serious term, but with "The Orpheum Theatre—1925" there is a light mood established winding up in Liberace and George doing a Mr. Gallagher & Mr. Shean sequence using updated lyrics. A long jump backward brings a colorful scene, "The Imperial Palace of Vienna—1856," when Liberace is transferred to Johann Strauss Jr., and George to Strauss Sr. "Blue Danube Waltz" is the offering here.

Best scene is the last, "King George's' Court—1456," where Liberace appears in a novel Court Jester dress complete with tights for his terpery, and George fiddles variations on "Humoresque." A tiny celeste is brought in for Liberace to tinkle "Calypso Blues," backed by bongo and congo drums. Once more the return to Vampira's Tomb is accomplished with Liberace waking from his trance to bring the time back to the present and a finale of faves, "September Song" and "Poor People of Paris." He essays a new tune, "Love Is the $64,000 Question," given a twist via some soft shoe measures, and segues into a wild curtain round of "Beer Barrel Polka" with entire cast.

Jack Baker's staging is excellent. He had short rehearsals only with the Dorothy Dorben Dancers but results are polished. Frank Still and Michael London's special songs are, in the main, well-contrived for the revue and Max Berman's costuming is rich, and Dice Inc. settings are well-planned as are Ed Blondell's lighting effects. Gordon Robinson's arrangements sound well as played by the augmented Ray Sinatra orch, conducted by Robinson, George Liberace and Sinatra. Will.

Lake Club, Spfld., Ill.

Springfield, Ill. April 22.

Hildegarde, Jimmy Vey, Miriam Sage Dancers (6), Buddy Kirk Orch (12); Admission $1.80.

Hildegarde is still kicking up good business on the nitery circuit. Opening night draw here was capacity plus.

As usual, Hildegarde mixes an intriguing amount of old and new material in her 50-minute turn on the floor. Among the familiar songs are such trademarks as "April In Paris," "Last Time I Saw" and "Darling, Je Vous Aime"—mais naturallement.

New items include a shorter and neater coiffure, a nouveau wardrobe complimented with the latest word in mink—a pink stole. Also, some fresh special songs, including two calypso ditties, "Chi Chi Castnango" and "Money."

By way of introducing her new conductor - accompanist, Martin Freed, the handkerchief-holding Hildegarde sings a medley of Al Jolson-Helen Morgan tunes. The Milwaukee madamoiselle handles the Morgan identifiers with savoir faire—the Jolson tunes belong to stronger vocalists.

Battling laryngitis, Hildegarde essays most of her songs in more talkative manner than usual. That goes unnoticed as she trades chitchat with ringsiders in the manner of old.

In keeping with the Gallic theme of the gay Parisienne is the oohla-la opening by the Miriam Sage Dancers. In chic costumes the six steppers certainly can can.

Comedian - dancer - xylophonist Jimmy Vey inherits the spot prior to Hildegarde's entrance. Hefty applause speaks well for his efforts at combining patter-dancing and xylophone work. Allen.

Frolic, Revere, Mass.

Revere, April 27.

Eileen Rogers, Kaytron Bros. (2), Rose Arena, Cliff Natale Orch (5), Buddy Thomas Line (10); $2.50 minimum.

Eileen Rogers, Columbia Record songstress, who broke in around the Boston area, is back after absence of several months during which time she appeared at the Fontainebleau in Miami. She emerges as a classy thrush. In a black and turquoise sheath, she opens with a fast-moving arrangement of "World On a String," segues into "Masquerade is Over" and wraps up big with a narrative song reading of "Our Town." Bow off is dramatic reading of "Love Thy Neighbor."

Rose Arena opens the show with slick ballet work and gets good mitting for sharp spins and twirls. Kaytron Bros., two hardworking comics with fast routines caught at the Bradford Roof here last week, take the middle spot for boff returns. The Buddy Thomas line, 10 tall beauties, have two sock production numbers.

Party biz has been keeping this nitery across the river from Boston jamppacked and boniface Jimmy Cella plans continuation of the same policy through the summer. Cliff Natale cuts a slick show and handles the dance sets in fine style. Guy.

Hotel Pierre, N. Y.

Constance Bennett & Co. (3); Stanley Melba Orch, conducted by Joseph Sudy, Alan Logan Music; couvert, $2 and $2.50.

This clinical appraisal of Constance Bennett's flyer into the bistro belt may read like "which issue of VARIETY do you read?" A couple of weeks ago she made resounding impact when debuting this act at the Nautilus, Miami Beach, and it may well be that the spontaneity of the customers, under the mellifluous Miami moon, had its osmosis effect on all hands.

Coming into the big city, even in a folksy room like the Pierre's Cotillion, which is not the "toughest" bolte in the world for performers, somehow Miss Bennett can't get rolling until the very end.

Where in theory her celluloid antecedents, as a fullfledged star, would have made the travesty on the "Piper Novik" Oscar-winning acceptance speech plausible, the fact that Miss Bennett is best identified with Hollywood gives that item a false note. Apart from the fact it has been done before by similar personalities, it seems an ungallant lampoon. Whatever the analysis, coming as it did in midriff of the act, it further retards when, at this point, the repertoire should achieve a resounding impact.

It isn't until the getoff rock 'n' roll nonsense that the glamorous Miss Bennett, looking just as glam in saddle-shoes and jeans, achieves any warmth.

Audience rapport is good from the start because (1), any adult in an environment like the Cotillion Room knows that Miss Bennett has been around more than three months; and (2), she's still a stunner, in a very fetching couturier creation.

Joe Ross and Jean Carrons are her aides, and perhaps they're a shade too proficient and on too much, as to militate against the star. After all, she's the topliner and the greatest audience values are expected to—and should—originate from her.

While her autobiographical references to her Air Force husband and her children are appealing, she utilizes these facets as raison d'etre for "Moritat" (in German, with a Dietrich slouch), and reprises of French folk songs ("taught my little girls in Switzerland, the same as when I learned them").

Herb Ross, who has been effective in stagings of other floorshow personalities, tried for a novelty, but somehow it doesn't come off. Perhaps one day a Hollywood personality will come out and just say she's playing the saloons for the loot; she is a name, hence they booked her; "I once sang 'Boulevard of Broken Dreams' in a picture called 'Moulin Rouge,' so here it is again" (in effect she does attack this phase of it in the more forthright manner); and the people buy it.

Reroutining may achieve a better overall result, with more accent on the talented star who quite obviously manifests enough values for the class saloon circuits. The capable Ross & Carrons team should be retained but, while too good perhaps for entr'acte stuff, they should not be permitted to outweigh the parity of values with the star. Third member of the "Co." is special pianist-maestro Peter Matz who does a proficient job.

This is the pre-blowoff show for the Cotillion Room. Robert Clary succeeds her and cafe reopens in the fall with Caterina Valente, Italian pop thrush known to Decca diskery fans via her multilingual Decca recordings made in Berlin. Otherwise Joe Sudy competently conducts the sprightly Stanley Melba dansapators and Alan Logan's relief combo is in the same idiom of okay "society" music. Abel.

Eden Roc, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, April 28.

Allan Jones, Jackie Kannon, Elissa Jayne, Mal Malkin Orch; $3.50-$5 minimum.

With the town bustling in year 'round season fashion, the booking policy in the plush Cafe Pompeii of this new hotel is being maintained at a high level in type of talent set by boniface Harry Mufson. With it he's evidently striving for showings of at least one "new" face to the area to keep the niterygoing localites interested, as well as luring the vacationers and conventioneers who are keeping Beach hotels filled in what used to be the lull period before summer. Current layout is typical of his thinking.

Allan Jones hasn't been seen in these parts in some years and then for returns to the Olympia theatre during its vaude days. In this class cafe spot he proves a solid handler of the topliner assignment. Jones has a slickly commercial act, tailored to get the most of his full, high ranging piping prowess. The vocalistics are buttressed by a warm, affable personality and fluid stage deportment, all of it plussed by shrewdly balanced catalog which aptly embraces a fast "With A Song In My Heart" for the warmer-upper; ballads such as "I'll Never Stop Loving You" and comedy-lined "Madelon." Big item is his narration and mitt-begetting selling of the top cleffings from "Carousel." Jones ties up the whole with "Our Love Is Here To Stay" for the palm-build to bow returns, and special lyric lead-in to "Donkey" for the sock climaxer.

Jackie Kannon is a comedy staple in the better hotel-cafes and moves into the spacious confines of this room with assurance and relaxed approach to his waggery. Of late, Kannon has developed that easy number to a point where some of his comedics are negated by glossing over a wham punch line. Withal, his stuff is fresh enough to keep him hitting consistently enough to keep him on top of the return results. The mocking melange contains intelligently barbed material on marriage, femmes and topical twists. There's also the standard pop song take-apart; a clever special on laugh-provokers and his trademarked lampoon on an Indian fakir with travelog overtones adding funny new slant.

Leggy acro-dancer Elissa Jayne is an orb-appealer who departs from the usual twists and turns to inject a smartly devised series of star carbonings while working out her acro stunts with topper a howl raiser satire on Bette Davis doing the double-jointed to dramatic lineage. She makes for a sparkling entre act.

Mal Malkin emcees matters ably and batons his fine orch from the keyboard for the backgroundings. Lary.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, April 27.

Bill Kenny, Three Rhythm Kings, Dick Olson, Lindsay-Daye Dancers (6), Champ Champagne Orch (8); $1 admission.

Bill Kenny's first time in the Gatineau Club in more than two years is also his first local booking sans the Ink Spots. No longer restricted to a scripted routine, Kenny exhibits socko ability in holding 'em throughout a 40-minute stanza to solid begoffs. He is backed by a piano-guitar-bass group, which also contributes some piping reminiscent of the Spots' style, but stays always in the background. Act gets big mitting. Business was near capacity for opening (26).

Held-over Three Rhythm Kings are still top quality and their reception is as big as the star's. Trio works a class terps session with one member handling brief piping adequately.

Lindsay-Daye Dancers hold over three clicko routines. Champ Champagne band showbacks and plays for dancing. Gorm.

Amato's, Portland, Ore.

Portland, Ore., April 25.

Guy Cherney, Stuart Morgan Dancers (3), Madcaps (2), Herman Jobelman Orch (6), Ruby Bishop; cover $1.50.

Guy Cherney, making his northwest debut at this plush spot, headlines a fine package for the next two weeks. Handsome lad displays a socko set of baritone pipes that have plenty of warmth and quality in every breath. He quickly establishes himself as a major leaguer with a distinctive style and a fine change of pace.

Best bets are special material for "You'd Be Surprised" and "I Wish I Were Single." He holds the customers while he directs a cute community sing bit. It's a begoff.

The Stuart Morgan Dancers, two tall fellas in black turtle-neck sweaters, toss, twist, twirl, and spin a petite femme all over the place. Gal has grace and makes the carefully timed tricks seem easy. Trio also do dancing between tricks and get good mitting.

The Madcaps get things under way with their comedy and harmonica antics. Two lads get off to a slow start and do little for the most part. Finally they display some real harmonica stuff for solid returns.

Herman Jobelman orch plays a fine show and set the tempo for dancing. Ruby Bishop is on the 88 and sings in the lounge. Feve.

Other Night Club Reviews On Page 64

Copacabana, N. Y.

Jules Podell presentation with Tony Martin (with Hal Borne), Phil Foster, Bonnie Sisters (3), Gary Mann, Sandra Devlin, Michael Durso & Frank Marti Orchs; staged by Douglas Coudy; costumes, Billy Livingston; music & lyrics, Durso, Mel Mitchell, Marvin Kahn; $5 minimum.

Tony Martin hasn't been in the N.Y. environs in about three years, last date in the area having been at the now defunct Riviera, Ft. Lee. At this date he comes in as the raison d'etre for a siege of astronomical business. The Jules Podell hospice is formatted to the tight pack which increases the capacity, and headwaiter Ronnie will be fairly busy keeping order at the tape.

Martin is supported by comedian Phil Foster and the Bonnie Sisters (latter New Acts) which makes for an entertaining as well as a boxoffice show.

Martin, of course, has kept in vocal trim during his lengthy absence from New York with a myriad of cafe and video shows plus an occasional film flyer. He is a superior singer and a relaxed performer. He charms the customers quite handily during his session lasting close to 50 minutes.

Bulk of his repertoire comprises pieces that fall familiarly. The tunes have been either associated with him or are w.k. enough to give the customers a lot of relaxation. But there are new tunes and a bit of special material, particularly a Calypso styled "Security," a rambling rondelay that gives the pipes a rest through long and personable dialog with his maestro-accompanist Hal Borne. It's a winner in this house. Despite the familiarity of the bulk of his tunes, they're given fresh and individual treatment.

Martin, apparently, has a great respect for tradition. These days, most singers bringing in added instrumentation, augment the regulation house orchestra with a rhythm ensemble. Martin still sticks to fiddles to provide contrapuntal embroidery.

Phil Foster has carved a special niche in cafes. Although he has moved out of Brooklyn some time ago, Brooklyn hasn't moved out of him. One day, the guys on the streetcorner where Foster used to hang around will demand royalties for writing his act.

Foster's dissertation on his old gang, his rambling discourses on marriage and children, are potent laugh getters. He concentrates more on his material than on his technique. When the act is over, he says so frankly, and it takes the customers just a while to start applauding, but he gets enough encouragement for another try.

Gary Mann provides personable renditions of the production tunes, cleffed by maestro Michael Durso, Mel Mitchell and Marvin Kahn. The tunes are easy to take and give producer Doug Coudy a good peg upon which to choreograph the 10-girl line. Billy Livingston's costumes are arresting. Durso, per usual, batons the sidemen through an intricate score with nary a hitch, and Frank Marti's Latin music gives the Arthur Murray addicts a reason to test the teacher's precepts.

The production dancer is Sandra Devlin, doubling from "Pipe Dream" who does some intricate and interesting terping. Her spot is rather long and could be pruned and she could simplify the routine to keep in the spirit of the music. Jose.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, April 27.

Kathy Barr, Tony Lovello, Tommy Reed Orch (8); $1, $.50 cover.

Terrace Grill has a pair of singers this session, and combo of songstress Kathy Barr and accordionist Tony Lovello shapes up as 35 minutes of good entertainment. Both are youngsters, both work hard, both register with a degree of personality.

Accordionist Lovello leads off, after the show intro by Tommy Reed doubling as m.c. Redhead Kathy Barr has figure and verve to go with her singing, and plays it strong through series of seven numbers for her 21 minutes of the show. Work is in the trained soprano range with musical comedy arrangements her forte, being especially effective on "La Vie En Rose" and "Stranger in Paradise" from "Kismet." There's a bit of roaming the stage with the hand mike to a medley of Paris tunes, some in French, and nifty workout on "Whatever Lola Wants" and "I Hear Music."

Opened lightly, but closes to hearty hand. Quin.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago April 23.

Danny Thomas (with Walter Popp), Four Step Bros., Chez Paree Adorables (6) (with Jimmy Lee), Brian Farnon Orch; $1.50 cover, $3.75 minimum.

In his first appearance at Chi's topdrawer Chez Paree after a three-year absence, Danny Thomas proves he has been sorely missed, if the near-capacity opening night crowd is any indication. Biz here should continue solid through Thomas' stay and for the next several months, with more top name draws upcoming.

Whatever small percentage of the house was not pre-sold, Thomas managed to win over quickly and he probably could have done so even if they had never heard of him. Not that his humor, principally, gets the crowd, but his delivery and a kind of spontaneous warmth he seems to generate dispose the customers favorably toward him.

At times he could be accused of a little too much schmaltz, but this must be what his fans expect. At one point, he has the aud freely joining in to sing "Sunshine Follows You" and, at another, he has them lighting matches in the darkened room, in memory of the late Gus Kahn. Corn? Sure, but the customers love it.

He warms up with a few hometown and child psychology tales. His act is replete with Yiddish and Lebanese references, as if he had never heard of the Middle East crisis; he occasionally alludes to a Hebrew chant or Yiddish colloquialism and he does his w.k. "Lebanese Curse," for smash response. With an occasional song, and the match-lighting finale, he goes off to salvos.

The Four Step Bros. open the bill with their razzle-dazzle brand of terpology. Each taking the spotlight in turn, they demonstrate a variety of styles and dances until they build up to the climax, where they dispense with music and depend on their own innate rhythm for a hand-lapping, shouting accompaniment. Group goes off to a big mitt.

Show is spaced by the same two production numbers used in the last show. The Brian Farnon orch does the usual pro job of backing the display. Gabe.

Hotel Radisson, Mpls.

Minneapolis, April 28.

Carl Brisson (2), Don McGrane Orch (8); $2.50 minimum.

Attesting to his great local popularity as a supper club entertainer is the fact that this is Carl Brisson's eleventh visit to this tony Flame Room and that this booking is for five weeks, the longest engagement ever played by any act here.

Making his first U.S. appearance since his return from his 11-week London Cafe de Paree stint, Brisson, before a packed audience, did only one opening night show running 70 minutes. And despite its length it wound up to begoffs.

The handsome, debonair Dane again impresses by the virility of his vocalistic showmanship. The years don't rub off his good looks or diminish his dash, fire, suavity and enthusiasm. And his performance retains its perennial appeal.

No Brisson program would be complete without such of his nifties as "The Old Lamplighter" and the performer, comes through with almost a dozen of them along with the number of new tunes. There also is the usual audience participation pieces of business that contribute to the well-paced diversified routining.

Anthony Costa, his accompanist, and Don McGrane band lend Brisson firstrate support. The McGrane outfit also plays for dance music. Rees.

Toast, N. Y.

The Toast is one of the small eastside intimeries that relies on keyboard talent to entertain the customers, Val Anthony and Jane Mack do just that. Alternating at the Steinway, they accompany their 88ing with some mellow vocals, principally in the standard and showtune vein.

Miss Mack, who exited the spot last Thursday (26), ripples over the black-and-whites with such tunes as "'S Wonderful," "Little Boy Blue," "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," "As Time Goes By" and "Back in Your Own Back Yard." In a similar vein, Anthony works over such tunes as "It's Alright With Me," "I'm Glad There Is You," "Sway, Me," "East of the Sun" and "They Can't Take That Away From Me."

They're both relaxed performers and top entries for small room set ups. The Toast, incidentally, has table accommodations for about 25, plus room for approximately 20 more at the bar, part of which is built around the piano. Decor of the room is plush. Jess.

Chez Paree, Montreal

Montreal, April 27.

Marty Allen & Mitch DeWood, Jack Hilliard, Ross Harvey, Joey Dean, Dino Vale, Nick Martin Orch (6), Michel Sauro Trio; No cover or minimum.

Boniface Solly Silver has assembled an all-male show for his Fontaine Bleu Room but avoids monotony with a variety of entertainers highlighted by the frantic comedics of Marty Allen & Mitch DeWood. Both youngsters have appeared in Montreal before and have just returned from an Australian junket. This trip has done much to improve general routining, pacing and finesse. They still work at top speed but have injected bits of business into layout, particularly during impresh session, that takes them out of the average groove. One of best is their gab fest with an invisible man called Joe.

Tenor Jack Hilliard registers solidly with a fine set of pipes and a songalog that exhibits this personable young singer to best advantage. More restrained gestures on some songs and fewer vocal tricks would enhance overall act. Hilliard has the voice, appearance and manner; the extras seem unneccessary.

Tapster Joey Dean opens the show in adequate fashion and the novelty is supplied by Ross Harvey and his parakeets. Garbed in a tight-fitting white suit, Harvey brings out five birds on a perch and runs them through a series of semi-gymnatics that appeal. While birds are performing in well-behaved fashion, Harvey maintains a clever tap sequence.

House singer and emcee, Dino Vale, keeps show running in his usual capable manner and Nick Martin baton's a good show for all. Michel Sauro's hep trio, one of the most lively in town, cuts dance music for the customers. Newt.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 24.

Four Lads, Jay Nemeth, Margaret Sisters (2) & Bruno, Barney Rawlings, Thunderbird Dancers (8), Al Jahns Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

On their first sojourn into this sometimes richly rewarding territory, the Four Lads tickle the fancies of Strip roundabouters as well as Thunderbird brass. The three-frame visit will do well for the room and for the Lads.

Distinctive feature of the foursome's warbling lies in the use of simplified harmony, the absence of overplayed gymnastics or choreography. Repertoire is diversified, with a long Frank Loesser medley a bit on the slow side, but containing a plethora of w.k. pops. With the Thunderbird Dancers, the Lads stage a bright finale to their latest Columbia disk, "Standing on the Corner," for good curtain.

Jay Nemeth's ventro segment, using a cute pooch has moments of keen amusement but he needs more inspired material, with the mutt's mugging overdone and used in place of dialog. Margaret Sisters & Bruno bring on the palm-pounding via whirls and some strength feats on the part of Bruno.

Barney Rawlings sets a nice pace in all the intros, warbles well among the Gayle Robbins' choreos. Al Jahns has top command over his musicmen, and has additional aid during the Four Lads closer in 88er Joe Mele, and drummer Eddie Nicholas. Will.

Fairmount, Ottawa

Ottawa, April 17.

Du Vals (2), Don Gilchrist, Carol Ritz, Dan Tatum, Jerry Burgess Orch (6); 75c admission.

The Fairmount Club offers a pleasant but unexciting bill this week, topped by a clicko acro-balance pair, the Du Vals, who insert enough thrill lifts and spins to keep the stanza alive. Don Gilchrist displays nice ability in terps but weak gab and showmanship. With routining and production, he could make an act acceptable to club circuits.

Bad booking puts Carol Ritz, also a tap dancer, on the same bill as Gilchrist. She has only soso talent but better staging and costuming. Dan Tatum, emcee and chanter, works a solo bit that is pleasant. Lad's pipes are adequate and his selection of tunes fitting. Jerry Burgess band showbacks and plays for dancing. Gorm.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 26.

Vic Damone, Betty & Jane Kean, Beachcombers (3) with Natalie, Copa Girls (12), Ian Bernard, Irving Ackerman, Antonio Morelli Orch (11); $2 minimum.

For three frames, the dulcet sounds from Vic Damone and the raucous comedy noises of the Kean Sisters will prevail in the Copa Room. During the period there will be hoisted the banner of filled tables.

Damone pipes the gamut of fave ballads and rhythm tunes, including a spellbinding "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered," collection of Gershwin alltimers, and "September Song." He then steps out with straw hat and cane in self-kidding of terp prowess before settling down to some okay soft shoe in "I've Got Two Left Feet." A sock "Let There Be Love" is given punch by Ian Bernard's rocking orchestration in mambo beats, with Bernard conducting the Antonio Morelli orchsters from the keyboard and Sid Bulkin interpolating the percussives. "Will It Be a Hit Or a Miss," which follows, points to disclicks by other warblers, for another good novelty turn. Reaction to his songstyling throughout is big.

Kean Sisters have nothing but tumult during their session preceding Damone. Jane's impressions, Betty's breakups generate applause and yocks. Betty is inclined to be very dowdy during some of the bits, tossing in some questionable quips, but Jane plays it straight with her sister when not giving forth with some excellent impressions. Couple of the sketches miss fire—the Monaco dialog, and "Guys and Dolls" parody, yet elsewhere the two deliver the material for all it's worth, which is for laughs. Irving Ackerman accomps the various ditties with necessary zeal. Will.

Chez Gaby, Paris

Paris, May 2.

Mariachis (9), Gaby Orch (7); $4 top.

Boite also called Tagada lives up to this moniker for it means a mixture of everything in terp time. Gaby uses an audience and employee participation format for okay results. He has the knack of getting everybody into the act without any forced aspects or tastelessness. Result is fun and employees all do bits with some surprising flair among them. Michele, tagged the "Cloakroom Piaf," uncorks a fine, big voice which, though untrained, is true in timbre and feeling. She has turned down offers to study and appear in professional show biz preferring her surer check room.

Professional note is struck by a Mexican song and instrumentalist group, the Mariachis (9), who give out with fine music. They also double at Gaby's new restaurant-cabaret, the Acapulco, featuring Mex dishes. Mosk.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, April 24.

Jimmy Ames, Day, Dawn & Dusk, Jean Stanley, Joe Parnello, Al De Marco, Kenny Sweet; no cover, no minimum.

This display opened to a light turnout possibly because the two top acts on the bill were here just a few months ago and have been booked back too soon.

Jimmy Ames tops the card with much the same material used the last time around. Walking on from the audience, Ames' general tone is one of flippant superiority; so much so that at first his act seems a throwaway. Interspersing his act with an occasional loud vocal, Ames does make a lot of noise. At times, too, he gets very funny; but his forte is boisterousness and occasional blue lines.

He does his own special brand of redskin parody for good returns. His biggest yield comes toward the end, when, with a club and a saw as props, he offers to give the audience his blood since it's the only way to please them. His unusual way of playing the musical saw is also good.

Day, Dawn & Dusk, a sepia trio with one 88ing and all three singing, put on an entertaining, well-paced visual-vocal act that has the audience joining in before it's all over.

Opening with a hearty version of "Without a Song," trio goes on to a low-pressure "He," and varies with dixieland and rock 'n' roll as well. Turn is well put together and generates high interest among the patrons. Act reaches the climax with a revival bit; the aud gets tambourines to join in with and those without, clap hands. It's a strong ending and the house sends the trio off to a hefty mitt.

Newcomer here is distaff thrush Jean Stanley. Miss Stanley does "C'est La Vie," "Chicago," (with special lyrics) for only fair returns. What special material she does use is somewhat weak and thin pipes don't help get them across, either. A number called "I'll Do Anything" never gets to the point. Thrush gets mild reaction and goes off to polite applause.

Joe Parnello and Al De Marco cut a neat show and Kenny Sweet plays standout intermission music. Gabe.

Bellevue Casino, Mont'l

Montreal, April 27.

Joe Howard, Dr. Giovanni, Bev & Sue, Harvey Ross, Casino Lovelies (10), Bix Belair Orch (11), Stan Sperber Trio; $1 admission.

As with every other anniversary show in the past seven years, owner Harry Holmok brings back ageless Joe Howard as the star and this celebration (the Bellevue Casino's seventh) is no exception.

Although well into his 80's, Howard still packs wallop and reprises his fabled song collection with savvy for near-capacity Casino business. Such items as "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" and "The Band Played On" score heavily and under Howard's direction end up in a general songfest for all patrons. Song with best impact is still his cakewalk number which he uses for a solid begoff.

Garrulous Dr. Giovanni shares headline slot with Howard on current layout and continues to outtalk and outsmart a group of gullible males who are lured on stage. Size of room and positioning of seats doesn't help start of act but once into his wrist-watch and wallet snatching, Giovanni garners okay interest.

Bev and Sue are trimly stacked and the brevity of costuming together with their interp hoofing does much to brighten overall offering. They appear first on the opening slot and in the finale in an Apache effort with the pony line.

Singer Harvey Ross does emcee chores as well as a couple of songs and the Bix Belair orch handles show music ably with the Stan Sperber combo doing the interlude stints. Newt.

New Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 25.

Freddy Martin Orch (17) with Martin Men (5), Johnny Cochrane, Dave Leonard, Bob Hunter; Shecky Green, Elvis Presley & Combo (3), Venus Starlets (14), Jack Teigen, Marge Baker; $2 minimum.

This layout, in for a month, seems likely to keep the crowds gathering in the Venus Room and the casino as well.

Freddy Martin's musical pleasantries are certainly well known, every tune essayed getting applause before and after the playing. Medley of his RCA Victor hits from 1940 ("Hut Sut Song") onward through 1955 ("April in Portugal") describes a neat panorama, and in the flashy keyboard techniques of Dave Leonard & Bob Hunter setting off "Cumana," there is a continuance of the pop mood.

The break for a terp session of "Oklahoma!" faves features some expert soloing by Jack Teigen and Marge Baker. Martin turns to "Clair de Lune" for contrast, then whips over a solid "St. Louis Blues" to wind up his initial inning. His "Music, Maestro, Please" vehicle saluting numerous bandleaders is good listening, but overlong, and could be excluded from the lengthy layout. The Martin Men please with "Back on the Bus," and vocalist Johnny Cochrane registers well.

Shecky Green's uninhibited comedy style is solid. He begins to move fast midway in his routine to build yock after yock until his bow off. Green is easily the talking point of this show with his rowdy mannerisms, punchy fighter bit, physical biz which win him a begoff.

Elvis Presley, coming in on a wing of advance hoopla, doesn't hit the mark here in a spot surfeited with rock and rollers playing in shifts in every cocktail lounge all over the Strip. The loud braying of the tunes which rocketed him to the bigtime is wearing, and the applause comes back edged with a polite sound. For the teenagers; he's a whiz; for the average Vegas spender, a fizz. His musical sound with the combo of three is uncouth, matching to a great extent the lyric content such as "Long Tall Sally," "I Got a Woman," "Money Honey" and other such ditties. Will.

Le Cupidon, N. Y.

As Edgar Bergen was being testimonialed in town at his 20th anni in radio, Rudy Vallee, who gave the ventriloquist the showcase that started him and Charlie McCarthy on the road to glory and greenbacks, was returning to Le Cupidon for a fortnight. Their presence in Gotham was a kind of footnote to history—and Vallee's turn punctuates that by being more of a remember-when reprise of his 30-odd years as a performer than having the aura of an act in the more orthodox sense.

The old Yale Blue crooner kid and Stein songer is doing an a.k. act for the a.k.'s as per his own admission at this eastside bistro. It's an overextended, overtime run-through that starts with the age theme, picks up the same thread here and there; tees off at a given level and remains more or less fixed there, thus causing a tapering off in interest. But some of the talky stuff is rigged to show biz philosophy from the mouth of one who knows whereof he speaks, as the records will attest. Like his tirade vs. latterday music accentuating the dubious positives of cacophony and blatancy as set against the smoother tune toppers of the '20s and '30s when less than a dozen records came off the beltline weekly compared to today's 100 or so. He builds a good case for "As Time Goes By," which he chants. Vallee also has a winning way when trying on melody vs. lyric for size, exemplified in the R&H "Must You Bury the Tune?"

Vallee is expected to take off on a sax spree and does so in a couple of numbers, including the three-penny "Moritat," after exchanging small and sometime stale quips with the saxist of the orch. Comes the inevitable "Whiffenpoof"; drinking songs with Irish flavor; Irish jokes; priest-and-rabbi jokes and other anecdotage that fail of the mark.

It is particularly not fitting for a Vallee to dish up material with bluish notes since that old school tie heavily pervades the Vallee personality. Because the ex-megaphonist looks high IQ and articulates ditto, the little bits of dirt seem offish, aside from being unnecessary.

Vallee can stand some editing. After a medley of oldies winding in "Stein Song," the act is really over. So his return for hokum in "Alouette," takeoffs on the Kinsey report and a bit of community sing is too much extra-added.

Holding over is Tina Louise who opens the two-act bill. The redhead with the oolala chassis is reviewed under New Acts. Ernie Warren's foursome cues the show niftily and alternates on the customer hoofing with the Luis Ortiz Trio's latino beat. Trau.

Blinstrub's, Boston

(FOLLOWUP)

Boston, April 23.

Opening to a jam packed convention crowd builging out the walls at Stanley Blinstrub's gargantuan 1,700-seater, Alan Dale comes through solid with sock renderings of standards and special material and wins big mitting. Two tunes "Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White" and "Sweet and Simple" get heavy palm whacking. A hilarious "Marilyn Monroe Symphony," in which he carbons Vaughn Monroe, Don Cornell, Tony Martin, Jimmy Durante, Billy Eckstine and Frankie Laine, is crowd pleaser and nets big round.

He takes the mike into the crowd for slick patter on "Love Walked In" and scores heavy returns with "Heart of My Heart," with community sing on second chorus for bowoff. Balance of show is same as last week. Guy.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., April 28.

Jose Greco & Co. (15), Happy Jesters (3), Donn Arden Dancers (10), Dean Campbell, Gardner-Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Saturdays.

Jose Greco's troupe of Spanish dancers, here for the first time, click as easily with regulars as they do with castinets and heels. This artistic offering follows closely the Lauritz Melchoir operatic change of menu by John Croft, talent chief of this ace bistro.

Greco and Lola De Ronda solo and team in folk and creative specialties and are capably supported by Margarita Zurita, Gitanillo Heredia, Dolores Del Carmen, Antonio Flores, Antonio Jimenez, Juan De Triana and Roberto Lorca, dancers, and Norina, vocalist. With them are Miguel Garcia, guitarist;

TINA LOUISE
Songs
12 Mins.
Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Tina Louise is no thrill on the trill but she's socko on the sex. Statuesque lass' minuses in the chirping department are more than squared in ogling quarters by an hour-glass torso topped by flaming tresses. So what if they look like titian-by-tincture? It's still hair, lots of it and entrancingly groomed, but that goes for the couture in general. Happily, while her endowments stand out, she does not press those points and is seemingly intent on making the grade as a singer. However, she's some distance away from that, though time and savvy coaching may upset the current dopesheet on her thrushing values. At this point she's a spectacular looker. Period.

Miss Loulse's vocal forays only serve to call attention to that nifty chassis. And the near-deadpan doesn't help the situation. But her rock 'n' roll song in cap 'n' gown, with the orch boys capped in complement, may be one of the grooves into which she will best fit. The finishing "Accustomed To Her Face," from the smash-eroo "My Fair Lady," is much too special for her. She's apparently not well gaited for the mood tunes. But they can't take that whatcha-macallit away from her. Trau.

MANUELA DE CADIZ and FLAMENCO DANCERS (3)
9 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Manuela De Cadiz, another femme and two male supporters merely have to tighten their flamenco routines in order to have a firstrate act. It's the kind of hand and foot machine-gunning that presents itself as good nitery material.

The colorful display of dancing is helped no end by the smart outfitting of Miss De Cadiz, whose brunet good looks, in her initial appearance of the session, are set off smartly by a mantilla and fragile yellow lace. Her bowoff in form-fitting toreadors doesn't hurt either. As for the performance proper, she and two men open in angular flamenco terping, egged on by pit leader Myron Roman's strong "Malaguena." Boys' second offering has both rhythm and precision but lacks the proper amount of Latin flamboyance. If it was lacking in two, the other miss reinjected it via her hippy solo showing. Whole troupe works the finale—Miss De Cadiz in her tight pants and loose hair modestly sharing the lead steps with the other three most of the time. Nevertheless, closer seems mostly superfluous. Art.

THE CAVELIERS (5)
Songs
13 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

These five white boys are billed as The Caveliers. Whether the misspelling is intentional or just a billboard error, it helps keep the quintet of songsters slightly out of line of direct collision with a new sepia quartet, which spells (correctly anyway) itself The Cavaliers and which sings pretty much the same brand of shmaltzy pop classics as does the turn reviewed herein. Palace crew, adorned in the military costume of Viennese operetta, does a respectable job with such as "Want What I Want When I Want It" and with an inspirational tune about cavalierly soldiers and such.

Though the costuming begins to be incongruous when the team switches to "June Is Busting Out All Over," "If I Loved You" and "Walk On," it's of small import since clothing is a matter easily corrected and their voices more than compensate. They do a special rhythm piece called "Noah Didn't It Rain," which is their best.

A mark of their worth is that, as a new turn, they wouldn't usually merit 13 minutes on stage, but this crew gets that and maybe a little more. They're just plain weak on harmony but, taking each man's voice by itself (and four of them do solos), the effect is excellent. Bass and baritone are deep and rich. The lead and middle tenors also have that rich quality, generally associated with musical comedy. The reason why they can't manage harmony is that even in solo singouts at least three of The Caveliers wavered faintly offkey—not enough to disturb the niceties of individual performance but, if repeated in unison, enough to throw the harmonic wheels out of gear. Art.

MORGANA KING
Songs
12 Mins.
Club Fifty-Nine, N. Y.

Morgana King, who records for the Mercury, knows how to sell a song. Chirp delivers in a whispery voice that makes for pleasant listening. Although an ofay, her vocaling is fashioned along lines reminiscent of such songstresses as Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald. She's a good bet for intimeries and jazz showcases.

Her songalog includes, such numbers as "'S Wonderful," "If You Could See Me Now" and "De-Lovely." Jess.

BONNIE SISTERS (3)
Songs
11 Mins.
Copacabana, N.Y.

The Bonnie Sisters, pretty and youthful singing trio, have vocal proficiency and good projection but unfortunately their material indicates that they are unwilling to take chances either in the choice of tunes or fresh treatment. They have gone in for othodoxy to a degree that makes them practically indistinguishable from many other three-girl formations.

The sole venture into a number that isn't regulation along the circuits is a rock 'n' roller, "Cry Baby" on the Rainbow label which provides a lot of din, but the others comprise standards delivered in stock style.

An act of this kind, however, is a good booking for the Copa since it's suitable for both the main room and the upstairs lounge and enables bonifaces Jules Podell to get full value. Jose.

GOETSCHI BROS. (3)
Music-Unicycle
7 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Goetschi Bros. make up a smooth vaude turn and are special insofar as stage cyclists are concerned. Two of the trio operate a noteworthy violin-clarinet duet perched atop tall unicycles and doing some nifty precision cycling.

Instrumental portion is only part of their individuality. They also do some non-cycle shenanigans that aren't new as sight gags go but are very funny, e.g., the man who disappears into the "subway" by bending his knees more deeply with each step he takes in his mock descent. Art.

BOB SWEENEY
Songs
15 Mins.
Club Fifty-Nine, N. Y.

Bob Sweeney is a 21-year-old singer with a nice voice and a fresh appearance. He's done some radio songstering in Philadelphia and has previously appeared as a production vocalist at the Copacabana. His song selection is good, but his delivery needs some vitaminizing in an individualistic vein.

Tuners delivered by him include "It's Love," "If You Love Me," "Sweet Lorraine," "I'm a Fool to Love You," "Ramblin' and Gamblin'" and the "Blue Star" theme from the "Medic" tver. Jess.

THE WILLOWS (5)
Songs
9 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

The Willows are five Negro youngsters who've stirred up some noise on wax with a slicing of "Churchbells May Ring." They've still got a long way to go, however, before they develop into an in-person entity.

They impress as being a bit stage shy and although they use the vocal tricks similar to most rock 'n' roll teams operatlng today, it comes across merely as a dull carbon.

Best bet in the tunalog is the workover of their disclick which they use as a closer. As warmer-uppers, "Come a Little Closer" and "I Won't Let You Go" fail to do the job. Gros.

PENNY NICHOLLS
Songs, Comedy
13 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Perky little blonde songstress comes up with comedy characterisations that score strongly, and has much potential for vaude and tv. Only fault is that she gives impression of trying too hard, but ease will come with experience.

A former danceband chirper, gal opens in lively style with "Entertainment." Segues by donning strawhat and impersonating a song-and-dance girl, a polished item that shows her all-round talent. Then into travesty of a not-so-dumb cowgirl, which she does with verve and much eye-rolling to amusement of outfronters.

Standout item is her impression of Gracie Fields singing "Papa Piccolino." Distaffer captures much of the star's vocal mannerisms and style, and leaves the customers happy. Follows with her recorded "Rock 'n' Roll Waltz," and shows terping talent in dance routine (garbed in blue tophat) after singing "New York, New York."

Comedy flair and pep come naturally, and there's scope for extension of act into dizzy dumb-blonde characters. She's capably supported by her own musical director, Billy Merrin. Gord.

PHIL WADDELL
Novelty
5 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

Phil Waddell is a Negro youngster with a strong set of choppers. He uses 'em to balance a table, a chair, a broom and a ladder. It's a fast-paced turn which holds aud attention.

Windup, of course, is putting 'em all together gripped in his dentures. It's good for a big sendoff and makes him a solid bet as an opener for similar vaude layouts. Gros.

WOODSON FAMILY (5)
Music, Dancing
15 Mins.
Fontanelle Hotel, Omaha

Perhaps a title of "Enlarged Acts" would be more fitting for the Woodsons than "New Acts" since this young group has been around quite a spell and has been caught by VARIETY previously. However, the singers and dancers now number five instead of four, with sister Rosalie added.

Kids, who all appear in their early 20s, are hard workers and have control from the moment they open with "Broadway Rhythm." Boys, Bobby on piano and Carl (Hambone) on bass, dance while playing and are on the entire 15 minutes.

Three girls are all lookers, expertly costumed, and contribute plenty of s.a., especially after doffing their skirts for dancing. Rosalie and Martha contribute adequate acros and tapping, while Nancy's forte is singing.

Woodsons expect to be a bigger act than ever in near future when brother Danny joins. Even so, there are few five-person acts today that work as fast or as hard. The kids are ready for A-1 showcasing. Trump.

ANN SUMMERS
Songs
25 Mins.
Barclay Hotel, Toronto

With the breakup of The Crosswinds Trio (Johnny Greer has become director of music at St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, alma mater of The Four Lads and The Crewcuts; Marvin Fudella is doing a single), Ann Summers is currently breaking in a new act here. Previous to joining The Crosswinds on three-part harmony, she was soloist with Ray McKinley's band and later with Sammy Kaye. She has also signed with Epic Records, a subsidiary of Columbia, and will have four sides released May 15.

For her breakin, the petit brunet, in pink sequined evening gown, wisely sticks to the standards and is over on ability and looks. She opens with "Angels Sing," this in finger-snapping, shout style; switches to a whisper version of "Why Was I Born?" for contrast, this for considerable feeling; and then a table-hopping tease of "Heart Belongs to Daddy." Her throaty delivery of "Under My Skin" and the bouncy "Sing, You Sinners" for encores round out the cinch stint to top applause, when caught. Apart from her disciplined vocalistics, Miss Summers is easy to look at and gains instant customer attention on her new go-it-alone direction. (Eddie Karem does all arrangements). McStay.

Shuberts Eye Liberace

000, the show is getting $90,000 for the fortnight at the Riviera and could thus come to Broadway with an operating profit as a cushion for necessary added expenses. It now runs 75 minutes, but it's planned to expand the segment known as "Orpheum Theatre 1925," including top vaude talent.

The show hit a record 745 dinner attendees at the Riviera last Friday (27) and topped it at the Saturday (28) dinner show with 752. Late show Saturday hit an alltime mark with 865 customers.

Following the Riviera date, Liberace is set for some concert appearances and will play Johann Strauss in a stage production of "Great Waltz" this summer at Dallas.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Beverly Hills, Calif., April 20.

Lydia Latzke, pianist, and Manuela de Jerez, Flamenco singer. A colorful, tuneful 45 minutes.

Happy Jesters, in for the first time, take over for 18 minutes with zany syncopation. Tuxed lads, one of them on guitar, whack new and old pops mingled with trick variations and imitations.

Donn Arden Dancers replace the Dorothy Dorben line, and Dean Campbell, baritone, supplants Dick Hyde, as singing emcee, after yearlong stays.

Gardner Benedict's crew and the Jimmy Wilber trio take care of the showbacking and dance interludes. Larry Vincent, singing pianist, reigns in the cocktail lounge. Koll.

Purple Onion, S. F.

San Francisco, April 17.

Jorie Remus, Will Holt, Vern Bennett; $1 admission.

The return of Jorie Remus to the Purple Onion's intimate basement provides the spot with the most solld hit it's had since she was in the selfsame room a couple of years ago. The only difference is that she's got a sidekick in the present show who's up to her own high standards. That would be Will Holt, guitar-strumming balladeer with a line of funny, if cerebral, chatter. He opens with the standard ballad, "Venezuela," then a French song, "Framboises," translating from chorus to chorus. He follows this with his own number, "Sinner Man," a sort of calypso-blues he's just recorded for Capitol with Les Baxter and closes with a bilingual "Moritat."

Miss Remus, clad in a clinging black dress, comes on with a specialty song, "Sailin' In and Out of Love," then goes into a funny monologue in which she claims to be a rich girl who's doing a night-spot bit for the fun of it.

In between flights of chatter, Miss Remus attacks blues and offers the customers a variety of gyrations of her svelte figure. She eventually gets through "Something Cool" and "Frankie & Johnny," both of which come out nicely.

Final portion of the show pairs Holt and Miss Remus doing several numbers. Whole show is aimed primarily at egghead audience the Purple Onion tends to attract, and goes over big, rating many encores. Stef.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, April 20.

Mickey Shaughnessy, Kay Carson, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1, $1.50 cover.

Entertainment offered for this fortnight is combo of songs and comedy, with Capitol songstress Kay Carson and film player Mickey Shaughnessy both in town for the first time. Between them there is about 45 minutes of show with some excellent singing by Miss Carson and some high spots of comedy in Shaughnessy's turn. But withal this one has to be tabbed medium well.

Recording of "Band of Gold" which Miss Carson did for Capitol, which bought it from an indie platter, has brought her to the night club and hotel circuit. Once Lisa Morrow with Benny Goodman and others, her chantings in the deeper registers are firstrate, as has been previously established. Her range is on the deeper side, and rhythm types of songs are her best entries, although she handles ballads pleasantly enough.

Shaughnessy rates as a brash Irishman who works a 28-minute turn around series of comic yarns, with dialect and facialities as embellishments. Between his stories he slips in some telling asides, with the Irish background steadily filtering through. Big inning is the five-year olds at the flickers, which is a gem of facial and vocal switches, running nearly 10 minutes and drawing a hand for its fun-poking at tv and cowpokes and the faithful moppet fans. Quin.

Steuben's, Boston

Boston, April 25.

Cavaliers (5), Gene Cooper, Janet, Clavel & Farrar (3), Don Dennis, Tony Bruno Orch (5), Harry Fink Trio; $2.50 minimum.

Ropes are up at Max and Joe Schneider's popular theatrical district supper club. The Cavaliers, five personable lads in red coats, get off a slick round of semi-classical tunes to heavy mitting. Opening with a medley, they segue into "I Want What I Want" and "Sweet Mystery of Life" and sock rendition of "Laugh, Clown Laugh." Their big voices still the steak knife wielders with "Only a Rose" and "Sometimes."

Don Dennis, singing emcee, intros each one separately for big returns and group rounds off nicely with "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and a medley for community sing. Gene Cooper opens the show with nice taps and a sharp soft shoe bit.

Janet, Clavel & Farrar, blonde and brunette femme and lad, win big aud reaction with their dance and acro stint. Femmes are whirled around and intricate triple dance routines go over big. Two femmes do acro flips and team goes into slick terping windup for heavy palm whacking.

Dennis does "Zoom Zoom" and "Mr. Wonderful" for fine returns and takes "Old Man River" for a nice ride. Bow off is "Hot Diggity." Tony Bruno cuts a slick show and Harry Fink Trio takes over the dance sets in nice fashion. Guy.

Liberty's, Paris

Paris, April 18.

Charpini & Brancato, Marcel Amont, Ginette Garcin, Jacqueline Maillan, Pierre Guerin, Jacques Meyran; $4 minimum.

Staple little eatery-nitery, off Place Blanche, still engenders a "Gay Paree" atmosphere with the waiters who get into the act plus a long line of entertainers who run a show continuously for four hours. Limp-wrist aspects remain on the miniscule stage, and it makes for a show which should please tourists wanting that let-your-hair-down feeling.

Singing waiters are surprisingly versatile as they do medley song sketches and other bits that make for yocks and do not disturb by breaking into the service. Main aspect is heckling of the swishy workers by boss Ton-Ton at the door. With waiter shenanigans are interspersed a bevy of fine patter, sing and impression acts with plenty of talent to uphold the name of this club for discovering young performers.

Regulars are Charpini & Brancato who unleash a falsetto sing act with hilarious side remarks and clowning in the drag tradition. Intelligent operatic takeoffs, plus the patter and preening, get solid returns.

Jacqueline Maillan does a songalog on ditties through the ages. Soubrettish delivery, good material and a fine sense of timing and comedy make this a good, if primarily local entry.

Ginette Garcin is a pert type who has a pleasing eclat and roguishness but ordinary material makes her only an okay aspect of this type of Gallic chantoosy. Pierre Guerin is a tall, personable singer-impressionist whose songs of Paris streetlife suffer from having been done before, and better, by bigger names.

Impressionist Marcel Amont, a bright looking youth, has an inventive suppleness which turns his takeoffs on carioca tunes, flamenco and bullfighting into firstrate parody and satire with a sense of movement and comedy that makes him a coming star. Material keeps him primarily Gallic in appeal without the more rounded aspects, as yet, for more international chances. Jacques Meyran tosses off a rapid line of stories and gags for plenty of laughs.

Marion Colby chirps with ingratiating style during her brief songfest. Highlight is "Hey There," the hit tune from "Pajama Game," from which she took leave not too long ago. She makes good impression via sharp snappy routining.

This remains one of the most authentic offbeat niteries here and keeps its prestige intact with another clever show. Mosk.

Rice Hotel, Houston

Houston, April 20.

Yonely, Bill Williams Orch; $1-$2 cover.

Droll comic Yonely broke the Empire Room up opening night. Laughmaker shouldn't be lonely for customers during his two-week stand. Not a break-'em-up jester, Yonely builds his act to climaxes that pierce the 45-minute act for distinct times. Between peaks he keeps the customers chuckling with him.

Originality of his material from the opener, in which he doesn't say a word for about two minutes, relying only on panto, to the closer makes the act a refreshing one. Uses musical props that include a foot-long fiddle, a tiny but powerful trumpet and a dainty accordion. And of course sits down at the piano to go through a bit on Mr. Candelabra. Fors.

October to October), the "improvement" becomes obvious. In '55, the A-II ratings represented 35.17%, of the total of films reviewed. During the first quarter of 1956, the ratio runs to 47.1%. Likewise, whereas the ratio of B classifications last year came to 33.64%, the comparison for the shorter period in 1956 showed a drop to 22.6%.

Industry execs, who don't particularly care what the Legion does as long as there's no "C" rating (there are some towns where a "B" could affect the b.o.) get the impression that the Catholic rating body is taking a broader view of film content.

"There are some pictures where they've been more than fair," noted a company man. To support his point, he cited the fact that such pictures as "Rebel Without a Cause," "Diane," "Gaby," "Man in the Gray Flannel Suit," "Scarlet Hour," etc., managed to get an A-II rating.

Legion continues tough on imports. Of 11 pix reviewed (including British), four were condemned, two rated "B", another two went into "A" and three drew "A-II." With the exception of the British, foreign lingualers as a rule are unaffected by the Legion. Most don't even bother applying for a Code seal, since they play mostly the arties anyway.

There is a feeling that, as the year goes on, the Legion may again become a problem in the light of the unusual films coming up. It's interesting to note that almost all of the "B" rated pix so far this year came from the majors' stable, whereas in the "A-II" category, the percentage of major product was lower. It rose again in the A-I grouping.

Last year, following the Bishops' conference in Washington, the Catholic leaders issued a blast against films, noting "a rising tide" of immorality. They also accused the Code of "laxness." Code, if anything, has eased up in recent months, and the Legion apparently is no longer willing—or in a position—to stem the tide.

Cannes Fete

attacked for its theme of anti-militarism and anti-clericalism.

Through all this maze of censorship the French bedroom comedies and sensational sex films have been little influenced. Even a cycle of gangster films has largely escaped the scissors. Of course, many of these are placed on the "forbidden to those under 16" list, but otherwise rarely censored.

Thus the paradox exists with the abundance of frank French films on one hand and the noticeable lack of realistic treatments of topical subjects on the other. Numerous organizations are fighting censorship with little success so far. It leaves a curious dilemma of one of the most enlightened, free-thinking countries shackled by a censorship that at times exceeds that of other countries.

Ted Collins on Comm'ls

face the next morning. It was fun while we were doing it, but now that I look back, I wonder if it was worth it," Collins avers.

On the other hand, under a deal with Sullivan, "Kate doesn't have to show up until Sunday morning, and I only have to put in a couple of days during the week on the scenery and lighting. Sullivan has all the problems, not us; he's the one that worries about the ratings, the unions, the lawyers. And we get nearly as much money out of the entire deal as we would if we were doing our own show. As for the income tax people, for once we'd be able to say, 'Here it is, here's what we made, and we didn't spend any of it on a staff and production.' There's quite a difference in working this way." Sullivan's deal is exclusive; Miss Smith could not do her own series, but she would be allowed to appear in a pair of spectaculars, and that's one of the prospects Collins is exploring.

As for the film show, Collins is pessimistic. He thinks in terms of film because "a live show is definitely out" and film offers the convenience of production plus the prospect of residuals. But the trouble is that so far Collins has found that prospective clients and agencies want in on the film show with offers to put up half the money in return for certain controls. "We'll do a film show only if it's with our own money and we control the show completely, and that includes the say-so over reruns. We've always controlled our own shows, and that's the way we want it to continue."

Money No Object?

In spite of the nix on a live series, the offers keep coming in, says Collins, and "we've got to listen, so we mention an outlandish figure that nobody can afford. But you never can tell. That's the way we got General Foods as a sponsor on CBS Radio. We were doing an hour show for A&P, getting about $18,000 a week for it, when General Foods approached us. We didn't want to leave A&P, so we said we'd want $60,000 a week to go to work for General Foods. They said it was impossible, but they offered us $35,000. We had to take it; we went to John Hartford and showed him the contract and he said he wouldn't stand in our way. That was quite a deal, incidentally; they couldn't drop us without three years' notice. The deal was for three years in advance, and a new deal came up every year. But they were happy; we worked for them for 16 years, and the only reason we parted company was that we went on television in a multiple-sponsor format where they didn't want to share us but couldn't afford to take the whole daytime hour."

What with a running circle of negotiations for next fall, Collins has had time to catch up with some modern-day trends in television—his enforced hospitalization also gave him a chance at some heavy televiewing—and he doesn't like everything he sees.

Just Fickle, Eh?

His biggest beef is the talent-turned-pitchman. That goes for talent doing the commercials, spending more time on personal apearances for the sponsor than on the show and the plethora of free plugs on the air. "It's disgusting and revolting," he declares. One announcer, after years with a cigaret company, suddenly switches to a cigar sponsor and announces that he's given up cigarets and its's the greatest thing that ever happened to him. Another distinguished actor appears in a syndicated show and in N. Y. extols the virtues of Schaefer Beer and in Plattsburg, N. Y. does the same for Utica Beer. Another pitches one product for three weeks and suddenly is endorsing a competftive brand.

There's the night-owl emcee who stuffs himself with sponsors' products—hamburgers from the broiler being pitched, salamis, beer—"I don't see how he does it without getting indigestion every night," Collins says. Same guy plugs the garage across the street from his theatre, "Just to save a lousy $1.50 a night." A daytime show had a men's "fashion parade" recently; "five guys got up wearing almost identical blue suits. They were all on the show's staff. So they got a free suit out of it. But was it worth lousing up the program for a suit?"

Biggest gripe from Collins is the demand for personal appearances by talent. "They've got to hit supermarkets sometimes, three times a day. What do they do there, in those chicken-markets? Why should talent have to do this? Sometimes I think the sponsors are more worried about the personal appearances than whether the show is any good."

It's not for them, he states; he and Miss Smith have already turned down offers to do commercials. "You can't keep fooling the public, and some day the sponsor will come up to you and say, 'Sorry, but you aren't selling our goods anymore.' It's all right for someone like Sullivan, who has been selling Lincolns and Mercurys and only them for eight years and who doesn't overdo the p.a.'s on the air, but I can't see it when a talent changes his endorsement every 13 weeks."

On the matter of the high cost of talent for television, Collins wants to know what all the shouting's about. He points out that Hollywood film "names" are doing hour dramas for $500; "we used to pay the same type of names $8,000 or $9,000 for an apperance, and in radio, yet." Similarly, actors in featured roles on Broadway are working television dramas at scale just to get in the public and Hollywood eye, while "we paid the same people $2,000 and up for a radio appearance." Even the top names can come off with a multi-million dollar deal—"that's what they and the networks say they are getting, anyway—but how much of that do they keep, even before taxes?"

Bill Paley's Whimsy

Collins, who has always held control over Miss Smith's shows, says in all the years until NBC bounced Firestone off the network, he saw only the instance of network usurpation of time in order to install a show of its own. "And that was in the early days, when we were working for La Palina Cigars on what later became CBS. We were preceded by a musical show sponsored by a dress shop, and the theme song was 'Alice Blue Gown.' Bill Paley, for some reason, hated that song, and he kept finding excuses to fight with the dress shop to change the theme. The shop kept insisting that it wanted the theme, and finally, Paley, exasperated, just bounced the show and the sponsor."

Back on the subject of preferring that the headaches rest on other people's shoulders, Collins recalls the last 13 weeks of the daytime tv'er on NBC. They broke their contract for several reasons, one of which was the web's insistence that Miss Smith do commercials, but Collins specifically recalls that ratings were one source of friction. "We were coasting along with an 18 average, way above any daytime show then or now, when just as our last 13 weeks began, the Army-McCarthy hearings went on the air. Well, we just couldn't buck that, nobody could. It was like fighting a supercharged soap opera. One day McCarthy would reveal this and promise another development for tomorrow, another day he'd be on the stand, the next day he'd be castigating Stevens or threatening Symington. We just couldn't do anything about it. The final outcome was that our rating slipped down to a 5. Don't you think the network began to call conferences with us over the rating drop? The final touch of irony was that we and the hearings went off the air exactly on the same date."

WMCA Move

thirties, WMCA aired a number of live shows. One of the WMCA Broadway studios, large enough to seat roughly 400 to 500 people plus a full-sized symph orch, was rented out in latter days for network rehearsals, etc.

In the new setup at 415 Madison, WMCA has three compact studios, which a spokesman said was sufficient to handle station needs. The old setup was so poorly arranged for broadcast purposes, he said, that the outlet has been able to fit all its employees comfortably into space three times as small.

Music Hall, N. Y.

"Merry Minstrels," produced by Leon Leonidoff, with Raymond Paige Orch, Alcetty, Les Charlivels (3); "The Swan" (M-G), reviewed in VARIETY April 11, '56.

King-sized presentation house has a flashy layout this session with a minstrel motif that lends itself to colorful costuming by Frank Spencer, catchy tunes and more than adequate values in the choreography department. The ballet corps, with Margaret Sande as director, and the Rockettes, with dances by Emilia Sherman, all with Raymond Paige's symph for splendid backing, offer the kind of precision and razzle-dazzle terping that click with the Hall's regulars and visiting out-of-towners.

Opening number is "The Big Parade," in which the entire house company marches around the stage and outer ramp with spectacle effect, nicely setting the tone for the overall display. With the ballet troupe as backdrop, John Charlivel does a twirling dance turn that slows the pace and could be dispensed with, particularly since he's back later with his two brothers, all taking billing as Les Charlivels.

Alcetty has novelty assets to offer, if there is such a thing as novelty in a juggler act. Working with a femme assistant, he nearly touches the top of the proscenium arch, perhaps 60 feet up, with a spinning saucer balanced on a flexible pole. In another bit he uses wine glasses and a lamp on a tray that's also on the tall and slack rod. Hep to the showmanship angles, Alcetty appears to lose his grip several times, drawing aud shrieks and mitting. Good for variety programming in most spots but that big pole reaching might be lost on small-screen television.

Les Charlivels are stagenamed the "Whirling Minstrels" for the current show but they look and sound too Continental for such a Yank form of bygone show business. Three freres alternate at violin, piano and clarinet, do tap acro stuff and vocalize to boot. It's a well-paced turn with no lags but unfortunately not in sync with the theme of the Hall show. Gene.

Radiocentro, Havana

Havana, April 24.

Lola Flores, Carmen Flores, Paco Aguilar, Anita & Manolo, Elvirita Lopez, Tito Hernandez; Adolfo Guzman, orch leader; "The Littlest Outlaw" (Disney); $1.20.

Lola Flores' Spanish troupe features beautiful senioritas, gay music, flashing smiles and flashy feet. Miss Flores herself is all of these. She sings and she dances and is wholly caught up in the music. (Her talents are not confined to the stage: she is also the star of several Latin films.)

Anita & Manolo are any Spanish dance team—until the music stops and they continue ever faster, with only their own clapping beating time. Their off-the-cuff remarks to the audience add humor and charm to a type of dancing which is ordinarily highly stylized.

Paco Aguilar is a competent guitarist (without which a Spanish troupe isn't), and Elvirita Lopez leads the chorus line.

Tito Hernandez, the young Cuban mimic, seems a bit out of place. His portrayal of the precocious brat is more often silly than funny (and was recently banned from tv when the minister of communications prohibited female impersonations). Tito's humor picks up a bit when he does some monologs on a phone, including a conversation "from Africa." Jay.

Glasgow, April 26.

Howell & Radcliffe, Stan Stennett, George Martin, Kirk Stevens, Penny Nichols (with Billy Merrin), Lizzet & Eddie, Scott's Sea Lions (2), Maurice French, George Clarkson & Gail Leslie, Bobby Dowds Orch.

Hurriedly taking the place of Billy Daniels, unable to leave the U.S.A. as pacted because of legal snags over his court proceedings, Howell & Radcliffe, colored American twosome, score strongly in a bright act of song, comedy and mime. Pair are well contrasted, offer infectious fun and win mitting from stubholders on first time at this vaudery.

Stan Stennett, in spot before closing act, clicks with goofy comedy and burlesque, and entertaining guitar-playing. Young Welsh comedian draws laughs and is one of the best bets in current British vaude.

George Martin adopts a casual conversational style to put over topical patter, but spoils effect by introducing the indigo tinge. Maurice French juggles with skill on a roller-balancer. George Clarkson & Gail Leslie, husband-wife twosome, open both segments with slick dancing, being colorfully garbed.

Scott's Sea Lions, with male trainer on-stage, are up to comical tricks of balancing and playing instruments, and please animal-act lovers. Lizzet & Eddie, Danish brother-and-sister act, have slick acro-dancing act. Kirk Stevens wins palming for refreshing songalog, winding with the Scot tune "Here's to the Gordons."

Penny Nichols is a blonde bombshell who presents comedy characterizations to solid effect, scoring one of strongest impacts in layout. She has Billy Merrin, former English bandleader, as musical director in orch pit. Gord.

Alhambra, Paris

Paris, April 25.

Renee Lebas, Menestrals (3), Jean-Yves De La Tour & Monique Montez; Italo "Il Segno Di Venere" (The Sign of Venus) (Italian) reviewed in VARIETY June 8, '55; $2 top.

Renee Lebas displays her ease and showmanship in a Parisian songalog that smacks of the throb school of Gallic singing. A big voice adequately portrays the exuberance or drama of the street ballads and her controlled movements puts the right emphasis on the lyrics. Miss Lebas looks ready for U.S. locations partial to Parisian balladeering. A better choice of material, eschewing those already made known by predecessors, will help.

Menestrals (3), a singing trio composed of two men and a girl, give out with some old folksongs and portend a coming choral group in the clever production aspects and well blended voices.

Jean-Yves De La Tour puts a thoroughbred white horse through dance paces and then on an elegant brown horse is joined by Monique Montez, who does a pas de deux with the equine pair. Miss Montez displays a whirling cancan interlude before her doubling with the horse. Fine timing and control, plus an expert dance mime of the horsey ways, make this an interesting offbeat entry for both musichall and circus. Mosk.

Apollo, N. Y.

Willis Jackson Orch (12), The Willows (5), T-Bone Walker, Big Maybelle, Phil Waddell, Edwards Bros. (3), Allen Drew; "House of Bamboo" (20th).

Vet singers T-Bone Walker and Big Maybelle carry the ball this sesh at the Harlem flagship for an okay score. Both are faves in this territory and they bring the few lifts to an otherwise routine layout.

Willis Jackson's orch kicks off the bill with the usual uptempo opener then comes back midway in the card to show off the maestro's frantic tenor sax tootling. Stint is frenzy-packed and continually whips up aud enthusiasm. Jackson is backed by three rhythm, four brass and four reed.

Allen Drew, as emcee, has an amiable patter spiel. Complementing the aforementioned headliners are newcomers to the house balancer Phil Waddell and The Willows, a rock 'n' roll vocal combo. Both are reviewed in New Acts. The Edwards Bros., spotted between Big Maybelle and T-Bone Walker, are an ofay acro turn with a neat bag of tricks. Trio pulls off some nifty handbalancing bits in a slick seven-minute run.

T-Bone Walker packs a lot of punch in the closing niche. Working with an electric guitar, he blasts out a flock of blues tunes for mitt-grabbing effect. He gets a solid assist during his turn from T-Bone Walker Jr. The youngster seems to have learned quite a bit from the old man and their duet is socko.

Big Maybelle continues to carry a lot of weight here and she comes over strong in a nicely routined songalog that includes "Old Man River," "Candy" and "I Cried Like A Baby." Her big pipes give each number a special punch.

The Jackson orch lays down a good accompanying beat throughout. Gros.

Wilson to King Circus

Warren (Billy) Wilson has been named contracting pressagent for the King Bros. Circus, succeeding Eddie Johnson, who died recently. He will handle press, radio and television for the eastern division of the outfit.

Wilson was formerly with Sparks, Cole Bros. and Clyde Beatty circuses.

Palace, N. Y.

Six Antonetts, Teddy Hale, Billie & Gene Lambart, Roy Douglas & Dori, Goetschi Bros. (3), The Caveliers (5), Roger Ray, Manuela DeCadiz & Flamenco Dancers (4); "Star of India" (U-A), reviewed in VARIETY this week.

Palace carries a nice vaude setup this session, including the three new acts. Though the bill has typical array of vaude talent, two of the new turns, a five-man singing troupe and four flamenco terpsichoreans, lift the overall stanza slightly out of its usual element.

The billing called for Six Antonetts, but there are only five of the risley artists in action. Execution of their two-and-a-half backflips off the teetertotter and their tumbling having a fast, exciting quality. Teddy Hale, a slick performer, needs a fresher tap routining since his material is repetitious.

Billie & Gene Lambart are a well-disciplined pair. Expert tumbling is done largely by the agile male, but Billie comes in for her share of appreciation in her role as muscular base for his balancing operations.

Roy Douglas, who comes into the Palace this time with the assistance of a leggy blond, Dori, is the weakest link in the chain. No question of his ventro ability; technically he carries on a neat song duet with his dummy, but his humor is flat. A brushup on timing and general demeanor might help, since the actual verbiage would probably be okay with a different type of delivery. The Goetschi Bros. and the Caveliers are both reviewed in New Acts.

Roger Ray has a tune with no substance, but it rambles along managing to get quite a lot of subdued laughter. Ray injects a certain amount of whimsy into a bit built about a xylophone which he only incidentally plays. Monolog about two Indian lovers and other items, all of which seem trivial yet entertaining, are delivered as he sprawls in various attitudes over his musical instrument. Last act, Manuela De Cadiz and three assistants is noted in New Acts. Art.

Ice Show Review

(SPORTSPALAST, BERLIN)

Berlin, April 20.

Jacqueline du Bief, Ilse & Eric Pausin, Dorothy Goos, Murray Galbraith, Erika Kraft, Heinz Kroel, Guy Longpre & Ivor Robson, Rudy Richards, Michele Andrews, Sagitta & Bob Laenge, Joe Jackson Jr., Topper Martyn, Paul Castle, Glamour "Icers," the Ice Squires, Sem Kapper orchestra (14). Preemed Sportspalast, Berlin, April 14, 1956. $1.50 top.

The appearance of "Holiday On Ice" is here always one of the year's highlights. This is one of the best American ice extravaganza that ever came to Berlin. It's a magnificent presentation of colors, music and spectacular displays on ice.

Headlining this show of 27 different numbers is Jacqueline du Bief, world champ of 1952. New to the "Holiday" troupe, Miss du Bief appears in two numbers, "Champagne Cocktail" and "Inspiration." Both are appealing in particular to the sophisticated blade fans who already have tabbed Miss Bief: "The Pavlova On Ice." Her skating is breathtaking.

Former amateur skaters are benefitting from their membership in this ensemble. That goes, for instance, for Heinz Kroel. Besides giving a solo stint ("Swing and Precision"), he clicks in the "Big Waltz" number with Myra Key and in another one called "High Spirits" with Erika Kraft. Latter, German champ of 1952, has also a solid number in "Bird of Paradise."

Big ovations also for Eric & Ilse Pausin, favorites with Berliners for the past 20 years. Their numbers, "Artistic Adagio" and "Interpretation," are two of the many highlights of this show.

Other excellent couples include Dorothy Goos and Murray Galbraith in "One Night At the Maxim"; Rudy Richards and Michele Andrews in "South Sea Fantasy" and "Rhythm of the Blues" and Sagitta & Bob Laenge in "The Good Old Time."

Excellent slapstick is supplied by Guy Longpre and Ivar Robson, both also special faves with Berliners of long standing. Both appear in "The Cooks" and then it's Longpre along in "On Board," a real howler.

Topper Martyn is an outstanding juggler on skates, Paul Castle jumps boxes and is terrific. Joe Jackson Jr. does a nice (minus skates though) bicycle stint and Galbraith contributes a fine performance as a "globetrotter."

Two big-scale numbers deserve special appraisal. The first one is called "Rhapsody In Blue" with Dorothy Goos as star and the Glamour Icers plus the Ice Squires participating, accompanied by Gershwin's music. The second is "Carnival in New Orleans" in which everyone of the large cast (nearly 100) appears for the show's finale.

Sem Kapper's 14-piece orch supplies a fine musical background.

"Holiday On Ice," in Berlin until April 29, goes to Stuttgart next. Hans.

Vaude Layout at Chi Drive-In Loses Vs. the Elements; Honks Replace Mitts

If a themesong were needed for this drive-in stageshow, it would probably be "Singing in the Rain." With tornado warnings up Friday night (27) and rain on the two subsequent nights of this weekend package, maiden voyage of the drive-in stageshow can be termed a washout.

With a $7,500 budget for talent, and approximately another grand and a half for overhead and pix, the nut here is close to $9,000. With a $1.75 admish, starlight operator Stanford Kohlberg needs at least 5,000 paid admissions over a weekend to break even. Opening weekend saw approximately 200 cars showing up each night, for a total of 600; figuring an average of 2½ people per car, 1,500 tickets were sold, or 3,500 less than the breakeven point. About $2,500 was grossed to meet a $9,000 nut.

Certainly weather conditions were no help; Kohlberg also admits he may have started the vaude layouts too soon in the season. Casting around for reasons to explain the disappointing turnout, three loom as strong factors: weather, high admission price ($1.75 vs. usual $1.25 drive-in price hereabouts), and public unawareness of what was taking place at the Starlite because of a weak ad campaign. Checking around with neighboring ozoners opening night, Kohlberg found that their business was normal despite storm signals, as compared with his b.o., which was two-thirds off for a Friday night.

As far as drawing power goes, the opening show had Nick Noble and The Hilltoppers. Added so was the fact that the show was emceed by deejay Jim Lounsbury fronting his own band; Lounsbury has a big teen following hereabouts.

Kohlberg thinks the public wasn't ready for the idea of live talent at a drive-in; he says this was reflected in the advance sale response. People, he said, were confused about the idea and weren't sure whether the ads meant live stageshows or pix and shorts featuring the name acts advertised. Kohlberg thinks the answer is to do a better job of selling his innovation and plans to go in for a heavy radio campaign now to put it across.

As for the stageshow itself, it turned out to be an entertaining package, albeit full of new problems for the acts due to the outdoor showcasing and the size of the layout. A new kind of applause, horn-honking, made its debut here.

The Chordettes, appearing only Saturday (28) and Sunday (29), performed like troupers in a driving rain; the whole thing was reminescent of a USO show in the South Pacific, but without the 10,000 troops sitting on their helmets. Spotting a few pop faves between their cadence disk clicks, "Eddie, My Love" and "Mr. Sandman," the girls got loud horn blasts for their winning parlay of pleasing good looks, tuneful pipes and hip choreography. Gals got off to loud honks.

The Hilltoppers opened with "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," and segued with "Till Then," their most identifying disk click. Switching to rhythm and blues, they asked for a horn-honking accompaniment to "Teardrops From My Eyes." They got it, and the Starlite office phone was very busy by this time answering the complaints of neighboring residents. Contending with an adverse wind and overhead airplane noises, group did a showmanly job of selling its songology.

Nick Noble, a performer whose poise and showmanship increase each time caught, won the aud early and kept it. Singing against the wind, Noble opened with "There'll Be Some Changes Made" and "To You, My Love," for a big blast from the customers. His parley of nostalgia on tunes like "Making Whoopee," "Rock-a-Bye," and "Birth of the Blues" went over big.

Emcee chores were handled expertly by deejay Jim Lounsbury, who kept the show running smoothly. Spacing the acts with his orch's tunes. Band vocalist Penny Smith came off exceptionally well under adverse conditions with her version of "Rock and Roll Waltz" and "Mad, Mad, Mad."

Show was opened by the Larry Sisters, an eye-pleasing dance duo who combine good looks with skillful terpology. Dwarfed by the immense screen and the stage in front of it, gals did a workmanlike job of opening up the display, for good returns from the patrons.

Question raised particularly by a dance act is how can people seated a quarter of a mile away see and appreciate same; visual elements of any act will be considerably downgraded in this setup.

Generally, it would seem that more will have to be done in the way of staging here; with the screen behind the acts, a projector and some attempt at lighting effects some very effective showcasing could develop. As of now, staging is barren. There should also be some sort of canopy protecting the acts when it rains. Gabe.

Unit Review

Calvert Cavalcade
(EMPIRE, GLASGOW)

Glasgow, April 12.

Calvert Productions presentation of "Calvert Cavalcade," with Eddie Calvert, Don Lang, Gerry Brereton, The Londonairs (3), Jeffrey Lenner, The Botandos (3), El Granadas (4), Westway Cavalettes (6), Bobby Dowds orch. At Empire Theatre, Glasgow, April 9, '56; 90 cents top.

Eddie Calvert, English trumpet star, is breaking in a new roadshow of mixed quality. Not all the acts are of topdrawer class, and production has more entertainment value towards its close than at beginning.

Opens with the Westway Cavalettes, six chorines who teeoff by singing "Memories Are Made of This" to dance routine. Their terping is more impressive than their costuming. El Granadas, three distaffers and one male, follow with rope and whip-cracking, the male knocking cork off a bottle with crack of rope. Heavy palming for two of the act binding one gal's hands, arms and feet with rope-throwing from a distance.

The Londonairs, on bass, guitar and accordion, follow with a varied musical offering. It includes "Sixteen Tons," "Twenty Tiny Fingers" and other current pops, but, at show caught, act's humorous gabbing flopped. Wind with a travesty on commercial video plugs.

Gerry Brereton, blind singer, scores with songalog and exits to solid mitting.

Three Botandos, male trio, are muscular strong act who click with daring balancing. Wind with spectacular one-atop-each-other grouping. Don Lang, recording singer and trombonist, is disk name making vaude bow, and is best in trombone rendition of "Skye Boat Song."

Standout of roadshow is Jeffrey Lenner, young and original comedian, whose zany fun and clever patter pleases the stubholders. Shows how a tango originated with a femme undressing and has similar ideas.

After a "Blues Rhapsody" interlude by the Westway Cavalettes, Eddie Calvert offers his own trumpet spot, featuring "Zambesi" as well as "O Mein Papa," "The Trumpet Tango," "Cherry Pink" and "John and Julie." Has good comedy sense in not taking his trumpeting too seriously. Winds with "The Bells of St. Mary's," with Gerry Brereton singing the vocal from raised dais in centerstage. Gord.

The Chordettes (4), The Hilltoppers (4), Nick Noble, The Larry Sisters (2), Jim Lounsbury Orch (13), with Penny Smith; "The Steel Jungle" (WB), (1,875 cars, 800 seats—$1.75, children free).

Shows Abroad

South Sea Bubble

London, April 26.

H. M. Tennent Ltd. (in association with Laurence Olivier) presentation of comedy in three acts, by Noel Coward. Stars Vivien Leigh, Ian Hunter. Staged by William Chappell; decor, Peter Snow. At Lyric Theatre, London, April 25, '56; $2.25 top.

Lady Alexandra ..... Vivien Leigh
Sir George Shotter ..... Ian Hunter
Punalo Alani ..... Alan Webb
Hall Alani ..... Ronald Lewis
John Blair Kennedy ..... Arthur Macrae
Cuckoo Honey ..... Joyce Carey
Edward Honey ..... John Moore
Capt. Mortlock ..... Peter Barkworth
Adm. Turling ..... Nicholas Grimshaw
Mrs. Turling ..... Daphne Newton
Robert Frome ..... Eric Phillips
Sanyamo ..... William Peacock

Noel Coward no longer has to rely on plot for his plays. However flimsy in structure, his work is half sold before curtainrise, providing he can maintain his standard for provocative characters intelligently interpreted and his customary easy flow of dialog.

In "South Sea Bubble" he has but the froth of a story on which to drape his inimitable wisecracks and sourish spokes at life. With Vivien Leigh as his chief attraction, and controversial topicalities to provide a ball-tossing theme for discussion it has the requisite ingredients to chalk up another winner to his credit. Piece had an unsuccessful summer stock tryout in the U.S. in 1951, under the title "Island Fling," with Claudette Colbert as star.

Locale is the British governor's residence on a Pacific island, where his wife's indiscreet mingling with the local bigwigs nearly wrecks delicate diplomatic negotiations. Imminent self-government is under discussion, but individually the inhabitants prefer the lazy carefree life enjoyed for centuries and resent the agitation thrusts upon them by a small minority for "self-determination."

Whatever the yarn's shortcomings, the old Coward sparkle remains, and the playwright himself is personified in the role of a visiting author tossing off cynicalities as occasion demands. Arthur Macrae scores in this role with his dry, whimsical tone.

Vivien Leigh is the essence of voluble femininity in the leading part and Ian Hunter provides a fine foil as her tolerant husband. The two native dignitaries, father and son, are superbly played by Alan Webb and Ronald Lewis, the old culture and the new being subtly contrasted between the generations.

Joyce Carey gives a convincing performance as a self righteous busybody, with adequate support from the remainder of the company. Peter Snow is responsible for the colorful decor and play is crisply directed by William Chappell. Clem.

Original John Mackay

Glasgow, April 24.

Citizens Theatre of Glasgow presentation of comedy in three acts (five scenes), by Alastair M. Dunnett. Staged by Richard Mathews; sets, Nevil Dickin, at Citizens' (Princess's) Theatre, Glasgow, April 23, '56; 90c top.

Angus Ferguson ..... George Davies
Ernie Fraser ..... Fulton Mackay
Kirsty Mackay ..... Molly Urquhart
Harry Hackaby ..... Walter Carr
Mrs. Hackaby ..... Aileen O'Gorman
Malky ..... John Grieve
Leonard Beecher ..... Donald Layne-Smith
Hon. Anne Lorimer ..... Nora Laidlaw
John Mackay ..... Andrew Keir
Mr. Boddam ..... Harry Walker
Hector ..... John Carlin
Mrs. Craigie ..... Joan Scott
Surveyors ..Robert Benson, Mary Caughie

New play by Alastair MacTavish Dunnett has a fairly good quota of entertainment value, but suffers through untidiness and verbosity. Dullish first act also requires sparking.

Andrew Keir is well cast in the title role of a youngish Scot crofter in a lonely glen, who is "discovered" as a philosopher and wit by a London author and created into a hero via a best-selling book. Latter is about to exploit him further when the Highlander turns the tables, writes his own books, sets himself up as a tycoon in the glen, converts his croft into a luxury cocktail bar, and establishes a chain of hotels, plus farms to feed 'em, plus distilleries to make his own whisky and market it in America.

Nora Laidlaw gives a sensitive portrayal of the attractive notetaking secretary of the London author, who falls in love with the Scot hero. Donald Layne-Smith seems miscast, making the British author a foppish unsympathetic type.

As two Highland henchmen, the one elderly and dourly pessimistic, the other young and buoyant, George Davies and Fulton Mackay give capable portrayals, and Molly Urquhart is okay as the hero's buxom sister. John Grieve makes a typical simple rag-garbed rustic.

Joke of two English tourists entranced by Scot customs and speech, and making a mockery of the Auld Lang Syne ways, is well sustained by Walter Carr and Aileen O'Gorman. Former falls victim to time-honored gag of whatdoes-a-Scot-wear-beneath-the-kilt.

In minor roles John Carlin is good as a barman, Joan Scott as an eccentric old lady, and Harry Walker as a rather stiff solicitor.

The Nevil Dickin sets do full justice to Highland croft atmosphere, showing both interior and exterior, and making clever switch to alteration of croft into cocktailery. Richard Mathews has staged with good pace. Gord.

Commemoration Ball

London, April 25.

Players Ventures Ltd. presentation of comedy in three acts, by Stanley Parker. Stars Isabel Jeans, Norman Wooland. Michael Shepley. Staged by Jack Williams. At Piccadilly Theatre, London, April 25, '56; $2.20 top.

Mme. de Charenton ..... Isabel Jeans
Julian Faber ..... Norman Wooland
Lord Basterfield ..... Michael Shepley
Susan Flouzet ..... Elvi Hale
Angela Day ..... Ann Sunmers
Lady Meredith ..... Vivienne Drummond
Peter Cunningham ..... Philip Carr
Teddy Beresford ..... Nicholas Stevenson
Ninette ..... Virginia Vernon
Woodward ..... Vincent Holman
Young Man ..... Tomy Perkins

Not even the polished, mature charm of Isabel Jeans, nor the painstaking efforts of the remainder of the company can raise this mediocre first play by an unknown author.

It is a boisterous, rambling college affair, comparable to "Charley's Aunt" only in its Oxford setting and the conventional necessity for switching clothes with the opposite sex. Sponsored by the presenters of "The Boy Friend," this one looks doubtful.

The annual founder's ball at end of term at Oxford provides the background for a bunch of cuties, reinforced by parents, to play hide and seek in and out of college rooms in varying stages of undress. All quite innocent, but an overnight stay by one of the femmes risks expulsion for the boy concerned on the eve of his graduation.

Miss Jeans plays a grande dame who visits her son and sheds a phony French background to acknowledge the college butler as her father. The youthful femme quartet are an attractive eyeful, but the younger males suffer by comparison with Norman Wooland and Michael Shepley as the respective philosophical tutor, and a much married Peer. Best of the supporting players is Toby Perkins, who expressively handles a near-wordless role. Clem.

(Closed last Saturday (28) after seven performances).

Have 18G Start in Sale To Save Erlanger, Buff.

Buffalo, May 1.

Stock in Foundation Theatre, Inc., newly organized to take over the Erlanger Theatre and to perpetuate the legitimate stage in western New York, went on sale last week here.

Available are 5,000 shares of preferred non-voting stock at $75 per share and 40 shares of common voting stock at $1,500 a share. Investors will be given an opportunity to purchase ¼ shares of the voting stock.

William R. Raikin, counsel for the Foundation, stated that the new organization has $18,000 in cash and pledges. Both preferred and common stock will be nondividend bearing as the corporation is described as a non-profit concern with earnings to be reinvested in the corporation.

Foundation plans to lease the Erlanger here from its new owner, I. Gordon, of Rochester, from July 1, when the former owner, The Playhouse, Inc., a Dipson theatre affiliate, will vacate.

'Revue' Budget 30G

A $30,000 budget has been set for "The Littlest Revue," which preems May 15 at the Phoenix Theatre, N. Y. Financing of the project will be handled by the Phoenix, but Ben Bagley, who's getting "conceived, cast and assembled" program credit, may bring in some coin on his own. Bagley was represented off-Broadway last season as producer of "Shoestring Revue" at the President Theatre.

Bagley's contract with Phoenix producers T. Edward Hambleton and Norris Houghton, incidentally, stipulates that he can move the show to Broadway after seven weeks at the downtown theatre. Lee Goodman will not appear in the revue as previously reported.

CANTON (CONN.) BARN SET

Olsen-Henry-Ludlum Combo to Produce; Ethel Shutta In

The Canton (Conn.) Playhouse will be operated this summer by Charles Olsen, Joyce Henry and Robert Ludlum. Olsen is currently represented off-Broadway as director and co-producer of the Shaw twin bill, "Dark Lady of the Sonnets" and "Admirable Bashville," at the Cherry Lane Theatre. His actress-mother, Ethel Shutta, will be a member of the resident company. The producer-stager's father is bandleader George Olsen.

The Canton season is scheduled to begin June 10.

Bellman ..... Fred Eisley
Maid ..... Denise Dorin
Julia Wilson ..... Sally Gracie
Elizabeth Clochessy ..... Patricia Barry
Arthur Westlake ..... Tom Poston
Harvey Wilson ..... Hiram Sherman
Mr. Clayton ..... Burton Mallory
Theodore ..... Danny Lee

It's three strikes and out for "Goodbye Again." This vintage antic by Allan Scott and George Haight was first produced on Broadway in 1932-33 for a 216-performance run, and had an eight-performance revival in 1943-44. There have also been a couple of picture editions, one under a different title, plus numerous presentations in stock, radio and television.

Even the hardiest articles ultimately wear out, however, and on the basis of this new revival by Shepard Traube and J. H. Del Bondio, this is obviously the last farewell for "Goodbye Again." There's not another "again" in it. This is just goodbye.

This flippant whimsy about how an irresponsible lady-killing novelist-lecturer and his doting but canny secretary-mistress wriggle out of the clutches of a possessively romantic matron was doubtless deliciously naughty back in the early depression days. But after a quarter century's hard use, it's become a mechanical, threadbare wheeze.

The present performance is generally expert. Donald Cook and Polly Rowles, both accomplished practitioneers of such nonsense, excel in the leading roles played originally by the late Osgood Perkins and Sally Bates, and Hiram Sherman is superlatively relaxed as the Cleveland business man who's blandly ready to cooperate in his wife's campaign to revive her old love affair with the visiting lecturer.

Tom Poston is amusingly fatuous as the errant matron's prospective brother-in-law and Patricia Barry gawps decoratively as his dimwit, adoring financee. Sally Gracie is acceptably intense as the local housewife determined on adultry, and there are capable bits by Fred Eisley, Burton Mallory, Danny Lee and Jim Stevenson.

Traube has staged the show with routine competence and Sam Leve's double bedroom setting has the appropriate sheen of multiple-management hostelry. But it all adds up to no-dice. Hobe.

Individualists

Even the ticket-buyers for the controversial "Waiting for Godot" are puzzlers. Michael Myerberg, producer of Samuel Beckett's dramatic whatsit was shaking his head over it last week.

"You know, there's a steady line at the boxoffice at the Golden Theatre," he told an acquaintance. "But they all buy single seats in the balcony."

Don't Call Him; He'll Call You

Sidney Phillips, Metro's vet play representative who was announced last week as heading the film company's projected entry into Broadway producing, got a quick indication of the reaction he can expect hereafter from relatives, friends, casual acquaintances, and sundry. The day after the news appeared in the dailies, he received the following letter from his eight-year-old niece (with spelling as indicated):

"Dear Uncle Sidney:

How are you? I am fine. Congratulations on your new job. My mother told me that you are a producer. All my life I have wanted to be an actress. Grandfather sais that maybe you could put me in a show.

"All my teachers say I speak very well, and almost every show they have, they put me in. I also write very good poems. Today I am reading my Arbor Day poem in an Arbor Day show. I am the 4th Grade represnenetive. We are to plant a purple leafed plum tree outside, but since it is raining we might do it tomorrow.

"I can play as a girl or you can shave off my hair like Mary Martian and I will be a boy! I hope you can put me in a show! Thank you!

Sincerely yours,

JANE KINZLER.

"PS: If you would like to read some of my poems tell me & I will send you some."

'BRIGADOON' TAB SHOW IS TOURING FAR EAST

A cut-down version of the musical "Brigadoon," running about 90 minutes, will play at least 80 performances in 10 weeks, fully Equity, for military personnel in the Orient. Company of 17, many with double functions, left yesterday (Tues.) for San Francisco and thence will hop to Manila, where conductor-pianist Bernie Thall will pick up eight Filipino musicians.

Venture has unusual aspects in that the 8th Army is sponsoring the show. Herman Fialkoff, former USO booker, goes along as producer and stage manager. Bill Ross is director, and Janet Pucarde both performs and choreographs. Leads will be handled by Don Graham, Arlene Frank, Don Le Mon and Will Kuluva.

Troupe will perform first in Korea for four weeks, wearing army gear and simulated captaincy rank. Possibility of one week in a downtown Tokyo theatre for general audiences exists, but this is primarily an all-military production with civilian talent.

During the absence from Manhattan of conductor Bernie Thall, his voice-coaching Thall-McCullough Studios will be carried on by partner Louis McCullough.

Shipley's 'Great Plays' A Must for Legit-TV-ers

Drama critic Joseph T. Shipley's "Guide to Great Plays" is a gargantuan $10 worth, just published by Public Affairs Press (Washington, D. C.) and a must in libraries, for students, and particularly for the purpose intended—a handbook for the theatregoer and televiewer.

It's the only work of its kind, a terrific job of compressing 660 plays by leading writers from all countries, from George Ade and Aeschylus (525-455 B.C.) to William Butler Yeats, Israel Zangwill, Emil Zola, Karl Zuckmeyer and the 19th century playwright Jose Zerrilla y Moral.

Shipley, the author of 14 books on literature and the drama, and a critic of the past 38 years covering the Broadway and of-Broadway scene, has been twice president of the N. Y. Drama Critics' Circle, critic on the New Leader, and regular commentator over radio station WEVD, N. Y. His concept of "great" plays has been leavened with knowledge of sound show biz values, and this nearly 900-page compendium of a half-million words is an impressive treatise.

This has obviously been a labor of much love for the theatre, for Shipley must have omitted twice as much text in screening (a) the values and (b) digesting his synopsis and critical comments. These are personal and also culled from wide contemporaneous and historical sources. It's a terrific book both in size and in scope. Abel.

A Pitch for the Independents

The following is a "statement of principles" by Ralph Bellamy, president, and Raymond Massey and Margalo Gillmore, vice-presidents of Actors Equity. It refers to the annual election to be held June 1, of members of the union's council. Although Bellamy, Massey and Miss Gillmore are officers of Equity, the statement obviously represents their attitude as individuals. The statement reads:

"This year we support the independent nominations because we believe that these candidates are truly independent. We know that they will always be governed only by what they consider to be the best interests of Equity.

"We are further convinced that no independent nominee represents any faction or clique, or is subject to pressure or control.

"We are voting for the independents. They are the best candidates. We urge your support."

Equity Moderates-Conservatives Enter Indie Ticket Vs. Liberals

Moderate and conservative forces in Actors Equity have united to enter an independent ticket in opposition to the ultra liberal-dominated regular slate in the annual election June 1. The indie lineup is considered middle-of-the-road and is aimed to get conservative support also, since the latter element is not putting up its own ticket.

Some strenuous electioneering is expected in behalf of both tickets. Leader of the ultra-liberal faction is Bill Ross, former second vice-president and council member, who was renominated and defeated last year as an independent candidate. Ross is running on the regular ticket for a five-year council term as a representative of the principals.

Indie candidates, representing principals, are Donald Cook, Eddie Foy Jr., Stephen Douglass, Earle Hyman, Patrick McVey, Bibi Osterwald, Dorothy Sands, Lucia Victor and Roddy Mcdowall for five-year terms and Ruth Matteson for a two-year run. Chorus reps for five years are Sara Bettis and Leo Kayworth, while Robert Neukum is up for four years, Norma Doggett for three years and Gordon Woodburn for one year.

Lois Wilson and Charles Blackwell, up for five-year terms as principal and chorus reps, respectively, on the regular ticket, are being endorsed on the independent

Off-B'way Assn. Mulls Ouster of Irv. Strouse For 'Unethical Practice'

Irving Strouse, head of the Stage & Arena Guild of America, is faced with possible expulsion from the off-Broadway Assn. because of alleged "unethical practices." The organization has given him until today (Wed.) to refute the charge. He was scheduled to make an initial appearance before the membership committee late yesterday (Tues.).

Although Daisy Amoury, who brought the charges against Strouse, is not a member of the off-Broadway Assn., she's permitted, as are other outsiders, to prefer charges against members. The essence of her allegation is that Strouse and barn producer Johnathan Dwight have employed "un-

FONTAINE EYES B'WAY; WANTS 'JANUS' FOR PIC

Joan Fontaine, who starred on Broadway last season in "Tea and Sympathy," is determined to do another legit show next fall. Her new 10-year contract with RKO allows her time off for such a stint.

The actress, currently east with her film producer husband, Collier Young, on a junket in connection with the annual "Miss Rheingold" contest, is catching the new Broadway shows. She'll be in New York about 10 days longer, and may decide on the legit assignment during that time. She won't mention title, authorship or management involved, except that one proposition is from Paul Gregory.

Miss Fontaine is trying to persuade RKO to buy the film rights to the Carolyn Green comedy, "Janus," as a screen vehicle for her. Claudette Colbert is currently starring in the play at the Plymouth, N. Y., having succeeded Margaret Sullavan, who withdrew because of ill health, presumably for a two-month rest.

Install Cohan Plaque At American, St. Louis

St. Louis, May 1.

The Cohanesque Society of St. Louis, believed to be the only such outfit in the country, has donated a plaque of George M. Cohan to the American Theatre here. Harry Fender, disk jock for local station KMOX, made the presentation to Paul Beisman, manager of the American, just before the matinee Saturday (28) of "Teahouse of the August Moon."

The plaque of the late actor-author-producer will hang in the lobby of the theatre.

'Success' Needs 40G to Make It

"Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter," currently in its 30th week on Broadway, still has approximately $40,000 to recoup on its $100,000 investment. That's figured on the deficit as of a March 31 accounting, less estimated profit for the ensuing four weeks. The backers have thus far been repaid $25,000.

The Jule Styne production, which had been operating at a steady profit since its New York preem at the Belasco Theatre, took on a loss on each of the five weeks ending March 31, when the gross ranged from $15,300 to $17,000. Coin dropped during that period totaled $5,649, hiking the deficit, as of the audit, to $43,881.

A healthy slice of the gross on the show is shelled out in royalties to Styne and author-director George Axelrod. The former gets 1% as producer, while the latter receives 10% for his scripting and 2% for his staging. There's been no film sale yet.

'TEAHOUSE' IN SPANISH A HIT IN HAVANA BOW

Havana, April 24.

Spanish-language production of "Teahouse of the August Moon" exited here yesterday (Mon.) after a short tuneup run at the Auditorium Theatre. The cast, made up entirely of Americans, does a first-rate job in putting over Rodolfo Usigli's Spanish translation of the Vern Sneider-John Patrick comedy. The show was produced by Jean Dalrymple, Rita Allen and Jess Hartman.

A lengthy Latin-American tour, running into next August, has been lined up for the offering. From here, the production goes to Venezuela, Brazil, Uruguay, Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and elsewhere. The lead role of Sakini is being played by Rosita Diaz Gimeno, who had the same assignment in last year's Mexican production, sponsored by the Misses Dalrymple and Allen.

The performers represent a potpouri of international descent. Miss Rosita was born in Madrid, while other members of the cast are of Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Swiss, Puerto Rican, Spanish, Hawaiian, Philippine and British origin. They're all U. S. citizens, though. The tour is being sponsored indirectly by the U. S. State Dept. through the President's Emergency Fund.

Eyes of Texas Are On Buzz Meredith's 'Hamlet'

Waco, Texas, May 1.

The Baylor U. revival of "Hamlet," guest-starring Burgess Meredith and opening next Saturday night (5) is already a solid sellout, with 425 ticket orders turned back. That is revealed by Paul Baker, chairman of the college drama department.

The show continues through May 26.

'Wonderful' May Nix the Critics

It begins to look as though "Mr. Wonderful" might be the show to beat the critical rap. The musical, with Sammy Davis Jr. the obvious draw, is holding its potent boxoffice pace at the Broadway Theatre, N. Y., despite the waning season and the dwindling theatre parties.

The show pulled almost $58,100 last week, a boost of $2,400 from the previous stanza and the third-highest take of the six weeks it's been on Broadway. It's figured to have netted about $9,000 operating profit at that figure. As of April 21, it needed $182,913 to recoup.

Since "Wonderful" can break even at around $36,000 gross with its present hookup, it's figured a fair prospect to get through the traditionally lean June-July period, if necessary by trimming the operating hookup. On that basis, it's a candidate to last well into next fall-winter, thereby having a chance to earn back the balance of its investment.

A sizable share of the musical's attendance is believed to be from young Davis' juve following, who are thereby surprising the trade by having the price of a legit ticket, even if it's for an upstairs location. At the present scale, the Broadway represents about $21,000 weekly gross upstairs and around $50,000 on the lower floor. Since it show pulls the usual sock business Friday and Saturday nights, the top-heavy trade early in the week is proving a decisive factor.

It had been doped by the trade that Davis, a cabaret and recording name, would probably have only a limited draw in a legit show, especially after the negative critical reception. But the young singer is still pulling 'em in, with no indication of a decline.

Factor in the continued pace of the tuner is believed to be the word-of-mouth comment, which has tended to be better than the critical notices. That has presumably been helped by the revision of the show's opening, in which Davis now comes onstage only a moment after the curtain, instead after two long numbers.

Under the new routine, the star makes his initial entrance and immediately comes downstage to introduce himself by his real name do a brief "sell" of the musical, explaining that it's about cabarets and the people who work in them. The twist apparently gets the performance off to a faster and more personal start.

Highlights of Anthony P. Spanton's initial financial report, covering the operation through April 21, include the following:

Original investment, $225,000.
Production cost, $217,975.
Tryout loss, $6,309.
Cost to open in N. Y., $224,284.
Operating profit, first five weeks in N. Y., $41,371.
Still to be recouped, $182,913.

Cleve Group Will Run Suburban Barn Theatre

Cleveland, May 1.

Group of local investors has organized a new strawhatter called the Valley Playhouse Players, and the outfit has leased the Chagrin Falls civic theatre for the summer, with options for the next five years. The 276-seater house was used last year by the Canal-Fulton Players, who dropped their current option on it after a disastrous season. The spot is about 20 miles from downtown Cleveland.

Jean Weinberger, wife of local restaurant owner William Weinberger, sparkplugged the project and will be managing director of the Valley Playhouse. Producer is Harvey Epstein, while Donald Bianchi will direct the one-week shows running through Labor Day.

Equity Placates Non-Star Stocks, But Name Spots Take to the Law

Summer Plans Simmer For Hub Area Stocks

Boston, May 1.

Preparations for the strawhat season activity in New England are beginning to perk, and dates for two openings were set last week. North Shore Music Circus, in Beverly, Mass., opens June 25 with "Brigadoon," and Wellesley's Group 20 Players open the Theatre on the Green the same night with "Ring Around the Moon."

Barns in the area this season will include the New England Mutual Hall, Boston, operated by Lee Falk; Cohasset Music Circus; Cambridge Drama Festival; a new music tent being built in Framingham; and another new tent planned for Dedham.

3-Ply 'Teahouse' In $99,900 Week

It's the perennial story. The road may be declining, but there's always business for a good show. In fact, there's enough hinterland business to support three editions of the same show, providing it's "Teahouse of the August Moon." The Vern Sneider-John Patrick comedy drew a total gross of just under $99,900 last week.

Up until four weeks ago, there were only two road companies of "Teahouse." Then the Broadway production moved out for a hinterland hop, beginning with a four-week stand at the Colonial Theatre, Boston. The total gross there for the Eli Wallach-Gene Blakely starrer, was over $161,900, including a new house record each week of its run.

During that same period, the Chicago company, costarring Eddie Bracken and Hugh Reilly, nabbed around $122,200, while the Larry Parks edition took in about $143,600. The total gross for the three companies for the four-week period was approximately $427,700.

There's a limit to everything, however. Next December, the currently-shooting Metro film edition, starring Marlon Brando, is due for release.

ED CHODOROV APPEALS DENIAL OF PASSPORT

Washington, May 1.

The local Federal Court has under consideration an appeal by Edward Chodorov to compel the State Dept. to issue him a passport. Through his attorney, the playwright explained he wants to go to England to direct the London production of his 1953-54 comedy, "Oh Men, Oh Women."

Chodorov claims he is being deprived of his constitutional rights. He said he attended a State Dept. hearing at which it was alleged that he has past Communist associations. Chodorov claims he was refused the right to examine the evidence, although he denies the charge.

May Book Guest Stars At Highland Park, Ill.

The Tenthouse Theatre, Highland Park, Ill., may go in for one or two star bookings this season. The Herb Rogers operation has been running under a straight Equity resident company policy since its inception nine years ago. The showcase, which was converted last year from a canvastop to a building, begins a 15-week season June 8.

According to Rogers, the cost of converting to a hardtop was about $200,000. He plans to shill out another $25,000 for additional improvements this season. The theatre, which has over 1,000 seats, has removable parts enabling it to double as an al fresco operation. Michael Ferrall will again be resident stager.

George Womack and Billy Booth will be stage manager and technical director, respectively.

Protests of summer theatre managers against new stock rules issued by Actors Equity have brought modification of some of the regulations. The changes, however, apply principally to non-star operations and were made last week following a meet between the union and the Council of Resident Stock Theatres.

The recently-formed CORST reps the non-star houses, while the star showcases are repped by the Council of Stock Theatres. The latter group failed to reach an agreement with Equity on requested revisions for barns employing stars and has started proceedings before the National Labor Relations Board in an attempt to compel the union to negotiate the terms of the contract affecting its membership.

Equity did not negotiate its stock rules with either of the two barn groups. However, in view of the modifications made following the meet with CORST, it's figured the union will enter into regular negotiations with that organization next fall.

The changes apply to the second and third categories in Equity's new three-way split of the stock field. That's the Y and Z group. The former comprises small star houses and the larger straight resident companies, while the latter takes in the smaller straight resident companies. Minimum salaries have been reduced from $80 to $70 in the Y classification and from $70 to $55 in the Z division.

The union's original requirement that stage managers and assistant stage managers receive extra coin

Roosevelt, Miami Beach, Opening Stock Company; Rivals Coconut Grove

Miami, May 1.

A new stock company with a name policy debuts May 8 at the Roosevelt theatre on the Beach. Sam Hirsch, producer at the spot, will open with Vincent Price and Louise Allbritton in "Dial M For Murder," for a two-week run.

Return of legit to the Roosevelt, which has presented stock sporadically in recent years, will be competition for the new Coconut Grove Playhouse. Latter, which opened last January, is currently presenting "Bus Stop," with the company that recently closed on Broadway.

Hirsch, former U. of Miami drama prof, has had several stock ventures in the area in recent years. He has scheduled Steve Cochran in "The Rainmaker," Dick Haymes in "Tender Trap" and Luther Adler in "Reclining Figure" for two-week runs to follow "Dial M."

'ROOMFUL' LOST $42,189 DESPITE 60G PIC SALE

"Roomful of Roses," which had an 88-performance Broadway run last fall and winter, represented a $42,189 loss on a $50,000 investment. The Guthrue McClintic-Stanley Gilkey production had an operating loss of $10,074 on the Broadway engagement.

The production cost was $39,327 for the Edith Sommer drama, plus $14,298 deficit on a three-week tryout tour. Pre-Broadway opening expenses tallied $3,398, while closing costs accounted for another $660. The Patricia Neal starrer, however, picked up $21,600 from 20th-Fox, representing its 40% share (less 10% commissions) of $60,000 paid by the film studio as a down payment on its purchase of the property.

The picture deal had a ceiling of $175,000, of which the balance was to be paid by 20th at the rate of 10% of the gross on profit weeks after the first 21 Broadway performances. On that aspect of the sale, the production earned $968, again representing a 40% cut, less 10% commissions. Another $3,000 was taken in on the sale of the amateur rights.

According to the final audit on the show, the grosses for the last four weeks on Broadway were overquoted by management. During that period, the b.o. take sank to only $4,385 on one frame.

It's Good New Days in New Hope; Ellis Sets 25 Weeks at Playhouse

By ALLEN WARD

New Hope, Pa., May 1.

They don't call it "summer stock" around here any more. Michael Ellis, producer at the 432-seat Bucks County Playhouse and pioneer of the long, long season, opens the local barn next Saturday night (5) with Billie Burke in "Solid Gold Cadillac" as the first of 20 shows to be presented in a record 25-week schedule.

Ellis, who has lengthened the season in each of the past three years since he took over, admits the extended fall stanza was a heavy loser in 1954. However, last year's 24-week season looked a lot better, even despite the late summer Delaware River flood which damaged the theatre and scared tourists away for several weeks thereafter.

This year, Ellis points to advance sales better than last year's and says he believes he has trained his patrons to the idea of a six-month session. "We knew it would take a couple of years to introduce the program," he says, "and this year we think it'll go over."

On hand for the opening are most of Ellis' regular staff, many of whom worked with him at the Coconut Grove Playhouse last winter. They include manager John Crowley, executive assistant Robers Bigham, resident director Robert Caldwell, stage manager W. Broderick Hackett (set designer last year), technical director Richard Marr, assistant technical director Eddie Applegate and treasurer Leonard Mulhern.

New to the playhouse are press-agent Horace Greeley McNab, set designer Hal Shafer, prop girl Phyllis Marcuccio and assistant treasurer William Van Dornick. Cast of "Cadillac" will include Albert Ottenheimer, Ted Clark, Joseph MacCauley and Nancy Wilder as well as localites Johnny Francis, proprietor of Canal House, a local nitery, and some village joker named Allen Ward, editor of the New Hope Gazette.

Next three shows will be "Anastasia," with Mary Sinclair, Howard Da Silva and Miriam Phillips; "The Rainmaker" with Frank McHugh, Nancy Marchand and James Pritchett; and "Seven Year Itch." Also lined up for the season are: "The World of Sholom Aleichem," "Tea and Sympathy," "Biggest Thief in Town," "Chalk Garden" and a new play by Sheridan Gibney, titled "A House in the Country," to star Zachary Scott and Ruth Ford and directed by John Cromwell.

Offbeat booking starting Aug. 20, the anniversary of the flood, will bring in "Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker," which limped through two performances right after lats year's deluge and then folded when the local Borough Council closed the town to prevent looting.

Stock Items

The second season of the Williamstown (Mass.) Theatre Foundation opens June 26 with "Chalk Garden." Other bills set for the summer series in Adams Memorial Theatre on the Williams College campus include "Young and Beautiful," "Philadelphia Story," "Saint Joan," "Mrs. McThing," "Point of No Return," "Flowering Peach" and "Tiger at the Gates."

Group 20 Players will open its season June 25 at the Theatre on the Green, on the campus of Wellesley (Mass.) College. Kickoff show will be "Ring Around the Moon."

Don Swann will open his 19th season of summer stock May 29 at the Hilltop Theatre at Lutherville, Md., with "The Rocky Road," a new script by Joseph Carole. A 16-week season is planned, with two musicals to be included. Directorial chores will be shared by Al Moritz, Rance Howard and Ray Boyle.

Strawhat Players, one of Canada's oldest pro summer groups, suspends operations for this year. But Port Carling, Ont., where they have operated part-time for years, will have a new group headed by William Bennett and Wilf Pegg.

The Cambridge (Mass.) Drama Festival will begin a 10-week season July 5 at the Sanders Theatre on Harvard U.'s campus. Three productions are scheduled, "Henry V," Shaw's "Saint Joan" and possibly a new version of "The Beggar's Opera."

Avondale, Indianapolis, In New Spot This Year

Indianapolis, May 1.

Avondale Playhouse, local strawhatter, will offer 10-week season in new location here this summer, opening in late June or early July. William Tregoe, director and leading man of Avondale last summer and of its predecessor, Town and Country, in 1954, will return in same capacities. Jo Rosner will be general manager.

Plans were delayed by the fact that Avondale found last season's camp ground unsatisfactory and spent most of the winter trying to get site in a city park. When that failed, it made deal for present easily accessible spot on far north side, near two main traffic arteries, under five-year lease.

City also will have an eight-week season of Starlight Musicals in outdoor theatres at Butler Bowl, opening July 6.

Danny Kaye, Nip Opera For Carter Barron, D.C.

Washington, May 1.

Carter Barron Amphitheatre will open June 7 for its third season under the management of the Feld Bros. With one fortnight gap still to be filled, the 13-week summer program for the 4,000-seat bowl shapes as follows:

Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, June 7-20; Danny Kaye and a vaude troupe, June 21-July 7; American Musical Festival, with Louis Armstrong & His All-Star, Gene Krupa, and Dave Brubeck, July 10-13; Benny Goodman orchestra, July 14-16; "Carmen Jones," July 19-Aug. 1; National Ballet Co. of Canada, Aug. 2-15; open date, Aug. 16-27, and Fujiwara Opera Co., of Tokyo, Aug. 28-Sept. 3.

A switch this summer will be the elimination of the John Harris Ice Show, the season-closer in 1954 and 1955. As in the past, the Felds Bros. are offering a $3.50 subscription book, with stubs including free admission, twofers, cut rate tickets and reduction coupons for Olney Summer Theatre.

ethical practices" in an attempt to beat her out in obtaining a lease on the summer theatre in the American Legion Park, Ephreta, Penn.

Miss Amoury operated in Ephreta last year and claims to have an option to repeat there again this year and next. She's understood to have lost coin on last season's run and as a result was scouting around for financial assistance this semester. Dwight, who operated the Gateway Theatre, Somers Point, N. J., last summer, has since lost that house and was considering partnering with Miss Amoury at Ephreta, according to the charge.

Miss Amoury contends that instead of joining her, Dwight, together with Strouse, tried to lure away one of her backers and also made their own pitch for the theatre after claiming they represented her. The theatre is rented by the American Legion. Miss Amoury's lease has been returned to her unsigned by the Legion, while Strouse claims he and Dwight have been offered the spot, but have not yet signed a contract.

Strouse has sent a letter to the association questioning its authority to enter into the dispute and demanding that the charges be sent to him and his attorney. He's also requested that his attorney be permitted to appear with him before the association. The off-Broaway group is willing to accept the latter request, but has refused to send out copies of the charges.

Miss Amoury had planned to operate week nights this season in the park's 600-seat theatre and shift for weekends to a 2,000-seat outdoor arena, also in the park.

Look! Real Goils!

There's apparently no end to femme progress.

Columbia U. is breaking 61-year-old tradition by casting co-eds for the gal roles in the annual varsity show, previously an all-male affair. The distaffers have been recruited from nearby Barnard College for the musicomedy tagged "Not Fit To Print."

The production, being offered by the Columbia Players at the university's McMillan Theatre, N. Y., will continue through next Saturday (5).

Allied Motor & Schumer Offer Bus-Truck Setup For Road Productions

In a move to get touring legit shows off the rails and onto rubber tires, a New York bus firm is offering a package deal for production transportation. The concern, Allied Motor Transport Co., has tied up with the Schumer Theatrical Transfer to supply producers with a bus-and-truck service for the road.

The development of the Allied package was sparked by Nick Mayo, co-sponsor two seasons ago of a bus-and-truck tour of "Oklahoma." He prompted Allied's general manager, Stanley Fisher, to set up the service, which has already been used by Ballet Theatre. The terp unit, carrying a large troupe and around 24 crew members, went out on a string of one-niters with three busses and two trucks.

The busses are all air-conditioned, with some seating 41 passengers and others 45. Allied also has the right to go into all states. The approximate weekly tab for one bus, carrying 45 people, and a truck is $1,000 for a minimum of 1,000 miles.

The bus-and-truck setup can give the railroads some stiff competition, Fisher claims, in view of the mounting beefs of company managers over poor train transportation of sets and baggage. This complaint has been growing as the railroads have been streamlining for speed and relegating baggage to slow trains with bulky cars, consequently adding hours to the movement of a show from one location to another.

Fisher also points out that by moving a show solely by truck, one complete loading and unloading operation is eliminated since the trip can be made directly from the theatre in one town to the theatre in the next.

Once in a Lifetime

Equity Library Theatre revival of comedy in three acts, by George Kaufman and Moss Hart. Staged by Allan Stevenson; settings, Charles Brandon, assisted by Valerie Martin; costumes, Robert Grose; lighting, Barbara Richter. At Lenox Hill Playhouse, N.Y., April 26, '56.

There's many a yock goes begging in Equity Library Theatre's revival of "Once in a Lifetime." At the quarter-century mark, the George Kaufman-Moss Hart satiric spoof of Hollywood at sound-conversion time is still very funny, but at Lenox Hill a woeful amount of the humor falls limply on the forestage.

Farce playing takes crisp pace, expert timing and disciplined abandon. It's hard to understand how this lively crowd of ELT-ers could miss in a piece that's strictly genus Americanus. They lose laughs by the sceneful, however, and it isn't until German-born Rudolf Weiss, as the prototype firm mogul, gets rolling, that the risibility comes as it should, loud, long and deep. Weiss apologetically fumes, sputters, chokes and tears his hair, and, pulverizes the audience.

It would appear that director Allan Stevenson has worked hard, and the sheer job of traffic managing all 65 on the cramped stage must be a major task. In the early phases, however, he has let his actors meander along in considerably less than crackling fashion, while the laughs quietly drift away.

Chief onus would seem to rest on the three vaudevillians who start it all by descending on the film capital to teach actors how to talk. From the opening scene, Art Kassul, Ro Sullavan, and Walt Fisher hit drawing room comedy pace and with the exception of the genial dimwittedness required of Kassul, they never quite get into the act.

Besides Weiss' gusty wheezings, there are a number of transiently humorous vignettes. Playing it deadpan and straight, Jackson Young is very funny as a neglected writer whom the film mills drive quietly mad; and Liz Ingelson, as a great one's rapidly flustered secretary, ekes out a character.

Among others who get with it are Susan Walker, as a no-talent ingenue, Julius Bing as a be-knicknered director. Willian Bock, as an unctuous head-waiter, Anne Leslie, as a guess-who film columnist, Charles Alvin Bell, as a racey bishop, and Connie Van Ess and Lindy Kaye as a couple of silent sirens.

Robert Grose's period costumes have a humor of their own, and Charles Brandon has attempted to meet the multi-set problem.

Man of Destiny

Paton & Landis presentation of the Engrav Players in a revival of comedy-drama in one act by George Bernard Shaw, and a reading from Anton Chekhov. Staged by Antony Carbone; settings, Gyula. At Downtown Theatre, N. Y., April 25, '56; $1.80 top.

Cast: Reading: Alfred Russell.
Cast: "Man of Destiny": Alfred Russell, Joe Caden, Kenn Reisdorff, Lee Paton.

It must be faced that George Bernard Shaw could occasionally write an inferior play. "Man of Destiny," with which the Engrav Players are trifling at East 4th St.'s Downtown Theatre, is not a script to give Shavians comfort. It was penned in '97 with Richard Mansfield in mind for Napoleon, and Ellen Terry as candidate for the Strange Lady, but Shaw had to settle for less luminous casting.

Even with brittle Shavian acuity at work, Napoleon's dalliance with a bright lady over some letters and documents is not a matter of much moment. True, this is the source for the famous "Englishmen are a nation of shopkeepers" quip, and there's amusement at the general's being outmatched by a lady in a verbal fencing bout, but the one-acter's a long hour and not rich in commercial prospect.

"Destiny" will play in split-week repertory with the group's "Candida," which has been running two months. It would be agreeable if the addition had the crispness and elan that marked the earlier effort, but Antony Carbone's direction has been colorless and without sufficient regard for the exigencies of arena staging.

As the lady, Lee Paton brings needed flash and crispness of speech, qualities otherwise lacking in the production. Alfred Russell's Napoleon is derivative of all stage Napoleons, relying heavily on vocal and physical mannerisms. Kenn Reisdorff gets at the pith of a few Shavianisms as an eccentric lieutenant.

In the curtain-raiser, Russell is the pathetically humorous lecturer in Anton Chekhov's "On the Harmfulness of Tobacco."

2 Cleve. Music Stocks Sked Summer Seasons

Cleveland, May 1.

Schedule of seven strawhat musicals for Musicarnival Tent Theatre here has been completed by producer Johnny Price Jr. with the acquisition of "Plain and Fancy." Starting June 8 with "King and I," the all-Equity group will also offer "Call Me Madam," "Merry Widow," an English version of "Carmen," "Kismet" and "Wonderful Town." William Boehm will direct.

Another local venture, Cain Park Outdoor Theatre, operated by the city of Cleveland Heights, will open its non-Equity summer series July 3-14 with "Paint Your Wagon," with "Of Thee I Sing," "Sing Out, Sweet Land" and "Finian's Rainbow," to follow.

Equity Election

card. Other regular candidates, besides these two and Ross, are Joseph Anthony, Ossie Davis, Gemze de Lappe, Mildred Dunnock, Betty Field, Paul Ford, Mike Kellin and Nancy R. Pollock representing principals for five years and Aline MacMahon for two years.

Chorus reps on the regular slate for five-year terms are Del Horstman and Joan Morton, while Ted Thurston is up for four years, Janet Picarde for three years and Feodore Tedick for one year.

Incidentally, Eddie Weston, who was chairman of the nominating committee that named the regular ticket, denies a statement in a recent VARIETY story that the moderates on the group failed to attend some of the sessions at which the selections were made. He claims that at least 12 or 13 of a possible 15 members attended every session, although he doesn't specify whether or not some may have left key meetings before adjournment. Nor does he indicate whether those absent were among the more influential moderates.

Weston, a member of the chorus segment of the union and regarded as an ardent supporter of Ross, does not dispute the basic thesis of the VARIETY story, that despite the predominantly moderate makeup of the committee, the regular ticket is dominated by the ultra-liberals. Also, he does not deny the frequently heard assertion among Equity members that Ross is the boss of the ultra-liberals.

Those two factors are the principal reasons for the union of moderate and conservative forces in entering an independent ticket.

Equity re Stock

when doubling as performers was also scratched. Theatres falling into the Y and Z grouping are also permitted to take care of the cleaning of clothing furnished by actors in lieu of paying $1 per garment as previously required by Equity.

Several weeks ago Equity agreed on a pact with the Assn. of Civic Musical Theatres, representing al fresco groups. It was the first time that the union had successfully negotiated a contract with an organization of summer theatre producers. A prior attempt to work out a contract with the Musical Arena Theatre Assn., repping tent showcases, came a cropper when the canvastop reps walked out.

CORST is headed by Barton H. Emmet, who operates the Westchester (N. Y.) Playhouse. Theatrical attorney Martin H. Leonard is the organization's executive director. CST is headed by Charles Mooney, supervisor of the Cape Playhouse, Dennis, Mass., and A. Jacob Abrams is attorney for the organization.

Chi Perks a Bit; 'Inherit' $28,600, 'Teahouse' $25,300, 'Lovers' $17,300

Chicago, May 1.

Business in the Loop rose a trifle last week. "Inherit the Wind" spurted after posting its June 2 departure notice. "Bad Seed" opened at the Harris last night (Mon.).

Next up is Harry Belafonte's "Sing, Man, Sing," due May 14 at the Shubert for two frames. After that, "Silk Stockings" is due at the same house July 25 for a summer run.

Estimates for Last Week

Inherit the Wind, Blackstone (12th wk) ($5; 1,450; $37,038) (Melvyn Douglas). Over $28,600; previous week, $27,000.

Teahouse of the August Moon, Erlanger (33d wk) ($5; 1,335; $35,495) (Eddie Bracken, Hugh Reilly). Over $25,300; previous week, same.

Lovers, Great Northern (2d wk) ($4.40; 1,400; $34,579). Almost $17,300 on subscription; previous week, $14,500.

Opened This Week

Bad Seed, Harris ($5; 1,000; $23,600) (Nancy Kelly). Opened last night (Mon.) for a run on subscription.

'Darling' $13,800, Tallu $55,200, Hub

Boston, May 1.

Legit is holding a lively pace in Boston, despite the waning season. "Ziegfeld Follies" bucked the notices again last week, and "Wake Up, Darling," also a pre-Broadway tryout, did moderately well on its holdover.

"Shangri-La," tuning up for Broadway, opens tonight (Tues.) at the Shubert for a three-week stand, with "New Faces" due to follow for a tryout engagement and then the touring "Pajama Game" coming in. The Colonial, which just had the New York company of "Teahouse of the August Moon," gets the Chicago troupe May 22 for a three-weeker.

Estimates for Last Week

Wake Up, Darling, Plymouth (C) (2d wk) ($3.85-$3.30; 1,200; $29,728) (Barry Nelson, Barbara Britton, Russell Nype). Tryout drew a fair $13,800 for the holdover; previous week was $15,000 for seven performances; exited Saturday night (28) for Broadway.

Ziegfeld Follies, Shubert (R) (2d wk) ($6.25-$4.95; 1,717; $56,179) (Tallulah Bankhead). Critical pans failed to stem the boxoffice tide for this musical tryout; got over $55,200 on the holdover; previous week, $56,000; moved out Saturday night (28) to continue tuneup tour.

'YANKEES' FAIR $35,100, THIRD WEEK IN CLEVE.

Cleveland, May 1.

The touring "Damn Yankees," starring Bobby Clark, pulled a passable $35,100 last week, its third, at the Hanna Theatre here. Potential capacity gross is $47,000 at the $6 top in the 1,435-seat house. First stanza was $38,000 and the second drew $37,000.

The musical remains this week, its fourth.

Plenty 'Fancy' at $44,700, Full Week, Hershey, Pa.

Hershey, Pa., May 1.

"Plain and Fancy" grossed a big $44,700 at the Community Theatre last week.

The musical is current at the Nixon Theatre, Pittsburgh.

'Seed' Not So Bad $17,700, Single Week, Milwaukee

Milwaukee, May 1.

"Bad Seed," starring Nancy Kelly, grossed a fair $17,700 at the Pabst Theatre last week.

The play moved into the Harris Theatre, Chicago, last Monday (30) for a run.

'Can' 22½G, Wilmington

Wilmington, May 1.

"Can-Can" drew nice reviews and favorable word-of-mouth reaction, but grossed only $22,400 in eight performances last week at the 1,223-seat Playhouse here at a $5.90 top.

The musical was the final offering of the local legit season.

'T&S.' $12,500 in Split

Providence, May 1.

"Tea and Sympathy," costarring Maria Riva and Alan Baxter, grossed a so-so $12,500 in an eight-performance, three-way split last week. The production played two performances Monday-Tuesday (23-24) at the Auditorium, Portland, and three performances Wednesday-Thursday (25-26) at the Bushnell Memorial Auditorium, Hartford. It wrapped up the week with another three performances Friday-Saturday (27-28) at the Auditorium here.

The tour winds up with the current stanza, being split between Binghamton and Schenectady.

'STOCKINGS' OK $45,000, 'WALTZ' $12,200, FRISCO

San Francisco, May 1.

Civic Light Opera's first offering of the season, "Silk Stockings," got good notices and a hefty first frame at the Curran last week. "Anniversary Waltz," in its 24th round at the Alcazar, slipped.

"Anastasia" opens Friday night (4) at the Geary.

Estimates for Last Week

Silk Stockings, Curran (MC) (1st wk) ($5.40-$4.90; 1,752; $52,000) (1st wk) (Don Ameche). Opened to a nifty $45,000.

Anniversary Waltz, Alcazar (C) (24th wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Marjorie Lord, Richard Eastham). Nearly $12,200; previous week, $13,900.

'Friend' Languid $25,000, Initial Week in Cincy

Cincinnati, May 1.

"Boy Friend" disappointed with a $25,000 gross last week in the first half of a fortnight's stay at the 2,000-seat Shubert. Top was $4.95.

Engagement tested Cincy as a two-week stand. Test renews May 21 with "Damn Yankees," starring Bobby Clark, in the Shubert for a double frame at a $5.65 top.

'Sheep' Moderate $9,500, 'Joy Ride' NG $11,200, L.A.

Los Angeles, May 1.

Local legit scene brightened somewhat last week with "White Sheep of the Family" in its initial frame at the Carthay Circle Theatre, "Joy Ride," at the Huntington Hartford Theatre continued in the red again in 14th week.

"Rosalinda" opened the 19th season of L.A. Civic Light Opera last night (Mon.) at the Philharmonic Aud.

Estimates for Last Week

White Sheep of the Family, Carthay Circle (C) (1st wk) ($3.30; 1,518; $26,000). Demure $9,500.

Joy Ride, Huntington Hartford (R) (14th wk) ($4.95; 1,032; $32,000). Still in red with $11,200; previous week, $10,500.

'Bus' a Local at $14,400, Single Week, Montreal

Montreal, May 1.

"Bus Stop" picked up nearly $14,400 at Her Majesty's last week with the 1,704-seater scaled to a $3.94 top.

Returns were fair considering the generally poor notices.

'Hearts' 3G (11), Rochest

Rochester, May 1.

Stock production of "King of Hearts" drew a disappointing $3,000 for 11 performances ending last Sunday night (29) at the local Arena Theatre.

"Wedding Breakfast" will be the season finale, opening tonight (Tues.) at the Omar K. Lerman-Dorothy Chernuck theatre-in-the-round. No summer season is scheduled.

'Teahouse' Hefty $29,900, Return Date in St. Loo

St. Louis, May 1.

"Teahouse of the August Moon," playing its third stanza in St. Louis, grossed almost $29,900 last week at a $4.48 top in the 1,513-seat American Theatre here.

This was the third company of the show, with Larry Parks as star. The second troupe, costarring Burgess Meredith and Scott McKay, played a fortnight here in December, 1954.

'The Fella' $54,875, 'Teahouse' $44,676, Philly Records

Philadelphia, May 1.

It may be near the end of the season, but Philly business was at a peak of the year level last week. "Teahouse of the August Moon" is on the way to setting a four-week record for straight plays at the Forrest. Coupled with big advance, critical reception was enthusiastic for the longrun Broadway hit.

"Most Happy Fella" clocked up a sellout third week at the Shubert. The Frank Loesser tuner departed Saturday evening (28).

The Shubert is dark, but relights tomorrow (Wed.) with "Ziegfeld Follies" in for a two-and-half week stand. Musical "Shangri-La" will wind up the season with two weeks at the Forrest, starring May 22.

Estimates for Last Week

Teahouse of the August Moon, Forrest (C) (1st wk) ($5.40; 1,760; $45,000) (Eli Wallach, Gene Blakely). Long awaited comedy received critical accolades from Murdock, Inquirer; Sensenderfer, Bulletin; Gaghan, Daily News. Word of mouth did the rest. Initial stanza set a new straight play record for the house, $44,676, topping the old mark of $44,544 held by "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof."

Most Happy Fella, Shubert (MD) (3d wk) ($6.60-$5.40; 1,870; $55,250). Ran into the SRO class for second straight week, with another house record at $54,875; previous week, $54,360. Musical moved out Saturday (28) to Broadway.

'Anastasia' Thin $8,700 In 6-Show Split Week

Salina, Kans., May 1.

"Anastasia," costarring Viveca Lindfors and Eugenie Leontovich, grossed a weak $8,700 in a six-performance, four-way split last week. The show took in $1,200 in a Sunday (22) matinee at the American Theatre, St. Louis, and a $4,000 guarantee for one performance Monday (23) at the Hoch Auditorium, Lawrence, Kans. Another $2,500 was picked up in three performances Wednesday-Friday (25-27) at the Arcadia, Wichita, while the take for one performance Saturday (28) at the High School Auditorium here was $1,000.

The drama opens a stand in San Francisco next Friday (4).

'SHANGRI' BIG 54½G (9) FOR NEW HAVEN DEBUT

New Haven, May 1.

Premiere of "Shangri-La" at Shubert last week, plus the opening the previous Saturday (21) pulled a handsome $54,500 for the nine performances, despite cool critical reception. The musical was scaled at a $6 top and had a potential capacity gross of $56,000 for the 1,600-seat house.

Season winds up this week with four-day stand of "Bus Stop," opening tomorrow night (Wed.) and playing through Saturday (5).

'Game' Passable $35,300, First Week in Detroit

Detroit, May 1.

The touring "Pajama Game" grossed a moderate $35,300 last week in the opener of a four-week run at the 2,050-seat Shubert. Potential capacity gross is $53,000 at the $4 top.

Advance sale for remaining weeks has been brisk, with more than $100,000 reported in the till.

Met and Guild Break Off Talks; Snag Over 'Re-Opening' Clause

Negotiations for a new two-year contract for singers and dancers have been discontinued by the Metropolitan Opera Assn. and the American Guild of Musical Artists. As a consequence, no move is being made to reach a new recording agreement, and the union notified its members yesterday (Tues.) not to report for any rehearsals or recording sessions for the Met.

Latter deadlock is figured likely to have immediate repercussions, since the Met has a deal with the Book-of-the-Month Club for regular distribution of operatic recordings. The company has been making platters under a recording clause in the old basic contract, plus letters-of-agreement with individual singers. AGMA has notified its members, however, that the letters-of-agreement are not binding.

The principal clinker in the stalled confabs between the union and the opera management is the fact that existing contracts with the musicians and stagehands provide that the wage clauses may be reopened if general increases are given to any other employee group. Thus, a concession to AGMA would open the way for the tooters and grips to hit the management for similar boosts.

Negotiations between the Met and AGMA were broken off last week after reaching an impasse on various issues. There had been three days of uninterrupted confabs in New York and a day and a half more in Boston, where the opera troupe was playing an engagement. When it became apparent that no progress was being made, the negotiators "agreed on the disagreement." No plans were made for a resumption of talks.

The union's basic demands are as follows:

For the chorus, security of employment (no firing if the artist is physical able to perform), plus an increase from $1.70 to $3 in the hourly rehearsal rate.

For the ballet, security of employment and a decrease from 21 to 12 in the number of free rehearsal hours per week.

For principals, a flat $50 per week for all pre-season rehearsals, instead of the present rate of $20 for the first week and $40 per week for the second and third weeks.

Representing the Met in the negotiations have been general manager Rudolf Bing, plus staff members Reginald Allen, Robert Herman and attorney Lincoln Lauterstein. Attorney and acting executive-secretary Mortimer Becker has been the chief negotiator for AGMA, with committees representing the principals, chorus and ballet.

N.Y. CITY OPERA SKEDS 5 PREEMS NEXT FALL

New York City Opera Co. will open its fall season at the N. Y. City Center Sept. 20, starting a schedule that will include five premieres. Erich Leinsdorf, recently appointed director, stated the works presented this year will include contemporary operas, as well as standard and light operas.

First in the modern category will be the U. S. preem of "The Tempest" by the Swiss composer, Frank Martin, based on the Shakespearean comedy.

Other contemporary works will include "The Moon," by Carl Orff of Germany; "Susannah" by Carlisle Floyd, which had its first presentation at the Florida State U. in February of last year. Composer is an assistant professor of piano at that college. Also slated for the City Center is Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld," with a revised libretto by Eric Bentley and new orchestration by Tadeusz Kassern. "Mignon" by Thomas is also set, as is "La Boheme," "Carmen," "Die Fledermaus" and "La Traviata."

Leo Kerz has joined the outfit as the art director. Jean Paul Morel has repacted as music director, and Margaret Hillis will do the choral direction with Marcella Cisney assisting her. Batoning will be by Leinsdorf, Morel, Joseph Rosenstock, Emerson Buckley and Julius Rodel. Hans Sondheimer will again be technical director.

Cleve. Metopera Heads For 250G in 1st Week

Cleveland, May 1.

Metropolitan Opera, opening its 31st season here last week (23) with "Tales of Hoffmann," appeared headed for $250,000 gross for week's stand. Opener was near-capacity, and weekend performances of "Rigoletto" and "Aida" will be even bigger. Only handful of $1.20 seats for "Aida" were available when opera troupe hit town.

New feature of week was an opera ball after opening night's performance with entire company as guests of local sponsoring association. Ball was complete sellout week before the opening. H. J. Miskell, general manager of Met seasons here since 1927, again managed the festival, and already is negotiating for top casts and choice repertoire for 1957 engagement.

Puerto Rico's 8 Operas In June

A company of 120, including 50 musicians, will plane out June 14 from New York for the third annual opera festival to be presented at the U. of Puerto Rico in Rio Piedras. Eight operas have been set for the June 15-23 event. They're "La Forza del Destino," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Carmen," "Madame Butterfly," "La Traviata," "Faust," "La Boheme" and "La Tosca."

Talent lineup includes Licia Albanese, Dorothy Kirsten, May Lesawyer, Eva Likova, Gloria Lind, Herva Nelli, Graciela Rivera, Rosalind Elias, Mignon Dunn, Nell Rankin, Virginio Assandri, Giuseppe Campora, Brian Sullivan and Richard Tucker. Also, John Brownlee, Frank Guarrera, Calvin Marsh, Aldo Protti, Lloyd Harris, Joshua Hecht and Jerome Hines.

Emerson Buckley will double as conductor and musical director, while Pietro Cimara and Wilfrid Pelletier will also have batoner assignments. Anthony Stibanello will be stage director and Brownlee will double as production director. Albert B. Gins, N. Y. attorney-impresario, is again in charge of the project, which is being sponsored for the first time by the newspaper El Mundo.

The troupe will be augmented in Puerto Rico by a chorus of about 40, plus approximately 80 extras. The b.o. will be scaled to an $8.50 top. The university buys out the balcony for its students, leaving 1,300 seats available to the public at each performance.

Havana Orch Guesters

Havana, May 1.

The Havana Philharmonic Orchestra has picked four guest conductors for the summer season, in Jose Iturbi, Richard Austin, Walter Hendl and Howard Mitchell. Four soloists have also been chosen, in Andres Segovia, Marta Perez, Joseph Fuchs and Ivatte Hernandez.

The Ministry of Education's National Institute of Culture recently took over the orchestra after it sustained a long period of financial losses. Previously the orchestra had been managed by a private non-profit organization.

The orchestra of 75 musicians is headed by Jorge Bolet.

Junior Oistrakh Wows Reich Crix; May Visit States

Frankfurt, May 1.

Handsome, 25, superbly trained and wearing tails whose tailoring was worthy of London, Igor Oistrakh, violinist son of the Russian fiddle virtuoso, David Oistrakh, has wowed the German music critics. It was the young man's first date outside the Soviet and some 200 young concertgoers clamored backstage for his autograph, very unusual in correct German halls.

Russians brought in Oistrakh as part of the hoopla on opening their new embassy at Bonn. Germans and Russians then worked out a "tour" of Frankfurt, Berlin, Duesseldorf and Munich. For his Frankfurt debut the visitor filled the 1,500-capacity Volksbildungsheim, unprecedented for a "new" violinist.

While East German concert artists, under Russian domination often appear in public concerts in West Germany, for a Russian artist to appear here is a rarity. Igor's father, David, was scheduled to play in West Berlin about two years ago, but the concert was abruptly cancelled "for political reasons."

Only criticism of visitor was his constant tuning of the strings of his instrument between numbers. For his performance itself, it was a wave of raves for the "flawless playing" and "delicacy of feeling" and "tone seldom heard here before." Comparisons were made in the press with Heifetz, Milstein, Hubermann. Frankfurt Allgemeine, the New York Times of West Germany, called young fiddler "Indeed a virtuoso of great style."

Concert included Cesar Franck, Bach, Prokofieff, Szymanowski's delicate "The Fountain of Arethusa," and a pop windup with Saint Saens Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso.

Young Oistrakh has tentative plans to follow his famous father, with a concert tour of the States next year.

Inside Stuff—Concerts

Television has found a behind-the-scenes job in the Vienna State Opera House, which reopened last November. It is helping the conductor of the choir, backstage, to take his cue from the orchestra conductor, in front. As in many European opera houses, the Vienna Opera choir is behind the stage and invisible to the audience. A miniature television camera fitted into the prompter's box, facing the orchestra, relays the conductor's movements to a screen installed behind the stage where choirmaster and singers await their cue. Another screen in the organ room links the organist with the orchestra conductor.

The Phoenix Theatre, N. Y., will present the Ballet Theatre Workshop on May 7 as the sixth and final attraction of the Monday night "Sideshow" series. The Workshop is an experimental adjunct of Ballet Theatre. With exception of guest artists Gemze de Lappe and Sonia Arova, all the dancers will be students of the Ballet Theatre School.

Kirsten Flagstad will sing the role of Brunnhilde in Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung" in a three-broadcast performance recently recorded in Norway for CBS Radio, to open this year's "World Music Festivals" on the network Sundays, May 6, 13 and 21. Set Svanholm sings Siegfried. "Festivals" will begin its fourth consecutive summer season on the network, with James Fassett as music commentator.

Columbia U. Opera Workshop, under direction of Felix Brentano and Rudolf Thomas, will give the world premiere May 17-18-19 of another American opera, "Pantaloon," a full-length work with music by Robert Ward and libretto by Bernard Stambler, based on Andreyev's play. "He Who Gets Slapped."

Bruno Walter has accepted an invite by the Bruckner Society of Linz, Upper Austria, to conduct a concert in commemoration of the 60th anniversary of the death of Austrian composer Anton Bruckner. Conductor will lead the Vienna Symphony Orchestra in Bruckner's Ninth Symphony, July 1, at Linz.

San Francisco: 14 Operas, 45 Dates; 6 Foreign Singers, 2 Conductors Debut

San Francisco, May 1.

San Francisco Opera next season will produce 14 operas for a total of 45 California performances. Season starts Sept. 13 and half the performances will be in Frisco, after which the company will tour to Los Angeles, San Diego, Pasadena and Sacramento.

Operas to be performed includes Zandonai's "Francesca da Rimini" and "Cosi Fan Tutte"—which the local company has never before done. Standards to be performed will be "Manon Lescaut" (season's opener), "Falstaff," "Die Walkure," "Boris Goudonoff" (in Russian), "Simon Boccanegra," "Il Trovatore," "L'Elisir d'Amore," "The Flying Dutchman," "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly," "Aida" and "Tosca."

Making their American debuts will be Leonie Rysanek (Viennese soprano), Boris Christoff (Russian basso), Birgit Nilsson (Swedish soprano), Oralia Dominguez (Mexican mezzo-soprano) and Rolando Panerai and Anselmo Colzani (Italian baritones).

Company debuts will be made by sopranos Patrice Munsel and Eileen Farrell, and tenors Richard Martell, Norman Kelley and Giuseppe Campora.

Two European conductors—Oliviero De Fabritis of Italy and Lovro Von Matacic of Yugoslavia—will also make American debuts here.

Leo Kerz has been engaged to design new productions of "Francesca da Rimni" and "Die Walkure" and George Jenkins has been hired to do "Cosi Fan Tutte."

Among singers re-engaged for the season are Jussi Bjoerling, Fran Guerrara, Ifalo Tajo, Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Renata Tebaldi, Licia Albanese, Dorothy Kirsten, Jan Peerce, Richard Lewis and Leonard Warren.

Returning conductors include William Steinberg, Fausto Cleva, Glauco Curiel, Karl Kritz and Adler.

Kurt Herbert Adler is artistic director.

Paris' Babilee Ballets; Cocteau As an Angel

Paris, May 1.

New companies to present ballet continues to bob up with the greatest of ease in Paris, thanks usually to official encouragement. Latest is the Ballets de Jean Babilee due into the Theatre des Champs Elysees June 18 for three weeks. Mme. Babilee is currently in Copenhagen trying to commit Jerome Robbins, the American choreographer, to stage two ballets.

Babilee is formerly of French National Opera and is known in States via Ballet Theatre. His June venture's business manager is Ben Carlin, ex-exec for the Marquis de Cuevas.

A heavy backer of the Babilee venture is Jean Cocteau, the Academician who "doubles" as novelist, painter, dramatist and film scenarist.

Uproar at Opera In Philadelphia

Philadelphia, May 1.

Anthony Terraciano is out as general manager and Humbert A. Pelosi is in at the Philadelphia Grand Opera Co. and an opera uproar of alleged bad faith and squeezeplay shenanigans now is public.

Philadelphia Grand was formed last year by the merger of two rival companies—the Philadelphia LaScala Opera and the Philadelphia Civic Grand. Merger was greased by a municipal subsidy of $25,000 to promote opera in this city.

Under the terms of the merger, there was a "gentleman's agreement" whereby Terraciano, founder of the Civic Grand, was to act as general manager, with Pelosi, the LaScala head, to serve as consultant. Several weeks ago Pelosi, withdrew claiming he was never once consulted and that everyone with LaScala connections was discriminated against.

Immediate effect of the walkout was to result in the City freezing next year's $25,000 grant and to ventilate the feud. Board of directors settled on a compromise whereby Terraciano would direct six operas and Pelosi four. Terraciano promptly handed in his resignation declaring: "It's impossible to have an opera company with two managers."

Pelosi is the brother of the late Francesco Pelosi, who founded the Philadelphia LaScala in 1925. As general manager for the 1956-57 season he plans schedule of 10 operas.

Meanwhile, In Chicago—

Chicago, May 1.

Lyric Theatre's final act probably will be sung in a Chicago courtroom rather than on the Civic Opera House stage the way things are shaping up. Round Two in the legal fight for "control" of the embattled opera company was filed in Superior Court last week by Lyric secretary-treasurer Lawrence V. Kelly in a $500,000 countersuit against Lyric president Carol Fox and 18 others involved in the creation of the recently-formed Opera Theatre Assn.

Kelly's damage suit was entered in behalf of himself, artistic director Nicola Rescigno and Betty M. McAllister. The three are Lyric board members involved in feud with Miss Fox which has stymied the company's plans for its announced five-week season to start Oct. 10. Action followed a receivership suit filed two weeks ago against the Lyric by a group of creditors who charged the company was "insolvent."

Kelly's counteraction alleges that Miss Fox and her associates are "conspiring" to put the Lyric out of business and to supplant it with the Opera Theatre Assn. His move for a change of venue and a dismissal of the creditors' suit was denied Friday (27). Hearings are expected to continue tomorrow (Wed.) in Judge John P. Lupe's court.

TROY'S RPI ARENA SETS SEASON'S SKED

Troy, May 1.

Six attractions three of them new here and two of them believed to be touring for the first time in this country have been booked for the R.P.I. Field House for next season. International Ice Capades" will play the arena Sept. 5-15. Carabinieri Band, from Italy, comes in Oct. 6-7, and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, Nov. 8.

NBC Opera Co. will present "Madame Butterfly" Dec. 4, Boston Pops Orchestra, a strong draw in 1954 and 1955, will appear Jan. 4, while Boston Symphony Orchestra will concertize Feb. 4.

"Ice Carnival," produced by Field House staff, closes the season Mar. 14-16.

Concert Notes

Metopera general manager Rudolf Bing received Commander of British Empire decoration Monday night (30) at British embassy in Washington for services in cause of music.

Fritz Reiner, Chicago Symphony Orchestral musical director, to conduct the Vienna Philharmonic at the Salzburg Festival and the London Philharmonic at the Lucerne Festival.

Royal Danish Ballet preems in the U.S. at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y., Sept. 16. Troupe will give 17 performances.

R&H at Chi Fete

Chicago, May 1.

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2d have accepted bid to appear at the Chicagoland Music Festival, annual Chicago Tribune sponsored jamboree to be held at Soldiers Field Aug. 18.

Rodgers will conduct the fest's 100-piece orchestra in a playing of excerpts from his "Victory at Sea" original score.

Festival director Phillip Maxwell says the offer is still open to soprano Maria Callas to sing at the affair but that to date he's had no reply from the opera star now in Italy. Per custom, a crowd of 80,000 is anticipated.

Trib Nixes Ad, Then OKs It

First, the N. Y. Herald-Tribune rejected an advertisement from Horizon Press on Corliss Lamont's "Freedom Is as Freedom Does," but over the weekend the paper revoked its original stand and sanctioned sale of space in next Sunday's (6) issue to plug the tome. In the interim, Lamont and others addressed letters to members of the Trib editorial staff, including literary editor Irita Van Doren.

A spokesman for the Trib sales department, though he would give no reason for the original rejection, said that the Horizon ad (that had run in several other U.S. newspapers) could go in the N.Y. paper if certain changes were made in the copy. Change was in the line, "The expression of a civilized and independent mind, this major work points the way to a revitalization of freedom." According to a Lamont spokesman, Trib settled for this: "It is the expression of a civilized and independent mind."

$10 Subscription Gamble

In order to raise additional capital to finance the third edition of the entertainment mag, "Limelight," editor and new publisher Chet Whitehorn worked up an unusual letter gimmick. Writing to several hundred biz associates and friends, Whitehorn said: "Here is a gamble for you—admittedly a gamble which may interest you not at all . . . a lifetime subscription to Limelight for $10. The gamble, of course, is which lifetime. Yours, or Limelight's. I'm convinced this magazine can and will succeed. If I'm wrong, I lose —and so do you."

25c 'Show Business' Mag

Pines Publications Inc., longtime publishers of Screenland and Silver Screen fan mags, have put out a special 25c issue devoted to 50 years of entertainment industry history. Tagged "This Was Show Business," the publication covers films, vaude, legit, radio, burlesque and niteries in a 76-page picture story that lists almost as many names per inch as the telephone directory. The text is sketchy, but colorful. The accent on w.k. names should appeal to the pop market, while the photos are definitely a lure.

Dakin, Moseley To GF

Roger Dakin, former editor, and Seth Moseley, ex-publicity director of Collier's, both signed on with General Foods, in White Plains, N. Y., with Dakin heading up the manufacturer's editorial research and Moseley taking over corporation's press relations.

Pelham Grenville on Wodehouse

"America, I Like You" (Simon & Schuster; $3.50) is probably as close as that recently naturalized American citizen, Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, will ever come to writing an autobiography.

More's the pity, for "Plum" Wodehouse, author of several dozen of the funniest books written in the past 50 years, as well as lyricist and coauthor of any number of Broadway musicals, must have his serious moments. Obviously, there have been somber periods in the life of any man past 70, especially when that man spent a protracted span in a German prison camp, and part of the time had to swallow matchsticks to deaden his hunger.

No doubt the effervescent Wodehouse prefers to forget that part of his career, for no mention of it intrudes into these 212 light mannered pages. There is really little about Wodehouse the man, nor does he tell much about his show biz experiences, although he ostensibly devotes one chapter to his musicomedy activities and another to his stay in Hollywood as a film writer. Like all the chapter heads, however, these merely form a convenient springboard for mildly or outrageously ludicrous speculations on such diverse subjects as armadillos and Shakespeare's methods of composition.

P. G. is not above milking a gag as fulsomely as an oldtime vaude comic, but the book is genuinely amusing throughout, and the comedy line seldom seems stretched to the breaking point. All Wodehouse addicts will read it and chortle as a matter of course. Those unfortunates who don't know the master should get the book and get hep to the funniest guy now writing in English.

Rings The Bell For Sales Anyway

Last week, author George de Mare undersigned a statement on G. P. Putnam's Sons stationery that began this way: "There has been publicity on 'The Empire,' a novel, to the effect that the 'dream corporation' in it is based on one or another company and specifically the Bell System. That is emphatically not the case." Inquiry revealed that Bell (de Mare works on a house organ for sister Western Electric) had precipitated the denial.

A Western Electric spokesman said that he "wasn't much concerned, until a bookseller mentioned to me that the book dealt with the Bell Telephone System, and I merely brought it to de Mare's attention." Same man described the book as being uncomplimentary to whatever company it was describing.

Actually, word is out that a number of execs in parent American Tel & Tel are miffed over de Mare's portrayals. But the author insisted in his statement that he was representing the big corporation "in the abstract and it is no more the Bell System than it is any other large corporate entity."

Whatever the case, there has been a rush on the "The Empire" at most of the downtown N. Y. bookshops around Western Electric headquarters and the tome hasn't even been released officially as yet.

Michener's Findings

Author James A. Michener is back in Hawaii after a trip through the Far East and is planning to remain in Honolulu until June. He wants to travel again to the South Seas and plans to go to Tahiti aboard the yacht Te Vega, which makes regular sailings from Hawaii to Tahiti.

Michener found that prejudice is rife throughout the Far East, especially in India. And Americans are in disfavor in Japan, he told newsmen.

Bergman Honored

Bernard A. Bergman, who took over as editor of the Philadelphia Daily News, was honored by Temple University for making the newspaper "a humane and educational force in the life of the community." The citation was presented (26) at the School of Journalism's 12th annual press tournament by William W. Tomlinson, the university's veepee.

Ben Franklin Awards

U. of Illinois and the Society of Magazine Writers and the Magazine Publishers Assn. have set the third annual Benjamin Franklin Magazine Awards dinner for the Plaza, N. Y., on May 15.

Speakers will include Sen. Richard L. Neuberger and U.S. Information Agency chief Theodore C. Streibert, with Thomas Brophy, chairman of Kenyon & Eckhardt agency, presiding.

'Bridey Murphy' Chain' Reaction

A reflex from Morey Bernstein's "Bridey Murphy" bestseller has redounded to Thomas Sugrue's "There Is A River," a Holt book which is mentioned in "Bridey." Holt veep Bill Buckley dug it up out of the files and while "River" has been a steady catalog seller he conceived the idea that a paperback would go well.

Thus, Dell is issuing a 35c reprint, new coin for Sugrue's work, strictly because of the "Bridey" trailer.

Mandelstam's Memoirs

Abe (Mandy) Mandelstam, who created the Kelcey Allen Memorial Award, is now writing a book about his 40 years of camp directing and talent discovering.

Those who got their start at his Summer camps in Maine (Hiawatha and Wigwam) are Richard Rodgers, Frank Loesser and Edward G. Robinson. Mandelstam, now past 70, is a w.k. Broadway angel.

by television and recovered. "Record sales last year, spurred by high fidelity, topped $225,000,000. Motion picture grosses zoomed $35,000,000 over the previous year's worldwide sales totals. Over 14,000,000 new radios, the highest figure in seven years and a full third above 1954, were sold. The smaller the radio set, the bigger it gets and the more it gets around," O'Neil added.

"I refuse to believe the development of any good and worthwhile product is done at the expense of another good and worthwhile product. Today, despite forebodings over tv we see printed media with circulations at all-time highs. In the film industry, technology has provided greatly improved color, the wide screen and far richer sound. It's even helped the baby-sitting problem with the drive-ins to the whopping extent of 25 per cent of our domestic gross," O'Neil stated.

Warners 'Out'

reluctant today about yielding but the pressure of other stockholders now is expected to force him to do so.

Chesler's Goal

The Chesler objective is to buy out all the assets at the equivalent of $27 per share of common stock. There are 2,480,000 outstanding, bringing the total price to that $66,960,000 figure. The three Warners and their families own about 25% of the total outstanding, Jack L. being the heaviest holder, with 10%.

Transaction would work along the same lines as Howard Hughes bought RKO Pictures 100%—by acquiring all the assets and pouring all the purchase money into a holding company.

In the event that Harry Warner should still seek to balk the Chesler takeover, it's thought the Chesler group would undertake to corral enough stock to reduce his, Warner's, holdings short of voting control. This time brothers Jack and Maj. Albert Warner are reportedly agreeable to the sale.

Well-Kept Secret

The projected deal had been a well-kept secret. With first leaks on Monday (30) price of the stock jumped $2.50, closing the day at $23.

Films-to-television back product which Chesler picked up a few weeks ago put $21,000,000 in the WB treasury. Thus, with the overall deal now being worked on, Chesler in effect will have sold his own assets to himself, but in somewhat of a backward sequence.

Naturally there's always the possibility of a last-minute hitch —an insurmountable snag, perhaps not excluding the possibility that any kind of pressure against a still-reluctant Harry Warner could backfire.

But if all the kinks are ironed out, it would mean the end of the Warner rule of a corporation that had its genesis with the opening of a 90-seat theatre in Newcastle, Pa., in 1905 by Harry Warner, survived crisis after crisis through the years and emerged as one of the industry's greats and creators of the 1927 revolution of Vitaphone.

Jack L., Maj. Albert and another brother, the late Sam Warner, followed Harry into the business, first in exhibition and subsequently expanding into theatre operation and distribution.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

San Francisco, May 1.

Somebody up there must like San Francisco. Anyway they took a town that was a flop and made a hit of it. They didn't do much for Sodom. Or Carthage. Nor, as far as I can see, are they doing it for Hollywood. But San Francisco? Absolutement!

"Earthquake" was a dirty word around San Francisco for about 40 years. Then some mighty grown up men, women and children decided to kill it as a running gag. Henceforth they would refer to the catastrophe of April 18, 1906, as an "earthquake followed by a fire," not just a "fire," and celebrate its 50th anniversary with a Festival of Progress. It invited all its suburbs—Los Angeles (population 2,243,-901!), Sacramento, etc., to join in its fiesta and most of them did. As a result they ended the celebration with a three hour parade down Market Street which was viewed by 250,000.

This decision of San Franciscans to celebrate a catastrophe with a fiesta required a lot of guts, for people anywhere, but more for Californians because they had been brainwashed more than most Americanos into believing if you never mentioned a tragic event in your life you might be convinced in time that it never happened.

In 1906 San Francisco had a population of 400,000. It was the number one town of the west, show-wise as well as in population. The earthquake and fire caught stars like John Barrymore and Enrico Caruso in ad-libbed performances at the crack of dawn—and quel crack!

In New York Will Irwin, a star reporter on The Sun, a native-born San Franciscan, sat down and wrote about the city that had been added to the litany of ghost towns. Franklin Matthews, the city editor, headed it, "The City That Was." It was a great story and a great head. They had come to bury Frisco and to praise it.

Nice Nipup!

But today, like a Lazarus of its time, San Francisco is a town of 800,000, serving a metropolitan area of 3,000,000. Macy's has four stores in this area. Macy's has no stores in the Los Angeles district. You know Macy's. Smart. Thrifty.

San Francisco is a warm town, a proud town, a grand town. It thinks its cable cars are for the birds. But try and remove them. Except for Market street almost any of its thoroughfares are ski runs. Some of them scare the gizzards out of flat-landers.

Abe Mellinkoff, city editor of The Chronicle, took the Scullys to a real Chinese dinner and afterwards drove us by his home. It was on Filbert street. Ahead of us was a car from Florida. The driver wouldn't continue. He backed away and then we could see why. To go ahead was like driving off a cliff.

But Abe went ahead, laughing at prairie dogs like us. His wife, Suzanne, born in Moscow, educated in Israel, and married in California, had louder laughs than Abe—of course at our expense. I didn't laugh. Cliff-hanging to me is not a laughing matter. I took my western serials seriously.

"Now you know why we didn't invite you up—and I do mean up—to dinner," said Abe.

He writes a gay column called Morning Report in addition to his city editorial routines. He seems to have been the only one who survived the Chronicle's own private earthquake a few years ago, and is a fine, hep newspaperman. He even had a kind work to say about a rival.

"The Examiner had an editorial today pitching for funds and support of the American Civil Liberties Union," he said. "That could hardly have happened under the Old Man."

The Shrine of Irish Coffee

After dinner he took us to Buena Vista, I think it was called. Anyway, it was a bar above Fisherman's Wharf. We went there for a shot of Irish coffee. This was the place where it all started. Stan Delaplane, a Chronicle discovery, discovered the hot toddy. It was a sort of spiked Cafe Viennois—spiked, in this bar at least, with authentic Irish Whiskey.

The town is not always as warm and sunny as it was on this trip. It has cold winds and fog on occasion, and an antipneumonia vaccine like Irish coffee is just what the doctor should have ordered for it years ago.

The area keeps building bridges, though it hasn't as yet named one after Harry. They are miles long and seem to have other claims to uniqueness. The latest one from Richmond is nearing completion and when it is another ferry will be drydocked. There can't be many left. Bridges or not. Berkeley and Oakland remain in another world. Oakland particularly has nothing and without San Francisco to entertain Knowland's Nobodies they would revert to ant-eaters. This is another thing San Francisco does for the whole Bay area. It supplies it with all sorts of entertainment—from symphony orchestras to honky tonks. Much of this is its own, not imported.

Gene Castle Rips 'Em

The press bunch invited me to their weekly "gang" dinner. Bob Alderman, former sec. of Gov. Knight and press man of the Pageant of Progress, was mine host. Eugene W. Castle, who used to head up Castle Films before he sold it to Universal and wrote his highly controversial "Billions, Blunders and Baloney," was the guest speaker and they pencilled me in next-to-closing. They have a black kitten on the speaker's table and everything said behind it is supposed to be off the record. But most of Gene's blast against global handouts and the U. S. Information Service is well known in the United States and 23 foreign countries and has been abundantly set forth in VARIETY.

Without Benefit of ASCAP

Because of these restrictions I suppose I can't even repeat a parody of George M. Cohan's "Mary Is A Grand Old Name" which Will Aubrey composed and sang.

Long a believer that children should be seen and not heard and that authors should be neither seen nor heard, but should be read, I found myself among contemporaries who do not share these views. Six out of 10 adults interviewed recently admitted that they had not read a book in a year, but this press bunch was obviously not in the majority. They have read and were pleased by what they had read.

Father William J. Monihan, of U. of San Francisco, where they have a library as well as a basketball team, and Ralph Moody, a fellow panelist, were at the dinner I couldn't very well use the Press Club as a warm-up for what had prepared for the librarians on the morrow. But seemingly it worked out better that way. We all had some laughs and the Moscow Mules were of the highest quality. Patent too!

OBITUARIES

EDWARD ARNOLD

Edward Arnold, 66, stage, screen and television actor, died of a cerebral hemorrhage April 26 in Encino, Cal. He was preparing to celebrate his 50th year in show business when death came.

Starting as a boy with the Ben Greet Players in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," he played legit roles for eight years before making his screen debut with Essanay Studios in 1915. After making more than 40 silent pictures for Essanay he resumed stage work in stock and on Broadway until 1932 when he returned to the screen in "Okay, America."

Subsequently Arnold made scores of films, prominent among which were "Rasputin," Diamond Jim Brady," "Cardinal Richelieu," "Idiot's Delight," "Lillian Russell," "Dear Ruth" and "The Hucksters." His most recent role was in "The Ambassador's Daughter," made in Paris, and he had just accepted a top role in Golden State Productions' science-fiction picture, "The She-Creature."

Aside from his professional work, Arnold was a power in the Screen Actors Guild, serving continuously on the board of directors since 1935 and as president in 1941-42. He helped organize the USO and Bond drives during World War II and was a co-founder of the "I Am An American Assn."

Survivors include his wife, Cleo, a stepson and three children by a former wife.

HENRY STEPHENSON

Henry Stephenson, 85, vet actor of stage and films, died April 24 in San Francisco after a fortnight's illness. He had come to Frisco from his New York home to be with his wife, Dorothy, who was playing in the touring "Bad Seed" company under her stage name of Ann Shoemaker. He was stricken with nephritis while there, but appeared to be recovering. His wife continued on tour to Milwaukee in the expectation that he would rejoin her there.

A native of Granada, B.W.I., Stephenson was educated at Rugby, in England, and began his theatrical career touring the British provinces with William and Dame Madge Kendal. He came to New York in 1901. After having leading roles in such plays as "An Englishman's Home," "Pillar of Society," "Justice" and "Journey's End" he entered films in 1932 with a part in the screen version of Philip Barry's "The Animal Kingdom."

His pictures included "Little Women," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Of Human Bondage" and "Oliver Twist" among others.

His wife is his only survivor.

ROBERT M. SAVINI

Robert M. Savini, 71, pioneer film distributor and president of Astor Pictures Corp. of New York, died April 29 at his winter home on Islamorada in the Florida Keys.

Born in New Orleans, Savini had been in the film industry for more than 50 years. In recent years his 26 companies, of which Astor Pictures is the parent organization, reissued films for tv and educational purposes.

Surviving are two brothers and two sisters.

NAT L. LEFTON

Nat L. Lefton, 62, former film distributor, died April 23 in Sarasota, Fla. Born in London, he moved to Ohio with his family at the age of 14 and entered the film exchange business in 1915.

try to coun'ry, the 264-page report emphasizes, in the way these media are shared. It stresses the fact that half the globe is illiterate and that "poverty in communication facilities goes hand in hand with illiteracy in Africa, Asia and South America."

Europeans, the booklet continues, purchased 38% of the world's dailies and North Americans 24%, while Africans, Asians and South Americans all told barely accounted for 24%. In radio, North America owns half of the world's sets, Europe 30% with the rest scattered among the remaining continents. U. S., controlling 44% of the world's 7,400 transmitters, also leads with 794 sets per 1,000 people.

Television is operating steadily in 26 nations—mostly American and European countries. It's being developed in eight others. This country owns 80% of the world's video receivers, with United Kingdom, Canada and USSR strung out behind in tv coverage.

THE PLIGHT OF THE TV COMICS

The Elvis Presley Story: He's Making Monkeys Out of Singers

Elvis Presley, RCA Victor's young hillbilly rock 'n' roller, is blowing up the biggest one-man storm in recent memory of the music biz. Not only is Presley selling disks at a record-breaking rate, but he's now leading an army of imitators who are trying to cash in on his stylistic cocktail of corn and the blues.

Presley's disk popularity is keeping Victor's plants working overtime, Going over the 1,000,000 marker on "Heartbreak Hotel" platter after a few weeks on the market, Presley has now had an advance sale from distributors of over 400,000 on his latest release, "I Want You, I Need You, I Love You" and "My Baby Left Me." It's the biggest advance in Victor's history. Presley, with the label for only a few months, has already come up with Victor's alltime pop album seller, topping the 300,000 marker with his package. The previous bestsellers, "Selections From the Glenn Miller Story" and Mario Lanza's "Student Prince," were just over the 200,000 level.

The Presley impact is now being manifested on the other labels which are digging up every singer who performs with the same uninhibited style. Already there are more than a dozen singers on wax who have been definitely inspired by Presley. And even those hillbillies who don't sing in precisely the same style are now indulging in Presley's loosejointed footwork and byplay with the guitar.

Presley, who has been very hot

Confidentially . . .

To date, Sammy Davis Jr. has been the topic of three articles in Confidential magazine. Last week, the expose sheet's publisher, Roberf Harrison, approached Davis with a pitch that he record a Nick Kenny tune, "Shh—It's Confidential."

When Davis nixed the deal, Harrison went to Decca asking that the label use its influence. Failing there, he went back to Davis. And he can't seem to understand why Davis doesn't want to do it.

Don Cornell Complains To Archbishop on BBC's Ban of His 'Bible' Tunes

Edinburgh, May 8.

Don Cornell, in vaude date at the Empire here, protested to the Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the English church, about the BBC's banning of his songs. He asked the cleric for his personal viewpoint on suitability of his tunes.

With his letter, Cornell sent the Archbishop copies of his records, plus sheet music. Tunes in question are "Hold My Hand," "No Man Is an Island," "I'm Blessed," "The Bible Tells Me So" and "I Still Have a Prayer."

Cornell told VARIETY; "I want to know what the Archbishop thinks, as head of the English church. Heads of all denominations in America have endorsed these songs as being suitable for the good of young people and teenagers."

Cornell and his pianist, Jerry Carretta, are skedded to plane back to N. Y. from London May 20, after current British tour.

U.S. Court's Ruling On Fight Pix May Hit All TV Rights

Washington, May 8.

The U. S. Supreme Court's refusal to review the decision of a lower court in the Al Ettore vs. Philco Television Broadcasting case, better known as the "Greatest Fights of the Century" litigation, is expected to have far-reaching reverberations in show biz, particularly in the television field. In effect, the Supreme Court's ruling stated that latterday television use of films of a boxing bout constituted a "performance" and that the participants should be remunerated for use of that performance. This could be applied, attorneys believe, to other filmed sports events and even to BANNED FOR 40 YEARS, 'NATION' NOW PLAYS O.

Columbus, May 8.

Over 40 years ago D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" played briefly at the Hartman Theatre, then was banned from the state by the new Ohio Censor Board. Objection was to the Dixiecrat-slanted lurid sex angles and the "professional Southerner" flavor derived from Thomas Dixon's novel glorifying the Ku Klux Klan.

Now the film, following end of censorship here, is opening tomorrow (Wed.) at the Indianola theatre as an "art" picture.

(Negro spokesmen to this day aver that next to Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," nothing has so stereotyped colored citizens and hence damaged the cause of race harmony as Griffith's sensational boxoffice smash, "Birth of a Nation."—Ed.)

FLOCK OF AXINGS; WHERE ARE SUBS?

By GEORGE ROSEN

The uncertain status of many television comics, including the ex-King of Video himself, Milton Berle, once more accentuates the plight of a medium that's been doing little or nothing to replenish its reserve comedic talent. Whether or not such stalwarts as Berle, Martha Raye, Danny Thomas or Jimmy Durante, among others, go to the post in the fall remains a moot point at the moment. The foursome which once ranked with the "high and the mighty" as tv attractions (and all, incidentally, out of the William Morris stable of top-priced talent) are unsponsored and uncommitted at the moment, all at the mercy of the ad agencies and their clients.

But perhaps even more to the point is the fact that few if any brand new comedy entries are around to move in where the vets leave off, with result that the opening of the '56-'57 season will bring in its wake an unprecedented downgrading of comedy formats as the networks run for cover with quiz, variety and adventure shows. Certainly the upbeat in program activity in the latter direction parallels if not eclipses the decline of the vet comics.

Berle, under contract to NBC, is down for a maximum of four one-hour Tuesday night shows next

Pulitzer Nod Gives 'Anne' 100% Sweep

"Diary of Anne Frank," which copped the 1956 Pulitzer Prize play award on Monday (7), gives the Frances Goodrich-Albert Hackett drama a clean sweep of the major legit honors of the season. The Kermit Bloomgarden production had previously nailed the New York Drama Critics Circle Award for the best new American play and the American Theatre Wing's Antoinette Perry (Tony) Award for the outstanding play of the year.

MacKinlay Kantor's novel, "Andersonville," published last October by World, was another Pulitzer prizewinner. It's being made into a film by Jerry Wald for Columbia Pictures. The Pulitzer music award went to Ernst Toch for his Symphony No. 3, which was initially performed by the Pittsburgh Symphony last Dec. 2, William Steinberg conducting.

The drama prize of $500, which is the same in the novel and music categories, is awarded "for the American play, preferably original in its source and dealing with American life, which shall represent in marked fashion the educa-

Shift of Middlebrows to Exurbia Alters Economics of B'way Legit

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Manhattan in particular and New York City in general is losing population to suburbia and exurbia at such a rate that the economic basics for support of the Broadway legitimate theatre are being drastically revolutionized. Since 1943 some 500,000 middle and upper income families have left.

There are 300,900 commuter-ticket sales daily into the city and another 1,300,000 irregular commuter riders. Surveys establish that 85% of these commuters attend a N.Y. legit show at least once a year and 70% go three or more times per season.

Although some legitimate showmen are notably sensitive to the importance of suburbia, there has never been sufficient analysis made of (a) out-of-town ticket mail-order composition or (b) the persons present at any given performance to determine who-comes-from-where among legit's patrons. This failure to get the facts is fairly typical of the legitimate theatre's general ignorance of its own economic potential.

The metropolitan area lying outside Gotham proper has risen since the war by 900,000 for a round figure total of 7,000,000. Against that, all five boroughs are up a bare 215,000 to hold around 8,000,000.

Negro Co-Ed Film

Albert Black, television producer, has mapped plans for the lensing of a feature production paralleling the case of Autherine Lucy, Negro co-ed at the U. of Alabama who was expelled recently in segregation issue. John O. Kellens, author of "Young Blood," published by Dial Press in 1954, has been assigned to do the screenplay.

According to Black's spokesman, the film will be brought in at a cost of $200,000. Property is titled "Incident on the Campus."

TV Webs Switch Racial & Facial Lyrics, Ban Some

Hollywood, May 8.

In allout drive to avoid offending members of various minority groups as well as persons suffering from physical defects, three tv networks have banned some songs and changed words in others. There's disagreement among various continuity and music clearance departments as to what might give offense, but all are on the alert to avoid adverse reaction from the public.

At NBC-TV for example, Stephen Foster's "Old Black Joe" has been

'$64,000 QUESTION' PACKAGED FOR VEGAS

"The $64,000 Question" is being submitted as a package for Las Vegas with a $50,000 weekly asking price. John Greenhut has been authorized by Louis G. Cowan to sell the deal to the only set of niteries in America that can shell out this kind of coin.

Actually, prospectus has the quiz package, currently a top-Nielsened show on CBS-TV, to operate on the format of its companion piece, "The $64,000 Challenge." A panel which includes Myrtle Powers, the baseball expert; Dr. Joyce Brothers, the boxing whiz; art connoisseur-jockey Billy Pearson, and others who have gained prominence on that show, are being submitted as participants in the travelling panel. Present plans call for audience volunteers to compete against these experts. Emcee hasn't yet been decided upon for the casino country foray.

Dailies, Not Radio-TV, The Major Offenders On Questionable Ads

Of the 19,093 ads found "questionable" in 1955, 17,829 of them originated in newspapers. Only 474 were pitched on radio and 356 on tv, with mags carrying 51. These are tallies from the newly released "Statistical Analysis of Better Business Bureau Activities for 1955," prepared by the research department of Assn. of BBB's.

Voluntary correction of "questionable" ads were obtained in all but 525 of the 19,003 cases. At last report, BBB local offices, which throughout the year surveyed several hundred thousand ads in all, referred the delinquent 2.7% of the total to the authorities. "Questionable" advertisements are listed under a general heading in the report—"Truth In Advertising."

Newspapers took the rap on bad pitches hands down, according to the report. They carried nearly 15,000 of the "questionable" merchandise ads, slightly over 1,400 of the 1,560 commercial ads, nearly 1,400 of the over 1,500 financial ads.

Paul Hartman's Persian Room Preem a Shoe's-Who of Posh Pugs

By ABEL GREEN

To paraphrase the pop song, P. 1 tabloid stories are made of stuff like this: a Persian Room premiere of Paul Hartman and his new act (with Undine Forrest and Betty Luster) and a minor lobby fracas as a result of model Carmen (Mrs. William) Miles conking customer Frank Kurka, of Drexel Hill, Pa., an ad exec with the McGraw-Hill publishing outfit, on the noggin with her not-so-dainty I. Miller.

The Miles', along with producer Hal Prince, Sharman Douglas and others were at Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's long centre table, as was also Ann (Mrs. Paul) Hartman, wife of the comedian. The Hartmans and Vanderbilt are old friends and this being the preem of his new act, the racing stable owner (who is no stranger in show biz haunts) whipped up this party.

Adman Kurka, sitting off-ringside but directly back of the Vanderbilt-Hartman table, was audibly expressing himself on the merits of the new act and it was Mrs. Miles, a rather tall and slim gal—who seemed more concerned later, in her chat with this reporter, as to "what will the children think?"—who tried to shush the vocal gent. This proving fruitless she figured a li'l trickle of water on Kurka's cranium might "cool him off."

He called the headwaiter, who professed "I'm no bouncer," and since adman Kurka was too much of a gent to strike a lady it seemingly ended there until they met again in the outer lobby through one of those illtimed events. Kurka was heading for the powderoom and the VIPs were meandering to a second floor private diningroom for the post-premiere party that Ann and Paul Hartman, along with the Plaza's managing director Eugene Voight, were hosting.

One word led to another; Miss Miles' husband, William, who also owns horses besides being in the garage and hotel business, engaged in some mild fisticuffs which would have been voted a draw hadn't Miss Miles mistaken Kurka's blood for her husband's, whereupon she started clobbering the adman with her high heel, which later necessitated several stitches by the Plaza's house physician. Mr. Miles was only mildly ruffled but did manage to lose his watch in the lobby scuffle.

The postmortems in the upstairs private party for Hartman & Co. were attended by such cross-section of wellwishers as the Plaza's sundry management personnel, visiting hoteliers Vincent Coyle (Essex House) and Ed Hastings (ex-Waldorf, now Honolulu), publicists (hotel and personal), Vinton Freedley, Phil Silvers, Polly Bergen and husband Fred Fields (MCA v.p.), Jack Carter, assorted columnists (Earl Wilson, Danton Walker, Louis Sobol), Vanderbilt and his guests, Par v.p. Jerry Pickman, and a pretty representative turnout of post-"Happy Fella" legit opening gadabouts.

The Plaza hasn't been as upset since Kay Thompson glorified "Eloise."

Toujours Palm Springs

By FRANK SCULLY

Palm Springs, May 8.

Prognosis that Las Vegas was bound to put the whammy on Palm Springs, Phoenix and other desert resorts which lacked gambling is not borne out by present trends.

Marion Davies and associates are going to demolish the old Desert Inn of the Coffman dynasty and replace it with a $4,500,000 hotel, shopping center, Vegas type restaurant-nitery, and a theatre which will handle legit roadshoes in winter and first run films in summer.

Buildings will dot the 20 of the 30 acres involved in the operations. City's prohibition of buildings higher than 30 feet seemingly is going to be ignored, as a five-story hotel is planned for the part of the property that backs against the mountains.

She bought the Desert Inn for $2,000,000. It was reported several weeks ago it was for sale and a Davies spokesman said, "Sure for $5,000,000." Since then Victor Gruen has been hired to design the project and Joseph Blitz to build it. Both are New York firms.

Original inn, built 40 years ago, with a 10G loan, closed for the season April 29. Demolition starts this summer. New owners expect to be operating by Nov., 1957.

Satchmo Returns to Brit. After 21-Year Gap; See $4.25 Top 'Troublesome'

By SYD SILVERMAN

London, May 8.

After a 21-year hiatus, Louis Armstrong and his All Stars opened at the Empress Hall last Friday (4). Show is the second increment of American musicians to tour Britain under the current exchange program. The British Freddie Randall orch is now in the States for a May 14 opening.

Armstrong is appearing here under the flag of Big Show (U.K.) Ltd., headed by Lee Gordon and Benn Reyes. This engagement marks the expansion of Gordon-Reyes into Britain from their Australian base. Armstrong has just returned from a Down Under tour prior to opening here.

Show is located at the Empress Hall, Earl's Court, an 8,000-seater arena, about a half-hour's bus ride from the West End. Scale is from $4.25 down to $1, which puts it above the top for the best West End shows, which charge from $2.80 down to about 50c for the back benches. Location and scale may cause trouble before the 10-day London engagement is finished.

Package represents an investment of approximately $250,000. Potential take for the 10 days in London (two shows per night) and

Canada & Europe On 'Wide World's' TV Global Agenda

NBC-TV's "Wide Wide World" is donning an international mantle for sure. While setting a scheme in the works for kinescoped coverage of Europe for next fall, the network this week put the finishing touches on this season's finale, "The St. Lawrence Story," a fullscale going-over of the in-progress St. Lawrence Seaway project to take up the full 90 minutes of the June 3 telecast.

Details of the St. Lawrence project, which will be telecast both by NBC-TV and the full Canadian Broadcasting Corp. network, were spelled out at a press conference in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) by board chairman Pat Weaver and CBC board of governors chairman A. D. Dunton. Show, to be produced by Herb Sussan, will cover the entire length of the Seaway, from the Atlantic to Duluth, Minn., with at least 13 camera points along the way.

European project, to be initiated with the first fall show, in October, titled "Autumn in Europe," is being handled by NBC public affairs v.p. Davidson Taylor and "WWW" exec producer Barry Wood, who plane to Europe May 20 for a conference three days later with Eurovision execs at Gardone, Italy. Programs would be shot in Europe and kinescoped on the spot to retain the sense of immediacy. Taylor and Wood will make their own 10-country tour after the Eurovision conference and combine their own ideas with those propounded by the Eurovision execs. Meeting, incidentally, was set up by Romney Wheeler, NBC London chief, and Merrill Mueller, Mediterranean news director.

Mute Music, Forte Drama For 'Eddy Duchin' Pic; Fear 'Goodman' Repeat

Chicago, May 8.

Exploitation for Col's "The Eddie Duchin Story" set for the Woods Theatre here in July will play down pic's musical elements and concentrate on selling its dramatic appeal.

Decision to plug the drama springs from disappointing b.o. registered by "The Benny Goodman Story" at the Chicago Theatre recently despite a mammoth and thorough exploitation job. Woods manager Jack Belasco and Col adpubber Bob Wiener are handling the Duchin biopic campaign.

KAYE MOBBED ON TOUR OF ISRAEL FOR UN

Lydda, Israel, May 1.

Danny Kaye left Israel this morning after a six-day tour, leaving behind him exhausted fans and a Hebrew version of Hans Christian Andersen's "Thumbalina."

Kaye, here on tour for United Nations International Children's Fund, played his last show to a happy audience of better than 3,000 last night in Tel Aviv. Police estimate at least 3,000 others jammed the area outside the ZOA House Garden there trying to get in.

During his stay disk shows on Kol Israel, state broadcasting service, spun Kaye records. Tapes of all his local performances were played back at night.

Catch-As-Catch-Cannes

By STUART SCHULBERG

Cannes, May 8.

As the Film Festival enters its third and final week, these are the sounds of the Carlton Hotel terrace, collected at random—catch-as-catch-Cannes:

752 Writers Heading for Europe

460 Musicians, 312 Actors, Also Get Passports—Record Tourist Season

Washington, May 8.

Americans are traveling overseas in record-breaking numbers this year, as reflected by passport applications at the State Department. The foreign travel bug, for business and pleasure, also shows up in increases by the various professions.

For the first three months of 1956, passports were issued to 312 actors and actresses, 460 musicians and 752 writers.

Some contrasting categories: 483 passports went to artists; 505 to barbers and beauticians; 9,194 to clerks and secretaries; 76 florists; 1,180 farmers and ranchers; 816 common (sic) laborers; 2,009 skilled laborers; 271 missionaries; 635 restaurateurs; and 194 interior decorators.

Biggest category of all is the housewife; they got 43,785 passports.

Irving Berlin Receives 'GI' Trophy From Army At Pentagon Ceremony

Washington, May 8.

Irving Berlin was honored for his efforts on behalf of soldier entertainment in two world wars when the U. S. Army dedicated a perpetual trophy in his name. The Irving Berlin Trophy, to be awarded annually to the Army command winning the All-Army Entertainment contest, was launched in a ceremony held in the Pentagon office of Secretary of the Army Wilber Brucker. Mr. and Mrs. Berlin were present.

In making the dedication, the Army's top exec said, in part, "The Irving Berlin award will always be considered a symbol of the highest achievement, made doubly meaningful by the tremendous achievements of the patriot whose name it bears."

Berlin, in expressing his appreciation for the honor, pointed out that he had produced two all-soldier shows, World War I's "Yip Yip Yaphank" and the later "This Is the Army." He stated he had found "unusual talent among the soldiers," and expressed satisfaction with the Army's efforts to "encourage entertainment."

Liberace Candles to Burn In Brit.; Pre-N.Y. Warmup

Hollywood, May 8.

London impresario Wilfrid Van Wyck planed back to England after setting a tour for Liberace opening in Festival Hall Oct. 1. He will play the provinces two weeks then Albert Hall Oct. 15-17. Will probably also hit Amsterdam and Paris before returning to the U.S. for skedded November Broadway bow of "Come as You Were."

Liberace layout hit all-time Las Vegas record at late show Saturday (5) with 925 customers at the Riviera.

Glenn Miller's Posthumous Company Set Up in N.Y.

Glenn Miller Productions has been incorporated in New York with David Mackay, Gotham attorney who represents the Miller estate, as one of the directors.

Company is to engage in various activities linked with the career of the late batoner, including the previously reported formation of a Glenn Miller orchestra under the direction of Ray McKinley.

NO BEAR-HUGS, PLEASE

Too 'Hearty' Congratulations Dangerous to Garson Kanin

Even for a Pulitizer Prize, legit-film director Garson Kanin disapproves of excess enthusiasm. He figures one cracked rib is enough, even for a play as successful as "Diary of Anne Frank."

Several weeks ago, when news was received in the office of producer Kermit Bloomgarden that the Albert Hackett-Frances Goodrich dramatization had won the N. Y. Drama Critics Circle Award as the best play of the current Broadway season, there was an impromptu celebration. During the uproar, press agent James Proctor, who's as muscular as he is enthusiastic, grabbed the smaller, slighter Kanin in a bearlike hug.

The stager let out a howl of pain and finally managed to pry himself loose. Even before the doctor informed him that the embrace had cracked one of his ribs, Kanin resolved to do his conversing with Proctor by telephone thereafter.

Shortly after the news last Monday (7) that "Diary" had copped the Pulitzer nod, Kanin arrived at Bloomgarden's office. Hearing another celebration in progress, he poked his head in the door to be sure Proctor wasn't present. Then, entering the room, he announced, "I'll be glad to kiss any girl in the room, but don't anyone try to hug me."

WARN OF QUICK-GAIN SQUEEZES

THE FUTURE—UP FOR GRABS

Uneasiness and transitory psychology of the picture business (circa May 1956) is history-in-the-making. Fluctuation of top echelon control is traceable to the ever surging influences and impact of the electronics, plus the maturing years and nerves of some of the men.

As televised sound continues it strides towards the ultimate of a full-blown spectrum audience, the behind-scenes changes and negotiations for control of or by the pioneers, and deals by the seething electronics have seen some changes made or in the making. Interlarded are the individual deals by packagers with an eye to that capital gain.

At random, here's how it shapes up: Paramount's Don Hartman has exited as production topper to become an independent on the same lot. Darryl F. Zanuck also has an eye to indie production via his own 20th, and Buddy Adler is the successor but with prexy Spyros Skouras even more directly in control than heretofore. RKO is a completely new deal with Howard Hughes out, Tom O'Neil and Dan O'Shea in, and a revitalized production program (for theatres, but of course also with an eye to video) under Bill Dozier. Warners appears to be in a mood to dicker, the latest deal involving Si Fabian (Stanley Warner Theatres) (Harry M. Kalmine is behind the scenes on this one), but with Jack Warner in studio control, aided by a strong key production executive. Republic is always in the news of being "negotiated for"—MCA, which packages quite a few vidpixers, utilizing Rep studio facilities being among those mentioned. RCA meantime has its eye on its own studio facilities, both for television and feature production, and Capitol Records (parented by the British-electronics combine, Electric & Musical Industries, has also had its eye on some major film production company for expansion.).

Arthur M. Loew is admittedly an unwilling groom at the helm of Metro, but still the blue chip and bellwether of the industry; Columbia's Harry Cohn and Jerry Wald have been openly feuding; UA has built itself a bonanza as the distribution outlet for the indies; and Universal alone seems devoid of rumors, intrigues, scuttlebutt and yatata about its future—it's just going along staying in the black.

This is a blueprint for the future, and the pendulum can swing any way. Zanuck, for example, might find himself back in a rut as head-man of 20th which he so ably manned for years and in which he's the largest stockholder. Loew-Metro divorcement (the last of the legal schisms) may see Arthur Loew even more vigorously helming the production-distribution end of it as Joe Vogel takes command of the Loew Theatres, probably with diversification in other directions. It's no secret that what Leonard H. Goldenson did with United Paramount Theatres, since its merger with American Broadcasting Co., may set a pattern for Vogel, Leopold Friedman & Co. From the Schenck Bros.' Palisades Amusement Park came the segue into Loew's, and as the cycle completes itself the opposition Paramount Theatres is back in the amusement park business—as partner with Walt Disney and Western Lithograph Co. in the fabulous Disneyland in Anaheim, Cal.

More and more it gets harder 'n' harder to tell the plays without your program—you're holding it right now. Or as the man said—the more things change etc., etc. Abel.

IS FILM VISION SHORT-TERMED?

Entire film industry would be dealt a "devastating blow" if outside investment groups manage to gain control of a few of the larger companies and liquidate assets for quick gains. That's the observation of Thomas J. Holt, stock analyst for Arnold Bernhard & Co., Wall Street investment advisory outfit.

Holt notes that Loew's, Paramount and 20th-Fox, to name three, are priced well below book value on the New York Stock Exchange. The quotations fail to reflect the multi-million dollar film libraries, studio real estate, foreign investments, gas and oil under the 20th lot and Par's substantial interest in electronics.

It stands to reason, Holt underlines, that financiers taking control of any of these corporations could draw strong profits by a program of "spin offs."

"But," the analyst goes on, "the surviving studios, stripped of their properties, financial resources and Hollywood-minded managements as well, would be hard-pressed to produce the elaborate films that have come to be associated with Hollywood. Since it has become evident that Hollywood's ability to compete successfully with television depends largely upon an abundance of such pictures, the lack of supply from these companies would discourage theatre attendance and gradually force many theatres to close.

"With fewer outlets available smaller film producers would probably see their revenues contract and would therefore have to divert

Metro Asks Ed Sullivan — Visit 'Raintree County'

Hollywood, May 8.

Metro has pitched the idea of Ed Sullivan doing special footage of its "Raintree County" film which begins shooting next week in Dixie. If television emcee okays, Metro will send an extra camera crew east to handle.

Sullivan flew to Tokyo recently, missing one Sunday air show to do so. This was in connection with Metro location in Japan for "Teahouse of the August Moon," the Vern Schneider novel-John Patrick play now filming.

Events Move Fast at Warners: Chesler Buy Chills, Brothers 'Invite' Si Fabian Takeover

By GENE ARNEEL

S. H. (Si) Fabian, president of Fabian Enterprises, Stanley Warner and S-W Cinerama Corp., now has the inside track on control of Warner Bros. Pictures. Lou Chesler is out.

Impending deal involving Fabian is marked by reticence on the part of most principals and the inner-sanctum intrigue that's synonomous with any major stock transaction. Same situation obtained last week when VARIETY broke the story on Chesler and his Canadian associates nearing control of the corporation. This brought a quick statement from Jack Warner that negotiations with Chesler were not "now" going on. The present tense occasioned same puzzlement. That a Chesler buy-out was actually close at hand since has been confirmed by many persons in a position to know.

Harry Warner, WB president, invited Fabian, an old friend, to put in a bid. The Warner freres' position was simply that they feared Chesler would liquidate the property that they spent a lifetime in building whereas Fabian would have a revitalizing influence on the company.

Reports are that Fabian, if the deal goes through, would buy a major part of the 25% stock interest held by Harry, Jack and Maj. Albert Warner at $27.50 per share. This will give him voting control. The three Warners will continue on the board of directors but, it's apparent, Harry and Maj. Albert will bow out entirely in the not too distant future. Jack Warner would presumably continue as head of production.

That's the deal in broad terms. The complexities beneath the surface are unique for the picture business, and, perhaps, insurmountable. Harry Kalmine, general manager of Stanley Warner, is said to be at work on the details along with a full complement of lawyers, all fronting for Fabian.

Major obstacle is the position of the Department of Justice, which polices the court judgments in the industry antitrust suit. Strictly tabu is any joint interest in a major film company and a one-time affiliated circuit, such as Warners and S-W.

Importantly, Fabian is said to be willing to divest himself of all theatre holdings as a means of removing the roadblocks, and had his attorneys in Washington over the past week for huddles with Justice to ascertain the specific requirements.

Semenenko The Key

Money man behind the projected S. H. Fabian buyout of Warner Bros. control is Serge Semenenko, senior v.p. of the First National Bank of Boston. Bank would put up the major capital for the purchase.

In the event that Fabian fails to obtain the necessary legal clearances to move in on WB, it's reported that First of Boston would still go along with the stock acquisition, with associate banks already lined up to participate for investment purposes.

Re Fabian, one of the factors being considered by the Department of Justice is the attitude of independent exhibitors, including Allied States, who might raise objections.

Contributing to the difficulty is the fact that Fabian Enterprises, as owner of Fabian Theatres and holder of control of S-W and Cinerama, is family-owned, having been bequeathed by Fabian's father. Second in command is Sam Rosen, Fabian's brother-in-law, who's in line to take over the overall theatre operation in the event Fabian is permitted to acquire WB. Remaining to be seen is whether Justice will allow Fabian to segue into production-distribution so long as members of his family retain their equity in theatres.

Recent history reflects the closeness between Fabian and the War-

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Still Sluggish; 'Suit' Back in First, 'Swan' 2d, 'Holiday' 3d, 'Oklahoma' 4th, 'Alex' 5th

More of same springlike weather plus some not-so-strong product is cutting into grosses around the country currently. Some of fresh fare coming out for distribution is not making many exhibitors very happy this round. However, a lineup of more potent pix and adjustment to summer season is counted on to bring better takings shortly.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) is regaining the No. 1 spot by dint of some sustained strength. It was second a week ago. "The Swan" (M-G), which was so strong last session, is dipping to second position, as the Grace Kelly starrer has failed to hold up too strongly in second and third weeks.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indic), fourth last stanza, is landing third money. "Oklahoma" (Magna) is finishing fourth as against fifth spot a week ago.

"Alexander the Great" (UA) is pushing into prominence again as a result of a flock of fresh bookings, to wind up fifth. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) is capturing sixth slot.

"Serenade" (WB) is climbing up from far back in the pack to cop seventh place. "Harder They Fall" (Col) is taking eighth spot. "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) is finishing ninth. "Birds and Bees" (Par), out for first time to any extent, is finishing 10th.

"Hilda Crane" (20th), a newcomer; "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Ladykillers" (Cont) are the runner-up pix in that sequence.

"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) promises to be heard from considerably in the future judging from the sock coin it is collecting in L.A. opening week. "Bold and Brave" (RKO), also new, is oke in Frisco and slow in L.A. "Slightly Scarlet," from same company, mild in Buffalo, is drab in Pitt and Indianapolis.

"Gaby" (M-G), another newcomer, shapes fast in K.C. and Seattle but is slow in L.A. and fair in Denver. "Maverick Queen" (Rep) is fairish in Denver. "Goodbye My Lady" (WB), also a fresh entry, is rated good in Louisville.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) continues smash to terrfic in N.Y., Pitt and Philly. "Godzilla" (Indie), which is holding nicely in second round in N.Y., preemed great in Boston. "Doctor at Sea" (Rep) is collecting some nice coin in arty houses currently.

"Rock Around Clock" (Col), good in Buffalo, is rated solid in Louisville. "Threshold of Space" (20th) is okay in Balto. "Spoilers" (U) looms smooth in Cincy.

"World Without End" (AA) shapes over average in Detroit. "Never Say Goodbye" (U), good in Providence and K.C., is fair in Chi.

Exec Salaries Still 'Modest' At Paramount

Paramount is maintaining its reputation as the company that provides its executive with the most modest payoff of any major operation. Topping the list in remuneration are Y. Frank Freeman, studio v.p., with $130,000 and Barney Balaban, president, with $124,800, both including expense allowances.

At other film companies studio toppers and chief execs, with the possible exception of the until recently problem-laden RKO, draw closer to $200,000.

Par prexy statement mailed to stockholders this week, in advance of the corporation's annual meeting June 5, shows these other salary checks: Adolph Zukor, board chairman, $78,000; Paul Raibourn, director-v.p., $57,750, and George Weltner, director-v.p. and global sales chief, $65,000. No other member of the parent company's board takes in more than $30,000.

Balaban, with 13,100 shares, holds the largest amount of Par stock among the directors. Freeman, is next, with 3,100 shares.

'Insider' Stock Reports; Harry Warner Bought 6,800 Shares in March

Washington, May 8.

A purchase of 6,800 shares of WB common was made in March by Harry Warner, SEC discloses in its latest monthly report of "insider transactions." This gave Harry Warner a total of 105,550 shares, with an extra 13,700 in a trust account.

Arthur M. Loew purchased 33,000 additional shares of Loew's, Inc. common, to give himself a total of 34,000. Charles Moskowitz bought 15,000; he now owns 20,500 shares of Loew's common. Sidney M. Markley added 400 AB-PT common, to up his holdings to 500 shares.

Jacob Starr, of Trans-Lux Corp., bought 12,600 shares of the circuit's common. He owns 43,600. Harry Brandt added 400 shares to one of his trust accounts.

Samuel A. Alesker told the Commission that, with recent purchases, he has 6,230 shares of ABC Vending Corp. George N. Blatchford purchased his first 2,000 shares of Allied Artists common. Clarence H. Hopper acquired 100 shares of CBS class B stock. L. Buchner said he now owns 800 shares of Decca records.

No Manhattan Glad Hand for Czech; Film Buyer Especially Keen on 'Marty'

A disappointed Czech film rep was cooling his heels in Manhattan last week, waiting for the companies to decide whether they'd want to sell him some of their pictures.

Richard Falbr, deputy director of the foreign department of the Czech State Film, said he had come to purchase "about a dozen" U.S. features "because our people are very anxious to see American films again."

Falbr also disclosed that the Czech Government had invited the American industry to take part in the Carlsbad (CSR) film festival this year, which runs from July 12-31. The Czechs indicated they're particularly anxious to get "Marty," which, according to Falbr, would be "a tremendous hit" with Czech audiences. The Motion Picture Export Assn. has turned down the Carlsbad festival invite. There is a possibility, however, that with State Dept. prodding, an American film may be entered. It might be "Marty.")

While Falbr may be in a position to purchase Hollywood features from indies or those who've bought up the negative rights to the RKO and Warner Bros. pix (i.e. Matty Fox and Eliot Hyman) the Czech, rep indicated that, at the moment he wasn't getting anywhere with American distribs.

Wistful

"I came here to see what new contracts we could make, looking to the acquisition of film," Falbr stated. "I hope that the U.S. will realize that it isn't a good policy to sell films to some areas but not to others."

He stressed that the Czechs had "never played any film for which they did not pay." U.S. pix were shown in Russia without license. The Soviets contending that the prints were "war booty" found in Berlin, though lately Bolshevki have maintained that the features would be withdrawn from exhibition and returned to their American owners.

Falbr said he was "studing" the situation regarding the sale of American films to the satellites, but hadn't as yet conacted the MPEA, which is the key to his problem. Czechoslovakia is one of the area franchised to the MPEA. It's the present policy of MPEA members not to deal with any of the Iron Curtain nations, including Russia. However, there's been a softening up in recent months and the impression is that a sale would be consummated if decent terms were forthcoming.

The Czech rep said he couldn't give an exact dollar amount his country was prepared to spend on American films, but emhasized that whatever the sale, it would have to be on a flat—not a percentage—basis.

Czechoslovakia at one time was one of the most active of the MPEA territories. Last U.S. film there played off in 1952, when the local MPEA office was closed down. Falbr said British, French and Italo pix were being shown in his country, but added that the prices for them were low.

Czech producion now turns out about 20 films a year, Falbr reported. He said a good percentage of these were mere entertainment pictures with no propaganda content. He brought with him a screen version of the Smetana opera, "Dalibor."

He said he was anxious to purchase one or two widescreen pix for which the Czech state monopoly would install proper screens and projection equipment in key cities.

U. S. Gives Blessing

Washington, May 8.

The U.S. State Dept. made it plain today (Tues.) that it had no objections to the export of American films to Russia and the satellites.

Commenting on Mike Todd's plan to show "Around the World in 80 Days" in Moscow—or at least to preem the pic there, a State Dept. spokesman said:

"For some time, the Department has felt there is no reason why U.S. motion pictures should not be shown on the other side of the Iron Curtain." Statement takes on added significance in the light of various attempts by the Soviets and other Communist nations to obtain Hollywood product.

72 From 55 Countries At Universal Studio; World-Angled Stories

Hollywood, May 8.

Full potential for American motion pictures in the free markets of the world has not yet been fully reached, Universal prexy Milton R. Rackmil told delegates to the company's first global sales conference to be held at the studio.

Rackmil predicted today (Tues.) that the industry's foreign business would expand in relationship to the improvement of living standards throughout the world. "There is nothing more certain than that our industry will share in the additional money available for recreation and relaxation as the countries of the free world continue to prosper," he declared.

Rackmil stated that U is carefully analyzing the subject matter of all its pictures "to make certain that they all have international appeal because we have found that tastes vary but slightly where good entertainment is concerned."

Delegates, numbering 72 from 55 countries, were greeted yesterday (Mon.) on the opening of the five-day session by Alfred E. Daff, U exec v.p. and prexy of the company's foreign subsidiary, Universal International Films. Daff said the Hollywood meet was a culmination of his desire for many years to have the whole foreign sales organization meet in Hollywood so they could absorb the atmosphere and appreciate the magnitude of the company's operations. Other addresses of welcome were delivered by studio chief Edward Muhl, board chairman Nate J. Blumberg, foreign sales chief Americo Aboaf, and domestic sales v.p. Charles J. Feldman.

No-Nod Todd

Washington, May 8.

The U.S. State Department said today (Tues.) that it hadn't been consulted by Mike Todd on his coproduction plans with the Russians, but that there was no law to prevent any American producer from making any deal he wishes with the Soviets.

"Each coproduction venture will be taken upon its own merits by the Department," a spokesman said. "If an American producer comes in to discuss his plans, we'll be glad to go over the pros and cons with him."

Todd was in to see the Department last month, but didn't bring up the coproduction angle.

Film Eyebrows Up At Todd's 5-Film Deal in Soviet

Mixture of awe and amusement characterized N. Y. film industry execs' reaction this week to the reported Mike Todd deal to coproduce five films with the Russians.

While many commented on the promotional potential of such pix, others thought that—in the present supercritical climate—Todd was going way out in a limb. Few actually believe that he'll make "War and Peace" in the light of the competish from Paramount which has its Audrey Hepburn version all finished.

At the Motion Picture Export Assn. it was said that Todd at no point consulted the association. Noted with interest, however, was his statement in Moscow that "Around the World in 80 Days" would preem in Moscow Nov. 15 along with other capitals.

Read into this was the implication that Todd had made a distribution deal with the Soviets for the Todd-AO production, the first under his own banner. If this is so, this will be the first new American picture to go behind the Iron Curtain in quite a few years. Specifically, it's the first to get into Russia since the war. American industry at the moment has a policy of not making deals with the Russians or the Soviet-dominated nations.

Moscow, May 6.

Details of Mike Todd's five-picture co-production deal with the Russians were made known here today (6). Included possibly—but not yet definitely—is another version of Tolstoy's "War and Peace"

Story Means More Than Stars

[Says Sam Goldwyn]

Hollywood, May 8.

The play is still the thing with Samuel Goldwyn, who has already shown his faith in the theory by anteing up $1,000,000 in advance for the purchase of "Guys and Dolls" against 10% of the gross. Time, he said, has only strengthened his belief that story is more important than star and "I'd pay a million dollars for any property if I like it."

Story, Goldwyn believes, is the foundation of a film. "Color is good if it suits the subject, but the public doesn't go to see color they go to see subject matter. Who's in a picture is secondary. A big cast means nothing if the film hasn't a solid foundation."

Goldwyn's next—in black-and-white—goes early next year "If I can whip the property I'm preparing."

Blast Hollywood 'Stereotyping'

Narrow Strip Documentarians Told Colony Destroys Public Taste for 'Realism'

Chicago, May 8.

Out of a field of hundreds of 16mm. non-theatrical films 22 received "Golden Reel" awards at the conclusion of the third annual American Film Assembly here. Second place films got "Silver Reels."

Three CBS television documentaries on 16mm. film were among the "Golden Reel" winners. Industrial organizations with award-winning entries included: Zenith Radio Corp., E. I. Du Pont de Nemours, Monsanto Chemical Co., International Harvester, and Johnson & Johnson.

Producer-director George Stoney of Potomac Film Producers Inc., lambasted "Hollywood stereotypes" for having "killed the American public's taste for realism in films." CBS public affairs director Irving Gitlin forecast a greater public acceptance of the documentary film through television.

Among the 22 Golden Reel winners were the Academy Award-winning "The Face of Lincoln," produced by the U. of Southern California, and "Third Avenue El," an Academy Award nominee. The three CBS television films awarded Golden Reels were "The Family of Man," from the "Adventure" series, "The Way of the Navaho," from the same series, and "The Emancipation Proclamation," originally appearing on "You Are There."

NEGRO ACTORS GET PIX BREAKS

Inside Stuff—Pictures

"Copters and Cows," an 18-minute short subject was given premiere recently at Plaza Theatre in Vernon, Texas. Shot at nearby Waggoner ranch it promotes helicopters usefulness around a ranch.

Mark Goodson and William Todson should soon join the trek from television to pictures. The tv production team has a deal set to independently make three features for Columbia release and with Col to finance. One of the three properties will be based on "The Web," adventure series produced by G-T for distribution by Screen Gems, a Col subsidiary. Plan is to start rolling with the feature production program before the end of this year.

Warner Bros.' sales of its pre-1948 backlog of pictures to Lou Chesler has yet to be consummated. But this doesn't mean the deal is off. As part of the arrangement by which Chesler would acquire the library at a price of $21,000,000, a contingency angle was added involving the taxation on the proceeds. WB insisted that the money accruing to it must be classified as capital gains by the Treasury Department. And the latter hasn't handed down its ruling yet.

Sharply critical of newspaper accounts of a recent Washington session of the executive council of the merged AFL-CIO, Richard F. Walsh, president of the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employees, declared emphatically that the initial meetings of the council demonstrated clearly "that labor leaders of America can function as a unit in peace and harmony." Walsh made these remarks over the weekend at a dinner in the St. George Hotel, Brooklyn, celebrating his election to the council.

Louis A. Novins, Paramount corporate secretary, has been given an option to purchase 12,500 shares of International Telemeter Corp., which is controlled by Par, at $3 per share. There is no trading of the issue but the price is represented as the "fair market value." Novins is called upon to exercise the option at any time prior to June 23, 1960. In accepting the deal, the attorney has agreed to take on executive responsibilities with Telemeter for at least one year in addition to his regular duties at Par.

As a result of an undisclosed "gimmick" dreamed up by F. Hugh Herbert, the Production Code has given complete okay to the film version of "Little Hut."

Herbert and Mark Robson will shoot independently in Europe later this year with Ava Gardner, Stewart Granger and David Niven. Metro is financing.

Highly censorable plot of woman stranded on desert island with husband and lover has been reworked enough to get code okay but Herbert contends no comedy values lost.

Brazilian government is eager to cooperate with American film companies and Hollywood is missing a good bet in not utilizing the colorful Amazon and Brazilian jungles as backgrounds according to Polish producer Zygmunt Sulistrowski. He has spent five years in Brazil, recently supervising filming of Jack M. Warner's "Amazon Trader" telepic and is now en route to London to discuss a South American feature with J. Arthur Rank. Producer's own Filmes Interacionais do Brasil has Brazilian financial backing and plans co-production deals with American and European producers.

Dexter Masters, whose novel about the Los Alamos stockpile, "The Accident," was under option for some four months to David O. Selznick, has now tackled a Broadway stage version of the book. Masters spent all last summer on the Coast working with Selznick, who was ultimately touted off the theme by Metro officials who considered it too offbeat for Selznick's long-postponed return to the ranks of producers. Now back in Manhattan, Masters has secured tentative backing for the as-yet-uncompleted play from Rogers Stevens and Robert Whitehead. Masters is a nephew of the late great Illinois bard Edgar Lee Masters.

Allied Artists is out to nab conventional first-run playing time for "Crime in the Streets" rather than seeking extended runs in off-Main Stem locations such as United Artists did with "Marty" in the early phase of its release. The two are similar, "Crime," like "Marty," having originated as a television airer and being of limited production scope as a feature. Also, it's short on star name power.

According to Morey R. Goldstein, AA's v.p.-general sales manager, "Crime" is set to open at 125 showcase outlets following the preem later this month at New York's Victoria Theatre. Reginald Rose did the script from his own original for producer Vincent Fennelly.

Cinerama, anxious to record with its unique three-strip process unusual events throughout the world, is now prepared to whisk a camera crew in any direction for filming activities. For example, last week Cinerama's three-lensed, wide angle camera, under the direction of producer Lowell Thomas, was in Katmandu, Nepal to film the coronation of King Mahendra. It will be one of the episodes in Thomas' new Cinerama adventure, as yet untitled.

Another Cinerama camera crew was present Monday (7) to record the latest United States test of a hydrogen bomb in the South Pacific area. This sequence will be used in the "The Eighth Day," the full-length film dealing with atomic energy which Cinerama Inc.'s Hazard Reeves has scheduled for production.

More Dope Addiction Grief A-Comin'

Mezz Mezzrow Biopic May be a Seal-Stretcher Case —He Wrote Frankly of Stuff

Report that the Sam Katz-Joe Pasternak production combo has plans for an adaptation of "Really the Blues," Milton (Mezz) Mezzrow autobiography, set off new concern about the Production Code's edict against drug addiction on the screen and timing of the expected lifting of that ban. Special committee at work on possible Code changes has its first meeting set for next Tuesday (15) in New York.

Mezzrow, a jazz clarinetist, was vivid and frank in writing of his own career, including much spotlighting of his battle with marijuana habit and sale of illicit dope. To what extent Katz and Pasternak will stay with the original remains to be seen, of course.

SOME MAJOR AND PRESTIGE ROLES

By FRED HIFT

Negro performers are getting a better break in Hollywood these days.

Improvement, which has come about gradually, is reflected primarily via juicier parts in the big features and an attempt to make the Negro a natural part of the American scene as it appears on the screen.

Big Negro complaint in the past has been that the colored people in films had been "type-cast" with ordinary representation primarily in menial tasks, such as household help, elevator operators, etc. Exception, of course, was the cycle of films dealing with race discrimination.

In a number of recent and upcoming features, Negroes are assigned roles of individual importance that contribute to the overall impact of the story. Such is the case in "Man in the Gray Flannel Suit," in which a Negro sergeant has a brief but highly sympathetic part.

Also, in Metro's "Trial," one of the key characters is a Negro judge, played by Juano Hernandez with telling dignity. His reply, when accused of possibly prejudice in a case involving discrimination against a Mexican, is one of the highspots of the picture.

Again, in the now-shooting "A Man Is 10 Feet Tall," Sidney Poitier portrays a Negro boy whose courage and cheerfulness in the face of constant harassment by a prejudiced white man offers many high spots. Same pic, taken from the Arthur Alan Aurthur teleplay, introes a Negro family and keeps relationship between Poitier and his white friend on a level on which the question of race becomes almost unimportant.

According to Frederick O'Neal of the Coordinating Council for Negro Performers, Hollywood's reluctance to make the Negro a part of American life in pictures is gradually dwindling, not only in films but also in television. However, O'Neal still has his reservations. "I saw 'My Fair Lady' recently," he said. "I can't see why, in the ballroom sequence, they couldn't have included some potentates from the dark countries."

O'Neal said his organization was gauging the improvement not so much in terms of actual Negro employment, but more via the types of roles assigned to colored performers. "It's a long and uphill fight to make showbusiness recognize the important role of the Negro in American life, but we are definitely moving in the right direction," he noted.

In the question of Negro casting, Hollywood is somewhat caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. On the one hand, it has the American South to think about, where resistance against integration is high again. On the other hand, there is the big and growing Negro audience, which enjoys identification if it's not done too obviously.

"Carmen Jones," for instance, with an all-Negro cast, was a moderate success, even in the Negro theatres down South.

Since the Presidential orders decreeing integration in the armed forces, films have made it a point to feature colored and white men fighting and training together. In "Away All Boats," coming from Universal, a member of the gun crew is colored, and "Steel Helmet" gave prominence to a Negro.

Also, in U's "Battle Hymn" a Negro lieutenant in the Air Corps has a prominent featured role, and Columbia's "Flight" features a Negro air cadet. In the upcoming "Congo Crossing" (U) Rex Ingram has an important part as the doctor, and Negro players will have top assignments in the projected "Raintree County," due from Metro. Alan Ladd in "Santiago," story of rum running during a Cuban revolution, will employ a Negro actor as first mate on his boat.

"The Harder They Fall" had a Negro actor featured and so did "Blackboard Jungle." All these in addition, of course, to musicals, such as "The Benny Goodman Story," "High Society," etc., of which Negro musicians are traditionally a part.

There was a time when producers, possibly to steer clear of trouble, would shoot street and subway scenes showing only white people. Today, a definite effort is being made to give more equitable representation to Negroes, and they are shown in reasonable proportion in crowd scenes and the like.

Cannes Quip: 'Cry Tomorrow' In CinemaScotch Black & White; Quality of Entries Very Uneven

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 8.

This year's Cannes Film Festival ends tomorrow (Thurs.) which means the jury is out at today's cable time. The six prizes to be awarded are expected to be bestowed among entries of Hollywood, Russia, Italy, France and possibly Mexico, Hungary and Japan.

At the moment it is possible to say that Cannes prestige is far greater than its chief rival, the Venice Film Festival, which meets annually in August and has of recent years been subject to Italianate jockeying and frequent change of ground rules. The 1956 setup has already been subject to much criticism from the States on the limitation to 12 features, all to be picked by the Italians.

Substandard stuff foisted on the festival proved depressing. An Indian pic "Moral Heritage" was too banal and sectional. The Belgian "Les Mouettes Meurent Aux Ports" (Seagulls Die In Port) and the Roumanian "L'Affair Protar" made a lacklustre package.

Things picked up a bit with an honest Czechoslovakian filmed opera "Dalibor" of Smetana. Well directed and fusing film and opera into a palatable mixture this one might be worth a U. S. looksee in the arties. The French documentary "Le Monde Du Silence" lifted things though it explored the ocean floors. Extremely poetic scenes and excellent lensing and editing made a fine audience film and one that was well received. Mediocre Brazilian pic "Bahia" was too obvious and amateurish to keep an international audience in its seats, especially in evening dress.

No Tracy, Cast Himself

Italy contributed an honest if plodding film in "Il Ferroviere" (The Railroad Man) about the life of worker and his daily family and labor troubles. Though competently acted and directed it lacked the fervor and observation to give it depth. This was the film for which director Pietro Germi tried to get Spencer Tracy for and finally wound up playing the role himself.

With "La Sangsue" (The Leech) Egypt showed great technical strides but the melodramatic story rarely got the understanding and character development it called for. Austria delivered a color opus on the last year of the life of "Mozart." Restrained and well mounted it had assets in (a) the music and (be) the intelligent performance of Oskar Werner. But its leisurely and sentimental treatment make this dubious exportability to America. Swedish film "Sommernatens Leende" (Smiles of a Summer's Night) emerged an offbeat comedy of sex and manners that made a dent in the fest crowds. Expert direction gave this costume tale of a group of ill-assorted couples and their shakeup a taking aspect, but it lacked the light touch of superior satire.

French Don't Get AA

Three U. S. features were lumped together in a matter of three days with Metro's "I'll Cry Tomorrow" starting it off. Film was well received but most of the appeal and accolades went to Miss Hayward and she may be in line for the top thesp prize. French do not quite understand American neurotic drinking since they have tippling from an early age. Alcoholics Anonymous and the reference to the "This Is Your Life" video show also puzzled them here. However it went over on its dramatic aspects and later gags had one scribe referring to film as in CinemaScotch and Black and White.

"The Harder They Fall" (Col), in the nervous presence of director Mark Robson and actor Rod Steiger, got a good sendoff and also seems a contender come prizetime. Its harsh, relentless look at the boxing racket made a dramatic dent here. Alfred Hitchcock's "The Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) made the bright entertainment.

Russians presented a weak second entry in "Poem Pedogogique," lamely treated story of the creation of juvenile homes for displaced and vagrant youth. Honest but undramatic this will soon disappear from jury minds. The long awaited H. G. Clouzot full length pic on the painter Picasso with "Le Mystere Picasso" drew a top crowd with fine acclaim for this unusual study of genius at work.

Hitler Horror Stuff

The afternoon showing of the Gallic concentration camp short "Brouillard" got a big turnout and this sombre retelling of the infamous horrors, via documents and old footage tied in with color shots of the present weekly camp sites, makes for a "lest we forget" pic and is handled with a tact and intelligence.

Meanwhile Air France disgorged large contingents of world personalities. From the States came Kim Novak, Susan Hayward, Ginger Rogers, Danny Kaye (who received an Academic decoration for his UNICEF work while here), Gloria Grahame, Francis Lederer, Rod Stegier, Daniel Gelin, Bella Darvi and Mark Robson. Foreign stars included Oskar Werner from Austria. Britain sent Diana Dors, Muriel Pavlow, Belinda Lee, Maureen Swanson, Susan Beaumont, Julia Arnall, Peter Finch, Donald Sinden, John Gregson and Tony Wright.

Darryl Zanuck had some trouble when he did not have tickets for a showing and made a slight scene before being given his tabs. Typical organizational oversight.

Walter Reade Jr. is interested in the Italo pic "Railroad Man" and Richard Davis in the Swedish pic "Summer" and the underwater documentary "Silence."

'Oedipus Rex' Completed But Closeups Come Later; Canada's Bid for Glory

Twelve-day shooting schedule was completed over the past week on "Oedipus Rex," Sophocles tragedy produced under the banner of the Stratford Ontario Festival with Tyrone Guthrie as director. Aim is to give the Canadian picture business added stature, similarly as the Stratford Festival has elevated the Canadian theatre over the past several years.

Lensed in Toronto, "Oedipus" marks the first film undertaking by Guthrie, who worked with producer Leonard Kipnis. Property was picturized largely as it was presented on stage by the Festival and with the same cast, including Douglas Campbell, Eleanor Stuart, Robert Goodier, Donald Davis, Eric House, Tony van Bridge, Douglas Rain, William Hutt, Naomi Cameron, Barbara Franklin and Gertrude Tyas. Eastman color was used.

Unique angle is that about 90% of "Odeipus" was filmed in sequence. Closeups are to be added in the processing.

No word yet on marketing plans.

Bhowani Junction
(COLOR-C'SCOPE)

Adventure yarn with serious overtones played against realistic Pakistan setting. Action plus Ava Gardner and Stewart Granger make for solid b.o. prospects.

Metro release of Pandro S. Berman production. Stars Ava Gardner, Stewart Granger. Directed by George Cukor. Screenplay, Sonya Levien and Ivan Moffat from novel by John Masters; camera (Eastman color), F. A. Young; editors, Frank Clarke, George Boemler; music supervision, Miklos Rozsa. Previewed in New York April 25, '56. Running time, 110 MINS.

Lt. Graham McDaniel ..... Lionel Jeffries
Ted Dunphy ..... Alan Tilvern

A lot has been said on the pros and cons of Hollywood's passion for taking its widescreen cameras to the four corners of the world in search of atmosphere. To make "Bhowani Junction," based on the John Masters novel, Metro went to Pakistan to shoot a film about India. The journey has paid rich dividends, for the sense of realism in the film is one of the best things about it.

"Bhowani Junction," starring Ava Gardner as an Anglo-Indian, and Stewart Granger as a British colonel who falls in love with her, is a horse of many colors, not the least of which is the very excellent Eastman color which reproduces the turbulent backgrounds with vivid clarity and impact. Picture goes off in quite a few directions, ranging from romance and action to a half-hearted attempt to explain the Indians and a more serious effort to dramatize the social twilight into which the British withdrawal from India tossed a small group of people who were of mixed Indian and British blood.

One may quarrel in which of these areas director George Cukor and his performers are most at home, or which will most appeal to unsophisticated American audiences. There's little doubt, however, that—with the beauteous Miss Gardner parading in a lush native and European costumes, and undergoing a variety of treatments ranging from kissing to attempted rape to being gagged and bound by the Communist villain-"Bhowani Junction" will have its following. It's uneven in pace, and at times overly melodramatic where sensitivity might be called for, but it's full of exploitable angles.

Story has Miss Gardner as the half-caste returning home to an India seething with discontent and boiling with riots prior to the departure of the British. At Bhowani Junction, a railroad center, she meets Granger who's been sent to command a security detail to guard the rail line against Communist saboteurs. Miss Gardner thinks she loves Bill Travers, the local rail superintendent, also an Anglo-Indian. She's soon torn between being European and Indian, kills a British lieutenant who's trying to rape her and is temporarily saved by the Communist boss, Peter Illing. She finds that being Indian gives her no peace-of-mind and, after a series of adventures, including an exciting chase, decides to be no more than herself. There's a romantic ending.

Scripters Sonya Levien and Ivan Moffat bit off a big piece when they tackled "Bhowani Junction." In some respects, they succeeded very well. In others, partly due to Miss Gardner's rhetorical limitations, they failed. Some of the dialog sounds more like a textbook on India and lacks conviction. Also, the character of the girl never emerges quite clearly, even though her predicament of being caught between two races is given a graphic illustration. Story, told in one long flashback, is narrated by Granger.

Director Cukor, in staging his crowd scenes, achieved some magnificent effects and F. A. Young's lensing is firstrate. The milling, sweating, shouting crowds, egged on by Red agents, are almost frighteningly real and the CinemaScope screen comes alive with an abundance of movement. Scene involving the train wreck is a wow and so is the half-humorous episode when the Indian Congress leader and his followers form human obstacles on the rails and are moved by Granger via a cruel device.

Miss Gardner proves once again that she's one of the screen's most attractive stars. While she's not always lensed flatteringly, she looks stunning most of the time, particularly in her Indian costumes. (And since when do Indian women run around in bare midriffs?). Miss Gardner's thesping, particularly in the emotional scenes, isn't always up to par, but she gets by with her looks.

Granger cuts a manly and restrained figure as the Britisher. Travers as the Anglo-Indian who feels more British than Indian does very well with a limited part; Francis Matthews is excellent as the Indian who wants Miss Gardner to return to his race; Peter Illing as the Red leader is properly menacing without overdoing it; Freda Jackson gives a cold fury to the role of Matthews' nationalist mother in league with the Communist boss; Lionel Jeffries as the leering lieutenant etches an oily portrayal. In other parts, Abraham Sofaer as the Congress leader, Marne Maitland, Edward Chapman and Alan Tilvern are very well cast.

Since no picture can be everything to all men, "Bhowani Junction" necessarily will disappoint some and please others. It's doubtful that it will contribute much to Americans' knowledge of India and its people. Indeed, the Indians may object to it. But it treats with a serious problem of identification and candycoats its lesson with plenty of colored (and well familiar) substance. As a contribution to Hollywood's own wide-wide world safari, it's definitely a notch above the norm. It could stand tighter editing. Hift.

Magic Fire
(MUSIC—COLOR)

European backgrounds, Wagner music but poor entertainment. Badly miscast male lead hampers. Prospects unpromising.

Hollywood, April 27.

Republic release of William Dieterle production. Stars Yvonne de Carlo, Carlos Thompson, Rita Gam, Valentina Cortese, Alan Badel; features Peter Cushing, Frederick Valk, Gerhard Riedmann, Eric Schumann. Directed by Dieterle. Screenplay, Bertita Harding, E. A. DuPont; David Chantler; based on the Bertita Harding novel; camera (TruColor), Ernest Haller; editor, Stanley Johnson; musical supervision, Erich Wolfgang Korngold; conductor, Alois Melichar; opera scenes staged by Prof. Rudolf Hartmann, Munich soloists, orchestra and choir from the Bavarian State Opera. Previewed April 24, '56. Running time, 94 MINS.

Minna ..... Yvonne de Carlo
Frank Liszt ..... Carlos Thompson
Cosima ..... Rita Gam
Mathilde ..... Valentina Cortese
Richard Wagner ..... Alan Badel
Otto Wesendonk ..... Peter Cushing
Minister von Moll ..... Frederick Valk
King Ludwig II ..... Gerhard Riedmann
Hans von Buelow ..... Eric Schumann
August Roeckel ..... Robert Freytag
King of Saxonia ..... Heinz Klingenberg
Meyerbeer ..... Charles Regnier
Pfistermeister ..... Fritz Rasp
Magdeburg ..... Kurt Grosskurth
Robert Hubner ..... Hans Quest
Michael Bakunin ..... Jan Hendriks

Richard Wagner's music is the chief asset of this Republic release, but is not enough to carry the film. It's neither exceptional art house fare nor straight appeal stuff. Resultantly overall grossing potential is unpromising.

Produced and directed at actual historical locations in Europe by William Dieterle, film does have "interesting" settings against which to tell the Wagner story from the time he was 21 until his death. Music-wise, under the supervision of Erich Wofgang Korngold, soundtrack comes off well, but the scripting and acting that tie the score together fail to measure up so the entertainment is very uneven.

Alan Badel plays Wagner with an effete sneer, making it hard to believe that here was a man with the masculinity to attract women and earn himself the reputation of a great lover. (Wagner was a stormy petrel in politics, musical circles and the bedroom, a supreme egotist and genius of the 19th Century who contributed immortal music to the world.)

Yvonne de Carlo, as Wagner's first wife; Rita Gam, as his last wife, and Valentina Cortese, as a patroness who inspired "Tristan and Isolde," contribute to the romantic passages, but, other than Miss Gam, are not very effective. Carlos Thompson, as Franz Liszt, completes the star names.

A profusion of excerpts from Wagner's major works are excellently staged, from "Flying Dutchman" through "Parsifal," under the baton of Alois Melichar. Opera scenes were staged by Prof. Rudolf Hartmann, Munich soloists, orchestra and choir from the Bavarian State Opera and are colorful moments in the footage. Use of TruColor lensing by Ernest Haller sharpens scenic values of the actual location scenes that background the script by Bertita Harding, E. A. DuPont and David Chantler, which was based on Miss Harding's novel. Brog.

Crowded Paradise

Hume Cronyn, Nancy Kelly starred in meller of Puerto Rican problems in New York City. Well-made indie.

Tudor Pictures release of Ben Gradus production. Stars Hume Cronyn, Nancy Kelly, Frank Silvera, Enid Rudd. Directed by Fred Pressburger. Screenplay, Arthur Forrest, Marc Connelly; camera, Boris Kaufman; editor, Rita Roland; music, David Broekman; special musical numbers, Broekman, Terry Stern, William Gonzalez, Rafael Alers. Tradesdown in N.Y., May 4, 1956. Running time, 94 MINS.

George Heath ..... Hume Cronyn
Louise Heath ..... Nancy Kelly
Papa Diaz ..... Frank Silvera
Felicia Diaz ..... Enid Rudd
Juan Figueroa ..... Mario Alcalde
Big Man ..... Stefan Schnabel

"Crowded Paradise," a tale of Puerto Ricans in Manhattan, has name legit people, has been nicely directed by Fred Pressburger, adequately produced in almost documentary style by Ben Gradus, apparently the latter's first screen effort. Film is a closeup of living conditions in part of New York's upper East Side and contains plenty of suspense and action.

As an arty theatre entry, the film seems ready-made if for no other reason than the superb performances contributed by Hume Cronyn and Nancy Kelly. Mario Alcade makes so much of his role of the recently-arrived Puerto Rican that he promises to be heard from in the future.

Picture naturally should attract many former P.R. residents in cities where there is a large population of such people. Added selling angle is the fact that this was photographed by Boris Kaufman, winner of an Oscar in 1954 for his work on "On The Waterfront." His lensing is a high spot of this vehicle.

Story of the young, handsome Puerto Rican boy (Alcalde) who arrives in New York City set on conquering it and marrying Felicia Diaz (Miss Rudd), follows a rather familiar cinematic pattern. Yet Fred Pressburger's direction make the yarn realistic rather than a pat screen fable.

The director has skillfully kept the two themes boiling—the effort of the boy to get a job so he can wed and the harsh existence of Mrs. Heath (Miss Kelly) as the blind wife of the sex-crazed building superintendent Cronyn. The two threads of plot collide violently when the latter decides to disrupt the wedding with a bomb. Cronyn has a despicable role and makes it one of concentrate villainy.

Miss Rudd as Puerto Rican's youth's bride-to-be does so well that she hints future screen roles of bigger stature. Frank Silvera is excellent as her father. Stefan Schnabel, Carlos Montalban and Santos Ortega head a big supporting cast. David Broekman's music is timely and supplies strong background buildup.

Rita Roland's editing is topflight. The screenplay of Arthur Forrest an Marc Connelly joints up the Puerto Rican problem in Manhattan without too much originality or attempting any clear-cut solution of the same. N.Y. City officials perhaps will be far from happy over some of the scenes or the closeups of ramshackle apartment structures. Wear.

The March Hare
(BRITISH-C'SCOPE-COLOR)

Colorful Irish racing yarn adapted from novel should interest horselovers but nothing original in story or treatment.

London, May 1.

British Lion release of a B.&A. production. Stars Peggy Cummins, Terence Morgan, Wilfrid Hyde White, Martita Hunt and Cyril Cusack. Directed by George More O'Ferrall. Screenplay, Gordon Wellesley, Allan MacKinnon from novel "Gamblers Sometimes Win" by Captain Field; camera, Pack Hildyard; editor, Gordon Pilkington; music, Philip Green. At Odeon Theatre, Leicester Square, London. Running time, 85 MINS.

Pat Maguire ..... Peggy Cummins
Sir Charles Hare ..... Terence Morgan
Lady Anne ..... Martita Hunt
Lazy Mangan ..... Cyril Cusack
Colonel Keen ..... Wilfrid Hyde White
Capt. Marlow ..... Derrick De Marney
Fisher ..... Charles Hawtrey
Bridget ..... Maureen Delaney

Nils Svenson ..... Peter Swanwick
Tim Doughty ..... Charles Wade
Connor ..... John Gilbert
Joe Duffy ..... Fred Johnson
Slater ..... Bernard Rook
Insurance Braker ..... Reginald Beckwith
Doctor ..... Stringer Davis
Commissionaire ..... Clem Lister

A leisurely unreeled racetrack yarn with plenty of local color and an international love story interwoven to make a conventional linking thread. It has some firstrate shots of classic race meetings, and with the usual crook plans to provide additional excitement at the winning post, runs true to pattern. It should prove attractive entertainment for the horse lover.

Most of the background is in Ireland, where a reckless young baronet gambles away his ancestral home and racing stables. Mistaken for a groom by the new owner's daughter, an American teenager, he stays on. A protracted love affair develops. It only acts as a subsidiary interest to the raising and final triumph of a young colt, bought in secret by a sympathetic aunt as a surprise for her nephew.

Pic is relieved from tedium by the rich, natural performance of Cyril Cusack, as a besotted old stablehand whose uncanny influence over the horse he has reared from a foal results in his triumph in the Derby despite a fixed jockey, and all the trimmings.

Peggy Cummins is freshly appealing as the girl almost bypassed for a nag while Terence Morgan makes her a romantic partner. Martita Hunt registers her forthright personality as the aunt while Wilfrid Hyde White displays his characteristic urbanity as her platonic aider and abetter.

In addition to the most impressive panorama of Derby Day yet seen, the Irish countryside is given full flavor through CinemaScope. Pictorially the picture ranks higher than its subject matter. Clem.

Charley Moon
(BRITISH-COLOR)

London, May 1.

Colin Lesslie production of a British Lion release. Stars Max Bygraves, Dennis Price and Michael Medwin. Directed by Guy Hamilton. Screenplay, Leslie Bricusse; camera, Jack Hildyard; editor, Bertie Rule; music, Francis Chagrin. At London Pavilion, London. Running time 92 MINS.

Charley Moon ..... Max Bygraves
Harold Armytage ..... Dennis Price
Alf Higgins ..... Michael Medwin
Mary Minton ..... Florence Desmond
Angel Dream ..... Shirley Eaton
Rose ..... Patricia Driscoll
Miller Moon ..... Charles Victor
Vicar ..... Reginald Beckwith
Bill ..... Cyril Raymond
Stewart ..... Peter Jones
Monty Brass ..... Newton Blick
Solly Silvers ..... Vic Wise
Theatre Manager ..... Lou Jacobi

Main interest in this modest British production centers on the introduction of Max Bygraves to the screen as a starring personality. A top local name in revue and vaudeville, who played in America a few years back with Judy Garland, he has a winning personality as well as a generous share of talent. His name value alone will give a handy b.o. lift to the pic in the domestic market. Overseas, this is something else again.

Entire subject is designed to exploit the Bygraves personality. Story built around him gives the star the opportunities he needs. And although there are prominent local actors in the cast, it is, to all intents and purposes, a one-man picture.

The story focuses on two Army recruits (Dennis Price and Max Bygraves) who link up in civilian life as a double act, starting off in thirdrate vaudeville and moving up to smalltime pantomime. Then Bygraves is picked by a manager and is soon heading for West End stardom. When his big break comes he makes the grade, but after a comparatively short while in the theatre, he runs afoul of an unruly audience, abruptly terminates his career and returns to the country village where his faithful girl friend still awaits him.

Yarn allows for a number of modest scale production numbers, particularly in scenes from their vaude and panto dates. Bygraves sings his way pleasantly through all of these, with adequate assistance from other members of the cast. Price gives an immaculate study of the pompous smalltime actor with big ideas. Michael Medwin does nicely in as an Army corporal who starts Bygraves on his professional career. Patricia Driscoll provides the modest femme interest awhile and Shirley Eaton and Florence Desmond have minor roles as actresses who appear in the Bygraves shows. Myro.

Beware Unlicensed B'ds

Montepelier, May 8.

Vermont's Secretary of State Howard E. Armstrong has warned theatre operators and other outdoor advertisers against the erection of any commercial signs in Vermont before they are properly licensed.

Common violations of the state law, he said, include failure to show the name of the owner of the signs and failure to attach the metal number tag issued with each permit.

The official, who said an inspection of all billboards and signs is now being made throughout the state, also reminded advertisers that all signs must be back from the center of the traveled part of the highway and none can be erected within 300 feet of an interseetion, railroad crossing, cemetery or playground.

Zanzabuku
(Documentary-Trucolor)

Jungle documentary, with excellent action shots, weak narrative.

Republic release of Lewis Cotlow production. Narrated by Bob Danvers-Walker. Written by Ronald Davidson; camera, Fred Ford, David Mason, Fred Ford Jr., John Coquillon; editor, Eric Boyd-Perkins; music, Ivor Slaney; Previewed, May 3, '56. Running time, 44 MINS.

Lewis Cotlow took four cameramen, much film and a couple of trucks, and, with the aid of various professional hunters, made an eight-month "Zanzabuku" (dangerous safri) through Tanganyika, Uganda, Kenya and Belgian Congo for some crack pictorial results. Trucolor was helpful in establishing the brilliance and subtlety of jungle scenery. For the average stay-homer crew of cameramen, including Cotlow himself, seem to have been daring fellows in getting as close as they did for those shots of lions, elephant herds and charging rhinos and hippos.

If photography is absorbing during most of the 64 minutes. The narration—though excellently read by resonant Britisher Bob Danvers-Walker—is written in such a way by Ronald Davidson that it's often better geared to juves than adults.

Kids should get a kick out of a captured baby lion, out of monkeys clambering up cameras and out of the primitive rites in which Hartley's son and another native boy took part. Again, however, the off-screen chatter fails to keep pace with the visual stuff. Here as elsewhere, Davidson's writing is faintly supercilious, explaining in excessive detail what the eye could readily capture on its own.

Camera was blurry during some of the shots taken from the trucks, racing over the bumpy plains, but the action more than compensated. Ivor Slaney original music is topnotch. Art.

PHILLY GRAND JURY ON REFORMING BINGE

Philadelphia, May 8.

Local film censorship on the argument of protection of the city's young people from "indecent, obscene, immoral and crime-inciting movies" was recommended by the April grand jury in a sharply worded presentment handed up to Judge Eugene V. Alessandroni in Quarter Session Court.

Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania have been without film censorship since March 13, when the State Supreme Court declared the 41-year-old Motion Picture Censorship Act invalid.

The jury pointed out that it is a crime for a tavern to serve intoxicating liquors to minors and asked: "Why then should it be perfectly legal for a theatre owner to show outside and inside of his theatre, semi-naked women, often in lewd poses, to strike the imagination and carnal desires of these same youngsters?"

"Because of the great influence exerted upon our youth by the movies, the city of Philadelphia needs a censorship ordinance," the presentment declared.

The grand jury also assailed periodicals and comic books dealing with crimes of violence and sex stories "which by their sordidness and suggestiveness are just as criminal as selling a minor an intoxicating drink."

Italo Newsreel Biz Soars; More Outfits

Rome, May 1.

In contrast to the situation in the U.S. the Italian newsreel business seems to be flourishing, with new outfits joining in this sector weekly. Probability that the new Italo Film Aid Law, when passed, will provide an unhoped-for 20% tax rebate to makers of newsreels, seems to be one of the reasons behind the sudden spurt, which finds several new companies being formed to produce and release weekly and bi-weekly items for the Italian theatre chains. Some also announce plans for wide-screen, color newsreels on a one-a-week basis. There have already been successful experiments in widescreen, color newsreels here during the past year.

Another reason currently reported for the trend is the upcoming Italian election. The political parties, it is said, are directly or indirectly behind the companies in the rush to assure themselves proper coverage for the coming political battle. After they're over, most of the companies would again go into limbo.

HOLLYWOOD VS. 'BIG NIGHT' TV

Segregated Exploitation, Too

RKO has mapped different ad approaches for northern States and Dixie states for its "Great Day in the Morning," adaptation of Stephen Longstreet novel about the Civil War, known to the late rebels as "The War Between the States."

Basic campaign is the same but layouts for the south have variations slanted for that area, including a likeness of the Confederate Flag and such copy lines as "A blast of Southern that nothing could stop" and "A Civil War battle no history ever recorded."

Production itself has no Mason-Dixon line controversial matter, it's stated by film company reps.

10 Separate Suits (Same Attorneys) Ended in N. Y.

Cloaked in the usual mantle of trade secrecy, ten actions for alleged Sherman antitrust violations against the eight majors and several large circuits totaling over $17,000,000 in damages were dismissed and discontinued, according to papers filed last week in N. Y. Federal Court. The actions were instituted by independent exhibitors in New York, New Jersey, and Long Island.

Suits had charged that the majors had conspired and discriminated against the independents in the exhibition of first and second run pictures by favoring the large circuits and their affiliated theatres.

The ten actions were:

East Islip Theatre Corp, operating the East Islip Theatre, $3,150,000.
South Shore Theatres Inc., operating the Sayville Playhouse, $450,000.
Leff Myers Corp., operating the De-Luxe, Bronx, $2,550,000.
Leff Theatres Inc., operating the Freeman, Bronx, $2,550,000.
Phoenix Theatres Inc., operating the Vogue, Bronx, $1,800,000.
Tower Amuse. Corp., operating Tower, Bronx, $1,530,000.
Leonia Amuse. Corp., formerly operators of Leonia, N. J. (closed), $1,800,000.
Howard Theatres Inc., operating Essex, N. J., $1,800,000.
Hopkinson Theatre Corp., operating Peoples Theatre, Brooklyn, $1,050,000.
Idamin Amuse. Corp., operating York, Manhattan, $1,050,000.

In addition to these ten, two others in Brooklyn were also settled and discontinued.

Sperry, Weinberg and Ruskey represented the plaintiffs.

U'S PRESTIGE CITED FOR WORLD FILMS' COME-ON

United World Films, Universal's commercial film subsidiary, is stressing the prestige and knowhow of its parent company to solicit clients for its services.

Promotional letters being sent out under the signature of v.p. Norman Gluck call attention to the fact that United World, as part of Universal, can draw on the full manpower, technical and physical facilities of U's studio. In addition, Gluck notes that U's topnotch feature picture cameraman such as Maury Gerstman, Scotty Wellborn, George Blassberg and George Robinson are regularly used by United World in filming its tv commercials and in making documentary films.

MEALAND QUITS BRITAIN

Will Resume Writing—L. P. Bachmann London Successor

Richard L. Mealand, Paramount's general production rep in Great Britain for the past five years, has left the company, with Lawrence P. Bachmann, who has been active in independent production in London, named to succeed him. Bachmann, son of the late Jack Bachmann, former exec at the Par studio, was in New York the past week to discuses the job with homeoffice execs and returned to the British capital over the weekend.

Mealand left the field of magazine editing and short story writing to join Par as story editor, first in N. Y. and later on the Coast. He bowed out of the studio post to switch to London. He's now coming back to the States because of ill health and following recuperation plans to resume authoring.

AUDIT REVEALS LOSS

$1,500 Evaporated Enroute to 'Oklahoma' Treasurer

San Francisco, May 8.

Frisco police are investigating the disappearance of some $1,500 in "Oklahoma" boxoffice receipts from the Coronet Theatre.

Shortage was discovered in an audit of the take between time of film's opening, Feb. 10, and April 17, but management of United California chain says it has no explanation of loss, as yet.

Funds, management concedes, were handled by three cashiers before they reached the theatre's treasurer.

Todd-AO production has been a winner at the Frisco boxoffice, despite fact that theatre is not downtown.

Carnera Sues Columbia On 'Harder They Fall'; Won 480 of 500 Bouts

Hollywood, May 8.

Primo Carnera has sued Columbia Pictures in Santa Monica Superior Court asking $1,500,000 damages for invasion of his privacy in "Harder They Fall." Suit claims film has held him up to scorn and ridicule despite disclaimer that film's chief character, Toro Molina, isn't supposed to be Carnera.

Suit contends he's readily identifiable because of size and weight. Former heavyweight champ (1933-34) won 480 of 500 professional fights, according to suit.

AMUSEMENT AD RATES UP IN CHI TRIBUNE

Chicago, May 8.

Amusement advertising rates in the Chicago Tribune will be hiked as of June 1, it was disclosed last week by Trib amusement ad director Lambert Swattig. Increase is from 4% to 7% over the old rates. Motion picture ads will go from $1.02 a line to $1.07 for nabes in daily editions and from $1.38 to $1.48 on Sunday; Loop firstrun houses will be upped from $1.28 to $1.38 a line daily and from $1.68 to $1.78 on Sunday.

Nitery advertising goes from $1.45 to $1.55 daily and from $1.60 to $1.70 on Sunday. Amusement directory rates, which include most legiters (who otherwise pay nitery rates), go from $1.60 to $1.70 daily and from $1.95 to $2.10 Sunday.

Re-Heat'Nightshade'Deal; Englund Sets B'way Play

Fritz Lang is dickering a package deal with the William Morris office on the Coast for an indie production of "Nightshade," the mystery drama by Ken Englund and Sidney Field which had a Coast legit run a couple of years back and had been optioned for Broadway by the Theatre Guild. It's a yarn about a girl who falls for a romantic murderer, and Edmund Purdom would take the lead, if available.

Englund, vet screenwriter currently working at CBS-TV, will also be represented with a new play on Broadway, "So Few for Love," to be produced by David Wayne and Robert Douglas, with Wayne making his directorial debut. Play goes into rehearsal in August, with casting currently under way.

PLOTTING BIGGER HOME DIVERSIONS

By LEONARD TRAUBE

Filmmakers and exhibitors are asking themselves a lot of searching questions these days vis-a-vis television—not about the havoc it's concededly wrought, which is history to file and not forget, but about next season's nighttime menus for the homescreens. And they haven't come up with the answers so far. As tv makes with 1956-57 blueprints that even at this early date shape as a staggering armada of new and bigger programs, not to mention the medium's threat to "go color" in extravagant array, some of the questions the film industry is firing at itself may have answers hidden.

Among f'r'instances are:

Will the double feature give way to the triple bill?

Or, contrarivise, will the twin pic take a backseat to single, high-budgeted product paired with snappy short subjects?

Will it be film spectacle versus telespectacular?

Will the theatre screens take on even larger dimension? Or will picturedom's poobahs decide to shoot a number of strongly exploited "intimate" scripts with an aura of the livingroom about it?

Whatever they do, the Coast is on notice here and now that virtually every night of the upcoming tv season will break out with (1) new shows, (2), more hour and 90-minute shows, (3) and programming blocks providing "an evening at home," in addition to the regular fare. New and familiar personalities aside, it's axiomatic that every new program is latched on to by X number of millions of homegrown critics and just plain joeblows who want to perch in a boxoffice seat at the preem without paying the boxoffice freight. With two dozen such new formats at the very least, each rated at a minimum 12,000,000 "customers" per showing, that adds up to a monstrous 288,000,000 viewers.

It doesn't matter whether the openers are good, bad or colossal—they draw; and the draw is usually well above what the slots enjoyed in their closing stages, since they're replaced because either they couldn't make or continue the grade or were shifted elsewhere on the spectrum for competitive reasons. Add that 288,000,000 figure to, say, an average of six new or shifting shows and talent that will click to the extent that viewers will stay with them week after week, and it emerges as a statistic of which a good part is siphoned off the potential of the cinema houses.

In tv's swiftly changing scene, there will still be the fixed spec slots—NBC with its mixed fare every fourth Saturday, Sunday and Monday, and CBS with its Saturday night "Star Jubilee" at the same frequency—and the half-hour "bread & butter" programming added to the cluster of full hour dramatics. Saturday night is expected to be strengthened on a regular basis by NBC's shift of Sid Caesar from Monday. As result, there will be two hours of the comedy varieties that night, Perry Como from 8 to 9 and Caesar from 9 to 10, followed by the solid "Hit Parade." In addition, CBS has set Saturday aside for the new Jeannie Carson series. What can the flickers throw against that lineup?

The cinemas will also have to grapple with new and perhaps weightier values in tv's Tuesday. Herb Shriner will front a 60-minute show at the key hour of 8:30 to 9:30 for CBS, followed by Red Skelton and "$64,000 Question." While this is going on, NBC will emerge with 16 Ray Bolger live stanzas at 8 to 9, plus Dinah Shore, Bob Hope and Martin & Lewis to fill out a 40-week span. What Milton Berle did for years against the picture houses will likely continue Tuesday night, a night also earmarked by Kaiser Aluminum for a dramatic series.

If it isn't the weekends and Tuesday, it's Thursday. Next season, CBS comes in with 150 minutes of "an evening at home"—mating the regular "Climax" and one a month "Shower of Stars" to a seguing 90 minutes of a brand new "Playhouse 90" composed of live and film dramas, running through the key hours from 8:30 to 11 o'clock. That night, NBC will likely enter Tennessee Ernie Ford into the nocturnal tv arena.

Of the new live shows, NBC thinks it "has something" in Buddy Hackett, who under the aegis of "spec man" Max Liebman and the William Morris agency, will be seen in a half-hour comedy series titled "Stanley" at 8:30. Up ahead, it's kid time via a new telepix cluster, "Sir Launcelot," with among other shows geared for moppets on other days being "Circus Boy" and "Adventures of Jim Bowie," NBC and CBS, respectively.

In the quiz sweepstakes, the cinemas will have to fight it out on one night (not yet selected) with the biggest jackpot of them all, the "20 Steps to a Million" show that CBS has approved for slotting this spring. (See Page 1 of last week's issue.) A click would give the giant quiz holdover status to next season.

As if this weren't enough of a super headache for the film houses, ABC-TV, on a burgeoning spree, is making a considerable amount of noise with a number of proposed spectaculars and one-shotters added to its "Disneyland" kill Wednesdays and acquisition of "Omnibus" for Sunday night berthing. Many of these specs will be in the hour-and-longer cultural groove.

Mr. Producer and Mr. Exhibitor cannot say that they are not "on notice." The foregoing represent only a few of the hightlights of tv's 1956-57.

Seymour Poe Deplores Carbon-Copy (Of Hollywood) Trend in Italy

At a time when Italian pictures have established themselves in the U. S. market and their future success depends largely on the flow of product, Italian producers aren't putting sufficient accent on the "native" quality of their films.

That's the opinion of Seymour Poe, exec v.p. of IFE Releasing which releases most of the Italo product in this country. Poe will be going to Rome in July to huddle there with the IFE (Rome) board.

"There's too much of an attempt made in Italy to emulate Hollywood," Poe said. "If there is a weakness in the Italian product today, that's it." He noted, too, that some time ago he had proposed the hiring of an American film editor in Rome to assist local producers in preparing versions for the U. S. "Everyone was fire and flame for the idea, but nothing's happened," he said.

Poe, who has stressed "diversification" at IFE, i.e. the acquisition of other than Italian films, said the overall publicity for the Italian industry, originally engaged in by IFE, was not being missed. "It only makes sense to publicize pictures on an individualized basis, as they come through," he opined. "We used to spend time and energy publicizing Italian films that never even were released here."

Recent acquisition by IFE Releasing of six pictures (including its first French release, "Strange Fruit") involved an investment of $250,000 in advances, etc., Poe disclosed. On two of the six, IFE in Rome paid the advances in lira. Rest were paid for in dollars in New York by IFE Releasing, which now operates independently from its Italo parent company.

IFE Releasing, hampered by a lack of releases in part of last year, should just about break even, Poe reported. He expressed very high hopes for "Madame Butterfly," an IFE release which has just begun to go out. Opera version has done exceedingly well in its first dates and, according to Poe, should outgross "Aida," which was a hit and brought IFE $600,000 in film rental.

IFE Releasing is still looking for American indie films "but so far they haven't come breaking our doors down," Poe noted. He stressed that, with a readymade distribution org covering the whole country, IFE Releasing offered a good deal to the indies. "We may not be able to deliver a major company's gross on a picture, but by the time we get through, I can guarantee that the producer gets more money from us on a lower gross than he would get from the major on a higher one," he said.

IFE, Poe reported, had made every effort to cut overhead. As part of this endeavor, outfit has cut homeoffice "deadwood" and instead has augmented the productive field selling force. IFE now has six district offices operating in 32 exchange areas.

Poe said he was sold on dubbing for pix with a commercial potential. Unless these prospects were there though, he thought adding the English soundtrack was "a fatal blunder."

Problem of expanding distribution without going overboard on prints and costs was stressed by Poe. "At heart I'm still a producers' representative," he said, "and, of course, that's what IFE Releasing really is—a group of producers. I am determined that the independent must see some dollars from the handling of his films here." Poe commented on the prevailing "booker" mentality, i.e. a tendency by the field force not to appreciate the need for keeping prints moving and instead tying them up for specific dates, well in advance.

PREMINGER'S 'SAINT JOAN'

Signs For Three For United Artists Release.

Cannes, May 8.

Otto Preminger has set a new three-picture releasing deal with United Artists, teeing off with a film version of George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan." Contract, disclosed by UA veepee Max E. Youngstein at a press conference at the Film Festival here, covers a five year period.

Preminger's previous UA releases were "The Moon is Blue" and "Man with the Golden Arm."

Producer has acquired rights from the Shaw estate for the first filming of the classic and will begin shooting by the end of this year, after completion of "Bonjour Tristesse," which is slated for lensing in France this summer. He will produce and direct.

Sagan's Second Novel To 20th for $150,000 Against 8% of Gross

Cannes, May 8.

20th Century-Fox has sewed up the new novel by 20-year-old Francoise Sagan, "Un Certain Sourire" (A Certain Smile), for $150,000 against 8% of the gross.

Even slimmer than her first bestseller, "Bonjour Tristesse," the girl novelist's latest opus will appear soon in the States under the Dutton imprint. It is a mood study of a young girl who cheats on her lover by having an affair with his uncle whose wife has befriended her.

Alain Bernheim, the French literary agent, has been Hollywood representing the property, the American attorneys for which are Graubard & Moskowitz of Manhattan.

New Pix Help L.A.; 'Mamie' Rousing $40,000, 'Serenade' Sweet 29G, 'Fall' $29,500, 'Bad Man' Fair 55G in 10

Los Angeles, May 8.

New product is helping local firstrun situation here this stanza. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" is pacing the new bills with a very fancy $40,000 or near in four theatres. "Serenade" looms good $29,000 in three spots. "Harder They Fall" is heading for a nice $29,500, also in three houses.

"Tribute To Bad Man" looks medium $14,000 in two firstruns plus fair $41,000 in one nabe and seven ozoners.

Holdover and extended-run pix continue to soften although "Cinerama Holiday" and "Oklahoma" still are in the chips. Latter now has grossed $1,052,900 for 24 weeks at the Egyptian and 19 weeks at United Artists.

'Godzilla' Great $26,000, Hub Ace

Boston, May 8.

Although biz is offish around the city probably because of first touch of pleasant weather, "Godzilla" is soaring to a wow total at Paramount and Fenway to pace the town. Rousing bally by Terry Turner and George Kraska brought out whopping crowds of moppets. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" is hotsy at State and Orpheum. "Over-Exposed" shapes socko at Pilgrim while "Hilda Crane" is okay at the Memorial. "Ladykillers" still is big in fourth Kenmore stanza. "Touch and Go" looks fine in fourth frame at Exeter.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; $1-$1.80)—"Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (9th wk). Mild $5,000. Last week, $7,000.

Beacon (Beacon Hill) (678; 90-$1.25) — "Manon" (Indie). Big $10,000. Last week. "Diabolique" (UMPO) (11th wk), $6,000.

Cinerama (Cinerama Productions) (1.35; $1.20-$2.85)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (37th wk). Hot $18,000. Last week, $17,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 60-$1)—"Godzilla" (Indie) and "Stranger at Door" (Rep). Wow $9,000. Last week, "Mohawk" (20th) and "Red Sundown" (U), $6,000.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; 85-$1.25) —"Ladykillers" (Cont) (4th wk). Sock $10,000. Last week, $11,500.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 75-$1.25) —"Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Brain Machine" (RKO). Mild $10.000. Last week, "Creature Walks Among Us" (U), same.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,357; 75-$1.25)—"Serenade" (W) and "Scarlet Hour" (Par) (2d wk). Oke $11,000. Last week, $16,000.

Pilgrim (ATC) (2,100; 65-95)—"Over-Exposed" (Col) and "Hote Blood" (Col). Sock $14,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) and "Killer's Kiss" (UA) (2d wk), $7,500.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 60-$1) —"Godzilla" (Indie) and "Stranger at My Door" (Rep). Smash $17,000 or over, hypoed by explosive exploitation. Last week, "Mohawk" (20th) and "Red Sundown" (U). $12,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G). Hotsy $16.000. Last week, "Swan" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (UA) (2d wk), $16,000.

State (Loew) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G). Fine $9,000. Last week, "Swan" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (UA), same.

Heat Bops Port.; 'Fall' Fat $8,000, 'Planet' 7G

Portland, Ore., May 8.

Biz continues on skids with midsummer heat and transient outdoor attractions cutting deeply into grosses. "Serenade" holds stoutly in second session at the Fox. "Forbidden Planet" continues likewise at Broadway for second frame. "Harder They Fall" is top new film with good takings at Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,875; 90-$1.25)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Kettles In The Ozarks" (U) (2d wk). Fine $7,000. Last week, $8,300.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,836; $1-$1.25) —"Serenade" (WB) and "Glory" (RKO) (2d wk). Sturdy $7,000. Last week, $8,000.

Guild (Indie) (400; $1)—"Samurai" (Indie). Mild $1,500. Last week, "The Prisoner" (Col) (2d wk), $1,100.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,890; 90-$1.25)—"Hot Blood" (Col) and "Uranium Boom" (Col). Fair $6,000 or close. Last week, "World Without End" (AA) and "Indestructible Man" (AA), $6,300.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.25)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Blackjack Ketchum" (Col). Good $8,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) and "Joe MacBeth" (Col) (2d wk), $7,100.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; 65-90) — "Wiretapper" (Indie) and "One Way Ticket To Hell" (Indie). Drab $5,000. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (2d wk), $6,100.

'Planet' Fine 15G, Denver; 'Rain' 11G

Denver, May 8.

For first time since Christmas no film is holding here in current round. Boxoffice takings are spotty, with "Forbidden Planet" landing top coin. It is fine at Orpheum. "Miracle in Rain" is almost as solid at small Paramount. "Maverick Queen" looms fairish at the Denver. "Hilda Crane" shapes okay in second Centre session while "Gaby" is rated fair at Aladdin.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 50-85)—"Gaby" (M-G). Fair $3,500. Last week, "Heartbreak Ridge" (Tudor) (2d wk), $2,500.

Centre (Fox) (1,247; 60-$1)—"Hilda Crane" (20th) (2d wk). Okay $10,000 or near. Last week, $11,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 60-$1) —"Glory" (RKO). Light $6,000. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par), $4,500.

Denver (Fox) (2,525; 60-$1)—"Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "Yearling" (M-G) (reissue). Fairish $11,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col), $11,500.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 75-$1)—"Samurai" (Indie). Good $3,000. Last week, "Ballet Romeo and Juliet" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 60-$1)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Bride of Monster" (Indie). Fine $15,000 or a bit over. Last week, "Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G), $13,500.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,200; 60-$1)—"Miracle in Rain" (WB) and "Steel Jungle" (WB). Trim $11,000 or better. Last week, "Kettles in Ozarks" (U) and "Red Sundown" (U), same.

Vogue (Sher-Shulman) (442; 75-$1)—"Letters from Windmill" (Tohan) (2d wk). Oke $2,000. Last week, $4,000.

'Alexander' Great 28G, Det.; 'Fall' Hotsy $25,000, 'Serenade' Sour 16G

Detroit, May 8.

Biz is perking a bit this week in key downtown situations. "Alexander the Great" leads the parade with a great week at the Madison. "Harder They Fall" rises to fancy heights at the Palms. "World Without End" is better than average at the Broadway-Capitol. However, "Serenade" at the Michigan and "Maverick Queen" at the Fox are disappointing. "Oklahoma!" is leveling off a bit at United Artists in 12th week.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; $1-$1.25)—"Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep). Slow $17,500. Last week, "Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Swamp Women" (Indie), $18,600.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; $1-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB) and "Crime Against Joe" (Indie). Weak $16,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G), $16,000 in second week.

Palms (UD) (2,961; $1-$1.25) — "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Ghost Town" (Indie). Sock $25,000. Last week, "Comanche" (UA) and "Manfish" (UA), $15,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1-$1.25)—"Alexander the Great" (UA). Great $28,000. Last week, "Picnic" (Col) (8th wk), $7,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; $1-$1.25)—"World Without End" (AA). Better than average $17,000. Last week, "The Come-On" (AA) and "Crashing Las Vegas" (AA), $11,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,667; $1.25-$2.75)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (12th wk). Off to $12,000. Last week, $14,500.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; $1-$1.25)—"I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (9th wk). Slowing to $7,500. Last week, $8,100.

Music Hall (Cinerama Productions) (1,194; $1.40-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (65th wk). Okay $15,500. Last week, $15,800.

'Swan' Sockeroo $38,000, Toronto

Toronto, May 8.

On Loew's two-house combo here, "The Swan" is topping the town to hefty returns but not fully up to expectations. Only other major newcomer is "On Threshold of Space," light in five-house Odeon combo. Of holdovers, "Oklahoma" is exceeding last week's Canadian preem, with patrons taking those side seats which the management was reluctant to sell on possibility of complaints of screen distortion. Now running capacity at most shows. "Serenade" and "Birds and the Bees," both in second frames, also are okay.

Estimates for This Week

Christie, Hyland (Rank) (877; 1,357; 75-$1)—"Ladykillers" (Cont) (6th wk). Good $6,500. Last week, $8,000.

Circle, Towne (Taylor) (750; 693; 60-$1)—"Geordie" (IFD) (6th wk). Holding at $5,500. Last week, same.

Colony, Danforth, Fairlawn, Humber, Odeon (Rank) (839; 1,350; 1,165; 1,204; 2,318; 60-$1)—Threshold of Space" (20th). Light $20,000. Last week, "Golden Arm" (UA) (3d wk), $18,500, with Odeon taking $10,000.

Downtown, Glendale, Scarboro, State, Westwood (Taylor) (1,059; 995; 694; 696; 994; 40-75)—"Three Bad Sisters" (UA) and "Killer Is Loose" (UA). Good $15,000. Last week, "Creature Walks Among Us" and "Day of Fury" (U), $14,500.

Eglinton, University (FP) (1,080; 1,556; 60-$1)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) (2d wk). Okay $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

Imperial (FP) (3,344; 60-$1.10)—"Court Jester" (Par) (3d wk). Off to $11,000. Last week, $15,000.

International (Taylor) (557; $1-$1.75)—"Richard III" (IFD) (10th wk). Final stanza looks $3,000. Last week, same.

Loew's, Uptown (Loew) (2,096; 2,745; 75-$1.25) — "The Swan" (M-G). Big $38,000. Last week, Loew's, "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) (2d wk), $7,000 for three days at 60-$1; Uptown, "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (5th wk), $5,000 for three days, at 75-$1.25.

Shea's (FP) (2,375; 60-$1)—"Serenade" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $10,000. Last week, $14,000.

Tivoli (FP) (995; $1.50-$2.25)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (2d wk). Picking up to capacity $15,000 after last week's $14,000, with management still reluctant to sell some 100 seats on sides on possible complaints of screen distortion.

'Goodbye' Lusty $8,500, Prov.; 'Suit' Large 12G, 2d, 'Comanche' Slow 8G

Providence, May 8.

A second-weeker, "Man In Gray Flannel Suit," at Majestic, is the topper here this week. It still is smash in a fairly slow stanza. RKO Albee's "Never Say Goodbye" shapes good. "Comanche" looks slow at State.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 50-80)—"Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "Toughest Man Alive" (U). Good $8,500. Last week, "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U), $6,500.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 65-$1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk). Wow $12,000 or over after $17,000 opening week.

State (Loew) (3,200; 60-80)—"Comanche" (UA) and "Storm Fear" (UA). Slow $8,000. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) and "Timetable" (UA) (2d wk), $7,500.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 65-80) "Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Night My Number Came Up" (Indie). Dull $5,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col), $7,500.

'Suit' Smash $14,000 In L'ville; 'Rock' Solid 8G, 'Birds' OK 5G, 'Fall' 7G

Louisville, May 8.

Weekend biz currently is described as "Too Much Derby." All agreed that Friday's (4) night Derby Festival Parade, which brought out an estimated 125,000 crimped film house takes. The Brown's "Rock Around Clock" shapes solid. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" looms sock at Rialto. "Birds and Bees" looks just okay at the Kentucky.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.) (United Artists) (1,000; 55-85) — "Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Houston Story" (Col). Stood 'em up Saturday (5) Derby Night, indicating solid $8.000 in eight days. Last week, "Patterns" (UA), $3,000 in 6 days.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,100; 55-85) —"Birds and Bees" (Par) and "Toughest Man Alive" (Par). Okay $5,000. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Crashing Las Vegas" (AA), about same.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 55-85)—"Goodbye, My Lady" (WB). Good $6,000. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col), $5,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3.000; 75c-$1) — "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th). Smash $14.000 or near. Last week, "Threshold of Space" (20th), $10,000.

State (United Artists) (3,000; 55-85)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Uranium Boom" (Col). Modest $7,000 in sight. Last week, "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) and "Inside Detroit" (Col), $8,000.

ST. LOO HOT, BIZ COLD; 'WONDERS' SOCK 23G

St. Louis, May 8.

With mercury soaring to 91 and baseball double-header with hometown Cardinals against N.Y. Giants, cinema trade was sloughed off over the past weekend. It will make whole session look laggard. "Seven Wonders of World" still is smash in second round at Ambassador after a great initial six days. "Harder They Fall" is barely passable at Loew's. "Guys and Dolls," out on popscale run following an extended initial run, is good at the Missouri. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" looms neat in third frame at the St. Louis.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40) — "Seven Wonders Of World" (Indie) (2d wk). Smash

Cincy Slower But 'Alex' Trim 13G; 'Bad Man' NSG $8,000, 'Holiday' 18G

Cincinnati, May 8.

Seasonal beckoning of outdoor lures is noticeable this week in general downtown traffic, but dip is less than that felt at drive-ins. "Alexander the Great" is leading the way currently with a good Albee marker. "Tribute to Bad Man" shapes barely so-so at the Palace, a real disappointment. Third new bill, "Spoilers," looks smooth at the Grand. Holdover "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" continues sprightly in fourth-frame fadeout at Keith's. "Cinerama Holiday" is torrid in 46th Capitol round.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 84-$1.10)—"Alexander the Great" (UA). Good $13,000 or near. Last week, "Anything Goes" (Par), $11,000.

Capitol (Ohio Conerama Corp.) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (46th wk). Hovering close to torrid $18,000. Last week, $18,500.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 84-$1)—"Spoilers" (U) and "There's Always Tomorrow" (U). Smooth $6,500. Last week, "Killer Is Loose" (UA) and "Timetable" (UA), $6,000.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25) —"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk). Exiting at brisk $6,000 after $7,900 third round.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 75-$1)—"Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G). So-so $8,000. Last week, "Threshold of Space" (20th), $7,500.

TOURISTS TRAMPLE D. C. BIZ

Chi Still Lags; 'Serenade' Light $38,000, 'Birds' Sluggish 19G, 'Hunt' Socko 21G, 'Goodbye' 8G, 'Fall' 14G

Chicago, May 8.

Chi firstrun biz continues in doldrums this frame with even the new entries doing only fair. Onset of spring is held responsible by most exhibs.

"Serenade" shapes a dull $38,000 opener at the Chicago while "The Birds and the Bees" looks mild $19,000 at the State-Lake. Also new, "The Last Hunt" and "Naked Street" combo should get sock $21,000 in first Roosevelt round.

The Grand's "Never Say Goodbye" should do fair $8,000 in opener. "Ballet of Romeo and Juliet" is neat $5,800 week at Surf.

"Magic Fire" is lean in the second frame at the Monroe. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" continues big in the third session at the Loop. "The Swan" is sluggish in third United Artists frame. Fourth week of the Woods' "Harder They Fall" is slumping. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is still okay in fifth round at the Oriental.

"Oklahoma" stays sturdy in the 19th week at McVickers. "Cinerama Holiday" continues to hold nicely in 47th week at the Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB). Slow $38,000. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (4th wk), $23,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,400; 85-$1)—"Touch and Go" (U) (3d wk). Oke $4,500 in 5 days. Last week, $6,200.

Grand (Nomikos) (1,200; 98-$1.25)—"Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "River Changes" (WB). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Day of Fury" (U) (3d wk), $6,500.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.25)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (3d wk). Sock $18,000. Last week, $19,000.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,580; $1.25-$3)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (19th wk). Sturdy $23,000. Last week, $28,500.

Monroe (Indie) (1,000; 67-87)—"Magic Fire" (Rep) (2d wk). Thin $4,500. Last week, $8,000.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 98-$1.25)—"Man Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk). Oke $19,000. Last week, $23,000.

Palace (Eitel) (1,484; $1.25-$3.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (47th wk). Steady $24,000. Last week, $24,700.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,400; 65-98)—"Last Hunt" (M-G) and "Naked Street" (UA). Boff $21,000. Last week, "Comanche" (UA) and "Killer is Loose" (UA) (2d wk), $16,000.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,400; 98-$1.25)—"Birds and Bees". (Par). NSH $19,000. Last week, "Anything Goes" (Par) (3d wk), $19,000.

Surf (H&E Balaban) (685; 98)—"Ballet Romeo Juliet" (Tohan). Swell $5,800. Last week, "Citizen Kane" (RKO) (reissue) (3d wk), $3,400.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 98-$1.25)—"The Swan" (M-G) (3d wk). Mild $17,000. Last week, $22,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,206; 98-$1.25)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) (4th wk). Waning $14,000. Last week, $17,000.

World (Indie) (430; 98)—"Hamlet" (Indie). Dull $3,000. Last week, "Too Bad She's Bad" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,800.

Ziegfeld (Davis) (430; 98)—"Diaboliique" (UMPO) (20th wk). Sturdy $3,500. Last week, $3,600.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

Pitt Way Off But '7 Wonders' 23G

Pittsburgh, May 8.

Downtown biz, with exception of "Seven Wonders of the World" at Warner, is worst in a long time. Everything's dying and even such highly-regarded pictures as "Harder They Fall" at Harris, "Birds and Bees" at Penn and "On Threshold of Space" at Fulton can't even get close to a holdover. All three come out after first weeks. Twinner of "Slightly Scarlet" and "Glory" at Stanley isn't going anywhere, either. "The Ladykillers" great at Guild, will set a new house record.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1)—"Threshold of Space" (20th). Fine notices but nobody wants. Poorest here in long time. Drab $4,000. Last week, "Blacklash" (U), $6,000.

Guild (Green) (500; 65-$1)—"Ladykillers" (Cont). Off to sensational start and will break house record held by reissue of "Camille" (M-G). Can't miss $5,000 and may go better than that. First Alec Guinness pic to play here and should go around for sometime. Last week, "Night Number Came Up" (Cont) (5th wk), $1,900.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 65-$1)—"Harder They Fall" (Col). Reviewers went to town for this one but looks just good at $10,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col), $8,500.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 65-$1)—"Birds and Bees" (Par). George Gobel apparently can't bring them in for pay. One week and out to weak $10,000. Last week, "Swan" (M-G) (2d wk), $10,500.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (5th wk). Good $3,000. Last week, $3,300.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 65-$1)—"Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Glory" (RKO). Way down in dumps at $5,000, about as low as possible for this house. Last week, "Bold and Brave" (RKO), $7,000.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.25-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (3d wk). Only bright spot in Golden Triangle. Still getting heavy play and should be Cinerama's topper so far with room to spare. Wow $23,000. Last week, $25,400.

'BRAVE' DULL $7,000, BALTO; 'SUIT' 15G, 3D

Baltimore, May 8.

Sluggish grosses prevail for the most part here this week. Newcomers are all mild entries. "Bold And Brave" is drab at Stanley. "Cockleshell Heroes" is mild at the Town. "On The Threshhold Of Space" is fairish at the New. "Tribute To Bad Man" is modest at the Hip. "Man In Gray Flannel Suit" is pleasing in a third round at the Century.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,000; 50-$1.25)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (3d wk). Still potent $15,000 after $16,000 in second.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1)—"Night Number Came Up" (Indie) (2d wk). Modest $2,500. Opener was $3,500.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; $1.25-$2.50)—"Oklahoma" (Magna)

One ordinarily might think that cold and snow at this time of year would be favorable for the boxoffice, but spring's non-arrival doesn't seem to be doing firstruns any good. However, outstanding entries are conspicuous by their absence and the newcomers now on tap probably can't expect to be benefitted by the weather. However, holdovers continue to give a good boxoffice account of themselves. "Cinerama Holiday" is

Washington, May 8.

The sound of thousands of tourists' feet tramping through the capital is definitely not music to mainstem managers. Except for "Cinerama Holiday," which continues to draw out-of-towners, the visitors shun the cinemas while natives avoid the crowded areas. "Meet Me in Las Vegas," which tops the town at Loew's Capitol, is solid. "Hilda Crane" at Loew's Palace is barely pleasing and "Comanche" at the Columbia is strictly routine.

The off-beat "Zanzabuku" at Lopert's Dupont, is another mild entry. "Kansas Raiders" at RKO Keith's, is NSG. "Richard III" winds up a disappointing 8-week run at Playhouse with a mild final stanza. "Jubal" is fair in second round for 2 spot.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 70-95)—"Jubal" (Col) (2d wk). Fair $4,000. Last week, $5,800.

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 86-$1.10)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G). Pleasing if a bit disappointing at $22,000 despite fine crix reaction. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk), $17,000 for 6 days.

Playhouse (Lopert) (456; $1-$1.80)—"Richard III" (Indie) (8th-final wk). So-so $4,500 for second consecutive week, and winding up well below such hardy Shakespeare pix as "Hamlet" and "Henry V."

Plaza (T-L) (300; 80-$1.25) —"Adorable Creature" (Indie) (2d wk). Down to $2,500. Last week, $3,500.

Warner (SW) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (30th wk). Big $17,000 after smash $19,000 last week.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 90-$1.25)—"Picnic" (Col) (12th wk). Nice $6,500. Last week, $7,000.

'Serenade' Stout $19,000 in Frisco

San Francisco, May 8.

Standout newcomers here this round look to be "Serenade" at the St. Francis, where it is big, and "Forbidden Planet," shaping for a fine total at the Warfield. "Bold and Brave" looms okay at Golden Gate. "Harder They Fall" looks fancy in second Paramount session. "Cinerama Holiday" still is fine at Orpheum in 40th stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 80-$1)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Brain Machine" (RKO). Okay $14,000. Last week, "Come Next Spring" (Rep) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep), $6,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk-6 days). Fair $10,000 or close. Last week, $13,500.

Warfield (Loew) (2,656; 65-90)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G). Fine $18,000 or over. Last week, "The Swan" (M-G) (2d wk), $8,500.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Overexposed" (Col) (2d wk). Fancy $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB). Big $19,000. Last week, "Miracle In Rain" (WB), $9,500.

Orpheum (Cinerama Theatre Calif.) (1,458; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (40th wk).

Spring Slows B'way; 'Planet' Lands Fast 18G, 'Hilda' Soft 14G, Palace 14G, 'Swan' Swift 135G, H. O.'s Slip

Broadway deluxers again had to contend with competition from outdoors over the past weekend, with another batch of spring weather keeping folks away from the cinema. Three new pictures were handicapped by the mild temperatures which cripples the boxoffice every year about this time.

Top new entry is "Forbidden Planet," which looks to land a sock $18,000 opening week at the Globe. "Hilda Crane," also new, finished the first stanza at the Victoria with a fair $14,000. "Wetbacks" with vaudeville shapes to get a $14,000, also just fair, at Palace.

Biggest coin is going to "The Swan" with stageshow, with a smooth $135,000 in prospect for second session at the Music Hall. It will hold, of course. "Jubal" finished its first holdover week at the Mayfair with a barely okay $11,500.

"Godzilla" looks to get a nice $17,000 in second round at the State. It was considerably over expectancy with a good $22,000 opening week. "Birds and Bees" was down to $25,000 in second frame at the Paramount.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" with iceshow onstage is heading for a good $57,000 in its fourth stanza at the Roxy. Combo stays on until "D-Day Sixth of June" comes in May 25. "Alexander the Great" looks to wind its sixth session at the Capitol with a so-so $18,000.

"Seven Wonders of World" also tapered off somewhat from capacity pace of initial two weeks but still was terrific at $57,600 in third round at the Warner. It is now in its fourth week. "Oklahoma," too, is down with a nice $23,200 for current (30th) stanza at the Rivoli.

"Meet Me in Las Vegas" finished its eighth frame with an okay $11,500 at the Astor. "Harder They Fall" is due in today (Wed.). "Conqueror" still looms good with around $15,000 for present (6th) round at the Criterion. House is getting "While City Sleeps" on May 16.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Harder They Fall" (Col). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G) (8th wk). okay $11,500. Seventh was $13,000.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Naked Night" (Times) (5th wk). Fourth stanza concluded Sunday (1) was fancy $7,200. Third was $7,800.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.50)—"Madam Butterfly" (IFE) (3d wk). First holdover round ended Monday (7) held with lusty $10,700. First was $11,800.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Alexander the Great" (UA) (6th wk-8 days). Present stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like oke $18,000 or near. Fifth $22,000. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) opens Friday (11).

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20)—"Conqueror" (RKO) (6th wk). Current round is heading for good $15,000 or less. Fifth was $19,000, over hopes. "While City Sleeps" (RKO) set to open May 16.

Bijou (Lopert) (603; $1.50-$1.80)—"Richard III" (Indie) (9th wk). The eighth stanza ended Sunday (6) was mild $5,000. The seventh was $5,800.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—French-Cancan" (UMPO) (4th wk). Third week ended Sunday (6) was nice $9,000. Second was $12,000.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G). First session winding up today (Wed.) looks like socko $18,000 or close. Holding. In ahead, "Creature Walks Among Us" (U), $6,700.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)—"My Seven Little Sins" (Indie) (2d wk). First stanza concluded Monday (7) hit okay $5,000. In ahead, "Touch and Go" (U) (6th wk-8 days), $4,000.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Jubal" (Col) (3d wk). Second frame finished Monday (7) held with barely oke $11,500. First was $15,500.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Lovers and Lollipops" (T-L) (3d wk). This round ended yesterday (Tues.) was lively $9,200. Second was $8,700.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Wetbacks" (Indie) and vaudeville. Week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit good $14,000. Last week, "Star of India" (UA) with vaude, $15,500.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; $1-$2)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) (3d-final week). Second week ended Saturday (5) was mild $25,000. First hit $30,000. Stays three extra days of fourth week in order to open "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) on May 16.

Paris (Pathe Cine) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Ballet Romeo and Juliet" (Tohan) (6th wk). Fifth session concluded Sunday (6) was fair $6,800. Fourth was $7,000.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75)—"The Swan" (M-G) with stageshow (2d wk). First holdover stanza winding up today (Wed.) looks to land nice $135,000. Last week, $160,000. Stays on.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.25-$3)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (30th wk). Current week ending today (Wed.) looks to land smooth $23,200. The 29th week was $25,000. Stays on with seats selling through June and July.

72d Street Playhouse (Tritone) (420; 85-$1.25)—"Bill of Divorcement" (SRO) (reissue). Opened Monday (7) with better than $700 opening day, terrific for an oldie.

Roxy (Nat'l. Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40) — "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) with iceshow onstage (4th wk). Present stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is headed for good $57,000. Third was $67,000. "D-Day Sixth of June" (20th) opens May 25.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75) —"Godzilla" (Indie) (2d wk). Initial hold-over round winding tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to get fine $17,000 or close. First was $22,000, considerably over estimate. Stays on.

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80) — "The Ladykillers" (Cont) (12th wk). The 11th stanza finished Monday (7) held with potent $6,700. The 10th week was $7,400. Stays on.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50)—"Gaby" (M-G). Tees off with preem tonight (Wed.), with regular run starting tomorrow (Thurs.). In ahead, "Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (10th wk-5 days), was mild $2,500 after $4,000 in ninth week, for a very strong longrun.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$2)—"Hilda Crane" (20th) (2d wk). Initial session ended last night (Tues.) was fair $14,000 or less.

Plaza (Brecher) (525; $1.25-$1.80) — "A Kid For Two Farthings" (Lopert) (4th wk). Third round ended Monday (7) was stout $7,800. Second was $11,500. "Invitation To Dance" (M-G) opens May 22.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) (1,600; $1.20-$3.50) — "Seven Wonders of World" (Indie), (4th wk). Third round ended Saturday (5) night was off from first two rounds but still terrific at $57,600. Second full week was $63,200, capacity at house currently. Stays indef.

World (Times Films) (385; $1-$1.50)—"Last 10 Days" (Col) (5th wk). Fourth session ended yesterday (Tues.) held at oke $3,200. Third was $3,300.

'Alex' Terrif $33,000, Philly; 'Wonders' Wham 25G, 'Suit' Big 16G, 3d

Philadelphia, May 8.

Fair weather meant a poor weekend here at the boxoffice with a few exceptions. Outstanding of these was "Alexander the Great," which is great at the Mastbaum. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" still is very big in third round at the Viking. "Hilda Crane" at the Fox got the femme play but little else. "Tribute to Bad Man" is only fair at Goldman. Weak matinee trade is proving brutal for nearly all spots. "Alexander" is using coupons to woo school trade, and it is helping.

Ireland First-Timing at Variety, Charity Arm of World Show Biz; 1,200 From 39 Tents Hit N.Y.C.

By HY HOLLINGER

Approximately 1,200 delegates representing 39 Variety Club Tents from the United States and other sections of the world are convening in New York today (Wed.) for the opening of the Variety Club International 20th annual convention at the Waldorf-Astoria. Sessions, including business meetings and social affairs, will extend to Saturday (12), winding up with the annual Humanitarian Award being presented to an outstanding national or international personality.

Estimated cost of the four-day convention is $75,000. The cost, it's anticipated, will be recouped via the registration fees and advertising from the convention journal. In addition, the Coca Cola Co. and the Pepsi Cola Co. are picking up the tabs for two of the big social events—a cruise around Manhattan and a Mardi Gras ball in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf.

Large delegations are already in from London, Texas, Las Vegas and California, with a group from Ireland also arriving for the first time in the history of the Variety Clubs. The British Broadcasting Co. will film the convention proceedings which will be used over the BBC facilities and will also provide a print to each Tent throughout the world. Ed Sullivan will salute the organization on his tv show.

About 40 to 50 of the top brass of the motion picture industry will be seated on the elaborate dais at the Humanitarian Award dinner, the traditional closing feature of the convention. Among those under consideration for this year's Humanitarian Award are Dr. Jonas Salk, Henry Ford II, Cardinal Spellman, and Dr. Sidney Farber. Awards in previous years have gone to Bernard Baruch, Sir Winston Churchill, Gen. George C. Marshall, Father Flanagan.

Another highlight of the convention is the Heart Award, presented to the Tent which has reported the greatest accomplishment in furthering its pet charity or child welfare program. Business sessions will be held on all four days of the convention, with the election of officers and selection of the city for next year's convention set for Saturday (12). London, Miami, Las Vegas, and a seven-day cruise (favored by the International) have been mentioned as the main contenders, but it appears that Las Vegas has the inside track.

George C. Hoover, of Miami, who is winding up his second term as international chief barker, most likely will be succeeded by John H. Rowley, now first assistant international chief. The International has adopted a progression system in moving up to the top post, although nominations from the floor are permitted.

New York members who cannot attend all activities of the convention are welcome at the individual functions such as the luncheons, boat ride, ball, and Humanitarian Award dinner.

Variety Club International, the charity arm of show biz, was founded in 1927 by a group of Pittsburgh showmen. An abandoned baby found in the Sheridan Theatre launched the organization on a charity program. Other Pittsburgh showmen joined the group and the idea spread throughout the country where local Variety Clubs were founded. There are now 45 Variety Clubs throughout the world. Last year the combined contribution to various charities exceeded $4,000,000.

London Delegation

London, May 8.

British television director Henry Caldwell planed to Manhattan last Sunday (6) to film highlights of the Variety Club convention there for later screening on Britain's commercial tv network.

Among other members of the British Tent who are participating in the convention are Chief Barker Nat Cohen, James Carreras, Sir Tom O'Brien, Mike Frankovich, Charles Pearl, Leslie Faber and Ben Rosenfeld. They left London last Saturday (5).

Reade Enthuses, U.S Needs Fest

International film festival in the U. S. would be "a wonderful hypo" for the film biz, Walter Reade Jr., prexy of the Reade circuit, writes VARIETY from Cannes where he's attending in his capacity as an exec of Continental Distributing.

"For these two weeks, Cannes seems to have become the center of all the motion picture industry," he notes. "Somehow it reminds me a little of a TOA (Theatre Owners of America) convention and a world premiere of a top film every night, with private sneak previews going on all the time. Julius Gordon, E. D. Martin, Mike Blank and myself are here with our wives, and we are having private conventions every once in a while." (Gordon, Martin and Blank, along with Reade, are all TOA leaders.)

"I think the Americans on the whole are absolutely tops still in all departments," writes Reade, who's been ogling a lot of product as potential for Continental. "It is too bad that we have not yet been able to do something like this in America. Anyone who can see the thousands of autograph hunters that line the sidewalks and gawk, from nine in the morning till everyone has gone to sleep—plus the hundreds of photographs and accredited newspapermen from all over the world—can't help but realize what a wonderful hypo this is for the industry over here.

"Everyone speaks English and is anxious to come to America. We would be missing a big opportunity if we did not cash in on this while we can."

Reade went on to say he was convinced that, in the not-too-distant future, good pictures made anywhere would do business any place. "The truly great films may some day do more for world understanding than anything done so far, including the United Nations," he commented. Reade left Cannes Monday (7) to go to London.

Disney Drops 32 Mins. From 'Space'

Walt Disney has cut one of his new pictures in half. Producer, via Buena Vista, distribution subsidiary, had planned to release both "Davy Crocket and the River Pirates" and "Man in Space" together as a 135-minute package, "Crockett" being 75 minutes and "Space" 65.

They're still to be sold jointly but "Space" has ben trimmed to 33 minutes.

The two pictures, like the first "Crockett" entry, originally were on the "Disneyland" tv'er. For the theatrical release, the bigscreen and Technicolor values are being stressed.

"Space," employing both live action and animation, deals with extra-terrestrial travel. "Crockett" again teams Fess Parker and Buddy Ebsen as frontiersmen. Leo Samuels, BV president, has set the release date at July 17.

'Boone' Makes Peace With Studio Craftsmen

Hollywood, May 8.

Boycott of the indie "Daniel Boone" by the Hollywood AFL Film Council has been lifted following inking of collective bargaining agents with various studio unions by Gannaway-Ver Halen Inc., and Gannaway Productions Inc., producers of the picture. Council originally invoked the boycott on the grounds the film was a "runaway foreign production," lensed outside the U. S. solely to take advantage of low labor costs.

As part of the deal, indies have agreed that in the future if they deem it necessary to lens outside the U. S., "they will first consult with the Film Council concerning using Hollywood production crews on such films."

UA Charges Drive-In Irregularities

Says % Reported on 75c Admish Though $1.25 In Effect—Films 'Sneaked' Into Midnight Show

Chicago, May 8.

A breach-of-contract suit with an alternative count of fraud has been filed in Federal District Court here by United Artists, naming the Starlite Drive-in Theatre Corp. as defendant. Suit asks for $3,540.62 in damages for breach of contract or $2,557 with an additional $5,000 exemplary damages on the fraud count.

UA says the damages represent film rental for specific films shown at the Starlite Drive-in in January, May, July and August of 1955. The film company contends that Stanford Kohlberg, the ozoner operator, charged a $1.25 admission price at the Starlite, but only paid percentage film rental on 75c of the admission, claiming that the other 50c was for use of the miniature golf course and kiddy park. UA also contends that Kohlberg, advertising a midnight show with flat rental pix, would decide arbitrarily when to cut off UA's participation in the gross for the percentage picture shown before midnight. The film company further claims that Kohlberg would also "sneak" the percentage film into the midnight show, well after he had cut UA out of participation in the gross.

Suit was filed in Federal Judge Win G. Knoch's court by Pat O'Brien of the firm of Mayer, Friedlich, Spiess, Tierney, Brown & Platt, who handle most film company legal matters here, with the exception of 20th Century-Fox. A decision is not expected for at least six months.

New Italo-Spanish Pact

Rome, May 1.

A new Italo-Spanish pic collaboration pact has just been signed in Madrid. Deal modifies and extends the agreement between the two film industries, signed in 1953, until Feb. 28, 1957. New pact calls for exchange of 30 feature pix per year, up to five of these to be released in original versions, with or without subtitles.

It also eliminates "twin" productions and calls for more stringent controls of the financial backing of potential co-producers.

British Pix Play Footsie With TV

London, May 8.

The British picture industry is making noises to suggest it wants to come to terms with tele. Trade leaders are now working out a plan to regulate the use of feature entertainment over the airwaves. The plan has been in the talking stage between the four trade presidents during the last two or three weeks. But the issue was forced into the open a week ago when BBC-TV dropped its regular Sunday night drama program in favor of a screening of "Stagecoach."

Acting on the old premise that if you can't beat it, you must work with it, industry toppers are now suggesting that BBC-TV should accept an arrangement whereby they'll be allowed one feature a month. The film would need to be selected from a short list of subjects prepared by the trade itself, and there would, presumably, have to be agreement as to the time and day of airing. In this way, the trade hopes it may be possible to keep top pictures off the air at peak hours.

This new development follows the close cooperation that has been established between the trade and BBC-TV since the beginning of this year. There is regular liaison between the industry and Television Centre, and on result has been the launching of the new weekly, "Picture Parade" program, which is aired every Tuesday night.

EXTRAS' GUILD RETURNS 6 INCUMBENT OFFICERS

Hollywood, May 8.

Six incumbent officers were re-elected in the annual Screen Extras Guild elections. In contests for positions on the Board of Directors, 13 persons nominated by the official Nominating Committee and one independent were elected, executive secretary H. O'Neil Shanks reported. Election thus gave 19 out of 20 positions to the incumbent administration.

Winners were: President, Richard H. Gordon; first veepee, Franklyn Farnum; second veepee Tex Brodus; third veepee Paul Bradley (no opposition); Recording secretray Kenner G. Kemp; and Treasurer, Jeffrey Sayre.

On the board, independent Joe Brooks and Billy J. Williams, Paul Cristo, Tina Menard, Evelen Ceder, Ethel Greenwood, Leo Abbey, Guy Gifford Way, Frank Radcliffe, Kenner G. Kemp, Roy Thomas, Sid Troy, Anna Mabry and Max Reid, of the official slate.

Mex Film Okayed For Cannes After Union Row

Mexico City, May 1.

In a last minute decision, Manuel Barbachano Ponce, producer of the disputed bullfight documentary feature, "Torero," was allowed to carry a print of the film with him when he aired out for the Cannes Film Festival. Pic had been impounded by the local government film export board on a request of the production technicians union (STPC) leaders that it should have been made under their jurisdiction. They claimed the producer had used less expensive, newsreel-documentary union (STIC) people. Interfactional battle has been going on here for some time, with this latest.

There is a pact between the two organizations, which presumably gives STPC control over all features and STIC on all documentaries and shorts. Both unions, however, have crossed lines at various times. Barbachano previously was the center of a similar mixup with his last year's Cannes entry, "Raices" (Roots).

The "Torero case was arbitrated by government film chief, Jorge Ferretis, who forced the producer to pay STPC technical sections a token social benefit of approximately $2,000 before leaving the country.

COL EXTENDS $143,000 SCHNEIDER CONTRACT

Abe Schneider, v.p.-treasurer of Columbia, has been given a new seven-year employment contract believed retroactive to last September when his previous pact expired.

New deal is, in effect, an extension of the previous agreement which gave Schneider total remuneration of $143,000 a year. Exec a few years ago also was given options to purchase 12,500 Col common shares at $12 per share.

BRITISH FILMS ON U.S. VIDEO BORDER MAY SOUR CANADIAN DATES--HOARE

British producers selling pictures to United States television have to be careful not to destroy the theatrical value of the films in the Canadian market, Victor Hoare, deputy managing director of Lion International, the foreign arm of British Lion, warned this week. In New York to make distribution deals for a dozen British Lion films, Hoare called attention to the penetration of U. S. video into Canada via the stations in Detroit, Buffalo, Minneapolis, etc. With Canada an important outlet for British product, Hoare indicated that the situation was causing concern among the English filmmakers.

According to Hoare, British producers look upon U. S. tv as a last resort. "If there is a theatrical deal going," he said, "there is no producer that will go to tv." He admitted, however, that there are exceptions, citing the case of the NBC deal with "Richard III," which he described as "a deal of a lifetime." Hoare insisted that as a general rule British producers only go to tv when they are unable to obtain a suitable theatrical release in the U. S.

Hoare discounted, as far as he was personally concerned, the reports of U. S. opposition to British product. "If we have the right picture, we can make a deal for circuit bookings," he asserted. British pictures, viewed from the standpoint of the American market, have to be divided into three groups, Hoare said. There are those suitable for the second feature market and for tv, the art house films, and those that have mass appeal and can obtain widespread U. S. distribution.

While admitting that British films do not have "a ready market" in the U. S. at present, Hoare said indications are that "we will be getting it." He said he had received a "friendly reception" at the offices of all U. S. distributors, including the major companies. "I haven't run into any trouble trying to sell to American distributors," he said.

Hoare said that British producers have realized that there is no sense in "trying to force" certain pictures which have been obviously made for British Isles consumption. "It would be similar to selling a 'Ma and Pa Kettle' in some foreign countries," he explained. The British film industry, he said, has enough good pictures for the world market without forcing the strictly local product. British Lion, for example, which distributes 15 to 20 pictures annually, rates about 12 as suitable for international distribution.

Hoare has brought over for U. S. theatrical distribution the Boulting brothers' "Private's Progress," which has grossed the equivalent of $1,000,000 in the British Isles and is so far the biggest grosser in British Lion history; William Fairchild's "Extra Day," starring Richard Basehart and Simone Simon and rated a "mass appeal" entry; John Stafford's "Loser Take All," B-L's first C'Scoper starring Rossano Brazzi, Glynis Johns, and Robert Morley and written by Graham Greene, and Herbert Wilcox's "My Teenage Daughter."

Hoare is also high on John Woolf's "The Iron Petticoat," Bob Hope-Katharine Hepburn starrer which Metro will release in the Western Hemisphere.

Hoare has already concluded a deal with Elliot Hyman for four pictures for both theatrical and tv distribution. "John and Julie" went to Hyman's theatrical subsidiary, Dominant Pictures, for theatrical release first. The others—"End of the Road," "Child's Play," "Orders Are Orders," and "Blue Peter"—are destined for tv but may be also released theatrically if Hyman chooses. Another film, "Geordie," has been taken by George Brest for theatrical release and is already playing to good returns in Canada.

As an experiment, Hoare is bringing over "Ramsbottom Rides Again," a British satire of westerns, featuring the popular Lancashire comedian Arthur Ashley. "Ashley is very popular in England," Hoare said, "but I'm not quite sure how he'll be accepted here. Anyway, I'm going to show the film to several distributors."

Hoare, former foreign chief of the Selznick Organization, will spend three weeks in the U. S.

Sam Goldwyn's Slants on Japan

Hollywood, May 8.

Producer Samuel Goldwyn, just returned from the Orient, where he launched "Guys" in Tokyo and Hongkong, returns with detailed views on the Japanese motion picture industry and market.

Of the country's 4,000 theatres, American films play in only 500 to 600, in the larger towns, he said. In a rundown of satistics, Goldwyn declared: 422 feature films were turned out by the Jap industry in 1955; 21 cents (75 yen) is the average admission price, with one-third of this going to the government for taxes; the normal admission in large cities is from 56 cents to 98 cents.

"Guys," on the other hand, is bringing an all-time high price of from 70c to $1.40 (250 to 500 yen, as against the average of 200 to 350). Film, according to producer, is the first musical show ever to be a big hit in Japan, the public usually not understanding the lyrics. "They loved it, thought it was pure Americana," Goldwyn noted.

Annual domestic film revenue in Japan is $92,000,000, producer pointed out. Average revenue of an American picture is between $140,000 and $150,000, although "Roman Holiday" hit $750,000 and Walt Disney's "Living Desert" better than $500,000. "Quo Vadis" also was a big hit, and currently "This Is Cinerama," "Rebel Without a Cause" and "Picnic" are doing turnaway biz. About $300,000 is expected to be cleared by "Guys" in its Jap run.

A total of 877,000,000 Japanese attend film theatres yearly, seeing an average of 10 pix annually. Nation has 684 CinemaScope screens, and 195 foreign films, 70% American—or 136—are shown, Goldwyn reported that so far as he knew, not a single Russian picture is booked. Television as yet has had no effect upon theatre biz, there presently being about 200,000 tv sets, increasing at the rate of 10% monthly.

Jap audiences, "who love American pictures," like "good pictures," according to Goldwyn, "but prefer romantic pictures, pictures of great heart, great warmth."

Stressing that his "Guys" has only played 600 situations in the U. S. since its opening last November, producer stated he would have to get back $10,000,000 to get even. He expects to take "a long time" in playing film, and has "no banks to worry me."

"To make a picture today is not enough," he reported, in commenting upon his personal selling of his film in the Orient, and Europe, and sending a party of femmes throughout the world to drumbeat, "the whole world must know about it."

"Boost a hit," he said, "drop a failure." Goldwyn admitted that he has had his failures, which he preferred to forget. "Paid advertising will not help a poor picture, on the first day." The first day of a pic's showing, he said, gives the answer to the fate of a feature. Somehow the public knows about a film, even before it is shown, he noted.

Only good pictures today do good business, producer brought out. "Anybody making lots of pictures on the theory that their very number will make him lots of money, if they aren't good, is in for a big disappointment," he stressed.

A producer can lose millions on one picture, if it doesn't measure up. Exhibitors look for a way to throw it out if it doesn't do well in the first few days."

Branson to Europe

Walter Branson, RKO v.p. in charge of global distribution, leaves New York Friday (11) for a swing of company offices in England and on the Continent for talks on individual pictures and overall policy.

Concerning the latter, RKO is particularly high on the results of its foreign distribution of "The Conqueror" and will use the campaign on this as a guide to the handling of future releases.

20 NOW OR NEAR; MANY TANDEMED

Hollywood is on a new science fiction and horror-action kick. A total of 20 pictures, either in the space or chiller-diller category, are in release, completed and ready for distribution, or in production.

These pictures, generally modest budget items, sometimes result in solid payoffs. They have a big appeal for the kiddie trade and draw many of the adults as well. In a broad sense, they represent family pictures—the man of the house usually shepherding the offspring to the boxoffice.

The national interest in hypnosis and reincarnation spurred by the publication of "The Search For Bridey Murphy" has also aroused the interest of the film companies. Paramount will film the bestselling book and Allied Artists will offer "The Hypnosis of Diana Love." AA is also preparing for production two other science-fiction yarns —"Not of This Earth" and "The Girl From Beneath the Sea."

The main asset of the spacers and the chillers is their susceptibility to exploitation. They're ideally suited for saturation openings accompanied by extensive radio-tv campaigns covering a wide market area. In many instances, the coin saved in the production is added to the exploitation campaigns. Also such pictures make excellent bookings during school holiday periods or when packaged, two science fiction, two horror films, or one of each. For example, Columbia is releasing "The Earth Vs. Flying Saucers" and "The Werewolf" as a package. Allied Artists joins "Invasion of the Body Snatchers" with "World Without End" and is also tandeming "Atomic Man" and "Indestructible Man."

Col also plans to team "1984," based on George Orwell's successful novel, and "The Gamma People." It recalls success last year with "It Came From Outer Space" and "Creature From the Black Lagoon."

The out-of-this-world films also lend themselves to unique tieups. For example, Metro's "Forbidden Planet," currently in release, is being offered as a premium in Quaker Oats cereal boxes. Premium ducat admits a child under 12 when accompanied by a paying adult.

Universal makes it a practice to produce several of the "wierdies" each year. An annual offering that has turned into a series is the company's "Creature" films. The latest — "The Creature Walks Among Us"—is presently in distribution and is the successor to "Creature of the Black Lagoon" and "Revenge of the Creature." U's upcoming horror slate also includes "The Mole People," "The Deadly Mantis," and "The Shrinking Man." Its recent spacers consisted of "This Island Earth" and "It Came From Outer Space."

Certain of the chiller films display an amazing durability. RKO's experience with "King Kong," perhaps the daddy of the screechers, is the best example. The picture is being placed into theatrical distribution again this summer following a tv outing and an extensive country-wide re-release several years ago. Originally issued in 1933, it grossed almost $2,000,000 in its most recent theatrical release, almost 20 years after it was initially distributed. Similarly, Universal continues to snare dates for its "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" films.

An effort to cash in on the popularity of the "beast" films is presently being made with "Godzilla, King of the Monsters," the Japanese-made film which is obtaining dates in key firstrun houses throughout the country. Picture is being distributed by Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures, with Terry Turner handling the saturation radio-tv campaign, a system he devised with the re-release of "King Kong."

20th-Fox's "Threshold of Space," based on actual research of the stratosphere, and United Artists' upcoming "Unidentified Flying Objects," a Russell Rouse-Clarence Greene documentary dealing with the Air Force's probing of flying saucers, broadly fall into the science fiction category.

UA also has two scarers tentatively scheduled for release in June and July. Aubrey Schenck's Bel-Air Productions is providing "The Black Sleep," featuring such film villains as Basil Rathbone, Bela Lugosi, Akim Tamiroff, Lon Chaney Jr., and John Carridine, and the Nassour Bros. are contributing "The Beast of Hollow Mountain." RKO has "Space Satellite" set for future production.

"Threshold of Space" (20th) and "Diabolique" (UMPO) were runner-up films in that order.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) looms as one of the big new productions from which considerable will be heard from in the future. It teed off in several of first four key city engagements with biz that topped that all previous "Cinerama" offerings. "Miracle in Rain" (WB), also new, was on the disappointing side in many keys.

"Harder They Fall" (Col) started turning in some big to socko sessions the second week it was out in distribution to any extent. "Jubal" also shaped as a hefty grosser based on playdates thus far. It displayed enough strength to finish third once and fifth another time in weekly ratings.

Interest centered on "Birds and Bees" (Par) because it was the first screen effort of George Gobel, who currently is a tv favorite, and previously was best known for his radio and nitery comedy work. Initial week at N. Y. Paramount was obviously not up to hopes, but the distrib subsequently got behind the film with a series of Gobel personals, guest shots on radio and tv in an effort to sell this initial vehicle to cinema patrons.

"Serenade" (WB), while a big hit at N. Y. Music Hall with the annual Easter stageshow, failed to measure up as well on later playdates around the country. However, it did show sufficient stamina to finish seventh one week and place in runner-up category an-

'Flannel' and 'Alex' Top April; Kelly's 'Swan' Floats in Number 3; 'Forbidden Planet' Among 12 Best

It was a chill April with spring held at bay and the boxoffice reflective of conditions; yet the ability of as many features as did hold up was a matter of some gratification in the trade.

"Man in the Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) and "Alexander the Great" (UA) were nip and tuck. Each film came in on an open throttle exploitation campaign and big openings and first weeks were rule for both. Of "Suit" there has been some wonderment about the "Madison Avenue" title outside Manhattan and trade quipsters have cracked that many of the tie-ups constituted a great build-up for the haberdashers. Same kibitizing gentry tended to inquire about the double truck splurges for "Alexander": (a) what would the film do in subsequents and (b) what could United Artists do for an encore exploitationwise, come "Trapeze."

April's 12 Best

1. "Gray Flannel Suit" (20th).
2. "Alex. the Great" (UA).
3. "The Swan" (M-G).
4. "Cine Holiday" (Indie).
5. "Oklahoma" (Magna).
6. "Carousel" (20th).
7. "Anything Goes" (Par).
8. "Cry Tomorrow" (M-G).
9. "Conqueror" (RKO).
10. "Meet in Las Vegas" (M-G).
11. "Picnic" (Col).
12. "Forbidden Planet" (M-G).

But both films pounded in strong, undeniably the pacesetters for the month.

Despite fears of a public satiety on Grace Kelly, "The Swan" (M-G) finished third, viewed as a strong showing since only out on release two weeks during month. It managed to cop first these two sessions although considerably behind both. "Alex" and "Suit" in actual amount of money and individual showings for the month.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) wound up fourth. It was third in March, but some dip was expected in view of the fact that the new "Cinerama" subject has replaced it in four keys. "Oklahoma" (Magna) is moving up to fifth spot, this musical in Todd-AO, being seventh in March.

"Carousel" (20th), which was second in March, copped sixth place last month despite all newcomers. "Anything Goes" (Par) wound up seventh, some exhibs finding it difficult to sell this Bing Crosby-Mitzi Gaynor starrer commensurate with its actual entertainment value. Pic failed to hold up too well on extended-runs.

"Cry Tomorrow" (M-G), which was No. 5 in March, copped eighth money. "The Conqueror" (RKO), with a flock of bookings around Easter, did a nice comeback to wind up ninth. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) copped 10th place although it never was able to rise above seventh spot in weekly ratings.

"Picnic" (Col), which was champion in March, wound up 11th while "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) rounded out the Golden Dozen for the month. "Ladykillers" (Cont), other session. "Hilda Crane" (20th) was surprisingly slow in three initial playdates and just fair in a fourth one. "Touch and Go" (U) was a surprise, strong entry in a number of arty theatres.

"Godzilla" (Indie), a science-fiction thriller, teed off with a nice opening week at the N. Y. State. The type of vehicle requiring plenty of circusing, it got this and paid off despite an offish Broadway trend. "Doctor At Sea" (Rep) continued doing nice to torrid trade in several key cities during the month.

"Creature Walks Among Us" (U) did enough to wind as a runner-up pic one stanza, "Mohawk" (20th), good in Boston, was fast in Buffalo. "The Rack" (M-G), another newie, was fair in St. Louis and stout in Washington.

April in Chicago

Chicago, May 8.

Motion picture theatre admission taxes collected by the City of Chicago during April, 1956, show a slight rise over the amount collected in the same month of 1955. Total for April, 1956, was $95,436, vs. $95,307 in April, 1955.

Total amusement taxes levied in April, 1956, also show a slight gain over the same month a year ago. Amount skimmed off by the city in April, 1956, was $161,452, as compared with the $155,560 collected in April, 1955.

West End Still Hefty; 'Swan' Smash $16,000, 'Concho' Hot 11G, 'Carousel' Lusty 10G, 2d, 'Alex' Great 7G, 6th

London, May 1.

The healthy pace at West End firstrun situations was maintained throughout the last stanza, and a number of newcomers opened in fine style. With the advantage of the Monaco wedding publicity, "The Swan" made a boff start at the Empire, and looks set for a smash $16,000 in its first full frame.

"Carousel" shapes line at Carlton with $10,000 in second week. "Johnny Concho" is heading for a surprisingly sock $11,000 or more in its opening round at the Leicester Square Theatre.

"Alexander the Great" finishes its sixth week of pre-release run at Odeon, Leicester Square with a solid $7,000. "The Harder They Fall" was hot $7,800 or near for its third frame at the Odeon, Marble Arch. "Hell on Frisco Bay" looks nice $7,500 or near in its third Warner week.

Estimates for Last Week

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$1.70)—"Carousel" (20th) (2d wk). Fine $10,000. Opener was smash $11,800 for eight days. Holds.

Casino (Indie) (1,337; 70-$2.15)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Robin) (10th wk). Sturdy $10,300. Stays on indef.

Empire (M-G) (3,099; 55-$1.70)—"The Swan" (M-G). Set for smash $16,000 or near.

Gaumont (CMA) (1,500; 50-$1.70)—"Magic Fire" (Rep) (2d wk). Moderate $3,600. First was $4,000. "Patterns of Power" (Rank) follows May 10.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,376; 50-$1.70) — "Johnny Concho" (UA). Heading for great $11,000.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 50-$1.70)—"Kiss Before Dying" (UA) (2d wk). Fair $4,500. First was $5,100. "Rossana" (UA) preems May 4.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Alexander the Great" (UA) (6th wk). Hot $7,000. Slightly better than previous frame. "March Hare" (BL) follows May 3.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70) — "Harder They Fall" (Col) (4th wk). Solid $7,000. Last week, $7,800.

Plaza (Par) (1,902; 70-$1.70)—"Vagabond King" (Par) (4th wk). Okay $5,200. "Trouble with Harry" (Par) opens May 4.

Rialto (20th) (592; 50-$1.30)—"On Threshold of Space" (20th) (3d-final wk). Steady $3,000. Second was $3,500. "It's Never Too Late" (ABP) bows May 3.

Ritz (M-G) (432; 50-$1.30)—"Last Hunt" (M-G) (2d wk). Neat $3,000, after $3,300 in first frame.

Studio One (APT) (600; 30-$1.20)—"African Lion" (BV) and "Blue Men of Morocco" (BV) (6th wk). Solid $4,300.

Warner (WB) (1,785; 50-$1.70)—"Hell on Frisco Bay" (WB) (3d wk). Fine $7,300 or near. Second was $8,300. "Land of Pharoahs" (WB) preems May 3.

WB Starts 'Old Man' On Location in Cuba

Havana, May 1.

Filming of "The Old Man and Sea" was begun last week at Cojimar, the small fishing village which is the original site of Ernest Hemingway's novel. Picture is being produced by Leland Hayward for Warner Bros. Star is Spencer Tracy, with 11-year-old Felipe Pazos, a bilingual Cuban student, featured. Director is Fred Zinnemann.

When shooting in Cuba is completed, the company will go to New York to film the Old Man's baseball dream.

Rank Opens Office in Arg.

Buenos Aires, May 1.

The J. Arthur Rank Organization has opened an agency here to distribute Rank pix direct instead of through Universal, as formerly. Colan MacArthur, formerly of the Rank organization in Italy, heads the office here. Buenos Aires will be central headquarters for all Latin-America.

"Crash of Silence" (Rank) was released by Universal, under the old pact at the Rose Marie.

Mex City Bans 'Hybrid'

Mexico City, May 1.

Alfonso Luis Morales, female impersonator who bills himself as "Shalimar," probably won't be able to play anywhere in Mexico in view of the local city amusements supervision department nixing an okay for him to fill a booking in a local vaude-revue theatre.

Action was taken on the grounds that his act is "morbid." The National Actors Union endorsed the ban on a nationwide scale. Femme impersonators are not rated popular down here.

Teutonic 'Aunt' Tops German B.O.

Berlin, May 1.

The Teutonic film, "Charley's Aunt," became top grosser in eight West German key cities in March, according to local trade surveys. Runnerup was the Lili Palmer starrer, "Devil In Silk" (Deutsche London), followed by Austria's "Sissi" and France's "Riffi."

"The Congress Dances," an Austrian remake; and "Bath On Thrashing Floor" and "Three From Filling Station," two German remakes, were next in rank. The high percentage of remakes among the German ace grossers seems to justify the substantial remake program of German producers.

In West Berlin's Kurfuerstendamm (preem house) area, U.S. pix continue pacing the field. Currently, six out of 14 principal houses are showing Hollywood pictures, three have German features, two houses each are showing two Gallic and two Italian pix while one film is from the United Kingdom.

Best Yank pic around is "Picnic" (Col). Latter now has passed its third week at Filmbuehne Wien. Capitol preemed "Lieut. Wore Skirts" (20th). Paramount's "Rose Tattoo," at Filmtheatre Berlin, found special attention. "The Glass Slipper" (M-G), at Marmorhaus, was liked mainly because of Leslie Caron, who, via "Lili" and "Daddy Longlegs," has become a special favorite around here. "Bedevilled" (M-G) and "Pearl of South Sea Pacific" (RKO) at Delphi and Metropol garnered only fair reviews.

Ex-Dictator Supporters Stir Trouble on Set Of Peron Expose Pic

Buenos Aires, May 1.

Production is already under way at Artistas Argentinos Asociados (AAA) studios on "Aurora de Libertad" (Dawn of Liberty), from a Sixto Pondal Rios script, based on actual events under the Peron dictatorship and subsequent liberation.

Lucas Demare is directing for producer Eduardo Bedoya, with ex-exiles Arturo Garcia Buhr and Maria Rosa Gallo in the main roles, supported by Santiago Gomaz Cou, Guillermo Battaglia, Mario Passano and Pedro Laxalt. This is figured to be an excellent boxoffice bet, at least here.

Stories leaking out from the set report trouble with technical workers, ex-supporters of the dictatorship (which gave them munificent wage increases every year), who jibbed at the theme. This is unlikely to disturb the producers, because there is enough distress in the industry to make replacements easy. Also, the industry is only too anxious to weed out malcontents, and clear its slate with a public which views it with hostility because so much of the top brass collaborated with Peron.

A "La Morocha" (The Brunette) trailer exhibited recently in a Mendoza city cinema, was received with catcalls, and has been withdrawn. This AAA production starred veteran actress Tita Merello, who is charged with profiteering under the Peron regime.

New Mex Film Workers Prez Plans TV Change

Mexico City, May 1.

Felipe Palomino, recently elected head of the technicians section of the local film workers union, announced the first two moves under his new regime. Most important will be a revision of the existing contract between his union, the STPC, which consists of production workers, and the STIC, controlling technicians in the newsreel and documentary fields. Under an old contract, the unions had agreed STIC would handle all tv film production, but because of recent increases in local video filming, many producers have called for more "pro" technicians. Most U. S. producers filming here demand that they be allowed to select their men from Palomino's union. His suggestion is that a new definitive pact be drawn up between the two unions with the production group given the right to work in some logical ratio on locally filmed video.

Second on his list of necessary changes is a new method of selecting crews to be used in U. S. pic filming. Local production staffs, unlike Yank technical groups, are hired as a unit rather than as individual workers. This method presumably guarantees the producer a better working force, since the group has performed as a unit numerous times previously. However, only two or three of these units are actually getting the calls on the higher paying English language productions at this time.

CEA Vs. Distrib Quota's Revival

London, May 8.

British exhibs have told the Government that they're opposed to the restoration of a distributors' quota and to the introduction of divorcement on the American pattern. These points emerge from the reply by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. to the questionnaire compiled on behalf of the Board of Trade by the National Film Finance Corp.

The CEA pegs its case for a sound British production industry on the guarantee of a secure home market, based on exhibitors' quota and direct financial assistance to producers. But in their overall review of industry problems they underline the toll extracted from the trade by the current level of admission tax, which is running above 32% of their gross earnings.

As a variation from government policy, which has operated from the time of the first Quota Act in 1928, the CEA proposes that the quota should be cut from 10 years to five.

Exhib Situation Unhealthy

Although accepting the principle of continued support for British production, the CEA warns that, unless the exhibiting side of the industry is in a healthier state by the time the Eady fund is due for renewal next year, they are unlikely to continue support on a voluntary basis. If, on the other hand, their position improves by virtue of tax amelioration, they suggest that an extension of the present scheme should be restricted to a two-year period.

The CEA reply to the questionnaire asks for a meeting with the Board of Trade prexy to clarify the undertakings given some three years back in regard to expansion and booking policy by the three major associations; opposes regulated film rentals in favor of the present system of individual negotiation between exhibs and distribs; and declines to comment on the question of U. S. production in the United Kingdom, other than welcoming the production of good films "irrespective of their source."

A Critic's Critic

Vienna, May 1.

Kaethe Dorsch, starring in the Volkstheatre, was very peeved when she read the review of Hans Weigel in a local afternoon newspaper.

So she stood outside the Cafe Raimund, opposite the theatre the next day and when the critic left she approached him. Miss Dorsch asked if he actually was Hans Weigel—and then smacked him twice. Weigel said he will go to court.

Metro Cashing in On Filming Of 'Moon' in Japan; Frozen Yen Payoff

Tokyo, May 1.

Despite many difficulties, Jack Cummings, presently producing Metro's "Teahouse of August Moon," on location near Nara, ancient capital of Japan, is "fully satisfied with my personal decision to make the picture here." Cummings discussed the problems of fullscale production in Japan with VARIETY during a press junket to the recreated village of Tobiki, near Nara. Hegira was attended by about 100 domestic and foreign newsmen and newsfemmes, half of them journeying down from Tokyo as guests of Metro.

This was first such affair sponsored by an American company here and largest of its type ever conducted in Japan. Press was introduced to entire staff, lunched with Metro, stars being scattered among the tables, were taken to Tobiki by bus where they inspected sets and were served tea in the recently constructed teahouse set. Through entire day all stars and technicians were readily available for interviews and pictures.

Cummings discovered Tatsuo Kawashima, who will play the role of the bearded village patriarch, while visiting the old man's curio shop in Kyoto. Other bit players have been secured from the villagers around the rice-paddy-surrounded set in Ikoma, Towaraguchi.

Biggest problem faced by Cummings and Director Daniel Mann is the weather, always unpredictable here. In the six days of work completed, Cummings had 300 feet of film. Next hurdle, Cummings said, is lack of developing facilities. Far East Lab, the only firm here capable of processing color film, is too snowed under with Japanese film company commitments to handle the Metro reels. Therefore, there is a 5-10 day lag between shooting and rush projection as the undeveloped film is air-mailed back to Hollywood and returned after printing.

Sure of Meeting Deadline

Cummings is certain of bringing the film in by his July 1 deadline. Faced with the threat of oncoming rainy season which hits Japan about June 15 and continues almost uninterrupted for 30 days, Cummings has constructed a duplicate of Tobiki on the Daiei Motion Picture Co. lot in Kyoto, 20 miles from Nara.

Cummings and Mann have surrounded themselves with some half dozen Japanese advisers and Mann is most meticulous about accepting their advice.

Despite the difficulties brought about by the remoteness of the location scene, Metro stands to profit from its choice. It will undoubtably be featured in articles being prepared by all the Japanese press and by Louis Berg of This Week and George Delacorte, Dell Publishing prexy, both of whom were on hand for the junket.

Although the cost of shooting under such primitive conditions runs high, all the yen expenses are being paid from Metro's frozen yen account in Japan.

With the arrival of Eddie Albert and Henry Morgan, Cumming's entire cast is assembled. Louis Calhern and Glenn Ford have been here for several weeks and the role of Lotus Blossom, the geisha, is being played by Daiei's Machiko Kyo. Other Daiei actors have small roles and a part has been written in for teenage singer Michiko Sawamura, who scored a hit in Metro's "Meet Me in Las Vegas."

Bible Short in Jerusalem

Jerusalem, May 1.

The 20th-Fox featurelogue "Land Of The Bible," was unveiled here at the European and Middle Eastern preem of this C'Scope short. Opening here at Orion Cinema was attended by Israel President Itzhak Ben Zvi, Murray Silverstone, 20th-Fox International prexy, and members of the diplomatic, consular and press corps.

Shot in Eastmancolor, the short reputedly captured the full physical beauty and some of the spirit of Israel, said the crix here. "Bible" will have sound tracks in 22 different languages for showing as a short in Fox outlets throughout the world.

30% of Brit Pic Costs from U. S.

London, May 8.

About 30% of British film production in the coming year will be either wholly or partly financed by American outfits. That estimate was given by David Kingsley, managing director of the National Film Finance Corp., when introducing its annual report to a press conference here last week. Increased volume of U. S. production was referred to in the report to explain the decline in the number of films bank-aided by the NFFC.

Kingsley estimated that American companies either would make outright or be associated with some 28 British films this year.

In the few years since it was set up in late 1948, the NFFC has advanced almost $34,000,000 to assist British filmmakers, and has incurred bad debts, which have been written off, to the tune of approximately $13,000,000. Substantially more than one-half of that total was lost by the old British Lion Company; the new outfit, wholly owned by the NFFC, will show a profit in its first year, the report revealed.

From 1952, the report shows, that NFFC has financially aided 152 British pix, but only 62 have shown a profit. Of those in the red, 61 will not even be able to repay the 70% distribution guarantee.

As it now takes a slice of profits earned, the NFFC has done well with such pix as "Moulin Rouge," "Genevieve" and "The Weak and the Wicked." Profit participation yielded a return of over $700,000, and enabled the NFFC to wind up in the black for the first time.

Failure of 75 Mex Pix To Get Key Mex City Dates Annoys Industry

Mexico City, May 1.

Mexican film trade is bogged down additionally because 75 films can't find firstrun playdates. Those pix are in the hands of distributors, mostly Peliculas Nacionales, the semi official placer of Mexican films in Mexico and abroad, but also Columbia Pictures which does some world distribution of Mexican fare.

Trade observers point to the fact that here, Mexico's biggest city with a population of 4,005,175, there are only four of the 137 operating cinemas that are firstrun for Mexican fare on opening engagements. It is believed that perhaps two more firstruns for Mexican films would go far towards thawing this stockpile of native pix.

Another reason cited for so many Mexican pix failing to grab initial firstrun dates is the unusually long runs being registered by foreign films. "Rififi" (French) ran 21 weeks (a new mark here); "Madame Butterfly" (Italian-French), 13 weeks, and "Footsteps (Golden Chain) circuit. in Fog" (Col), five weeks. However, the Mexican-made "Con quien andan nuestras hijas?" ("With Whom Do Our Daughters Associate?") has begun its sixth week at the Cine Alameda here, flagship of the Cadena de Oro

1st Metro-Ealing Film Under New Deal Rolls

London, May 1.

First picture under the recent Ealing deal with Metro started rolling at the MGM-British studios in Elstree. A dramatic thriller by John Eldridge and William Rose, "The Man in the Sky" has Jack Hawkins as star, with Charles Crichton directing. Most of the lensing will take place on location at a Midlands aerodrome.

Meantime, Leslie Norman is enroute to Australia to line up production of the second Ealing-MG production, "The Shiralee," an adaptation of D'Arcy Niland's story of an Australian swagman. Production will start near Sydney in July.

'VEGAS' FAST $7,500, OMAHA; 'SUIT' 10G, 2D

Omaha, May 8.

Three new entries are giving downtown firstruns a slight boost this week despite heavy competition from a free Ak-Sar-Ben Show with Dorothy Collins and the Home Show at the new City Aud. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" is the pacesetter, being rated fast at Ralph Goldberg's flagship, the State. "Miracle in Rain" is okay at the Brandeis but "Hot Blood" is sluggish at the Omaha. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is fine in second stanza at the Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Miracle in Rain" (WB) and "Brain Machine" (RKO). Okay $5,000. Last week, "Golden Arm" (UA) (5th wk), $2,500.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 50-75) — "Hot Blood" (Col) and "Deep Blue Sea" (20th). Mild $5,000. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Hidden Guns" (Rep), $5,500 at 70-90 scale.

State (Goldberg) (860; 80-$1.10) —"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G). Fast $7,500, and holds. Last week, "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (5th wk), $2,300 for 4 days at $1.25 top.

'World End' Loud 10G, Seattle; 'Gaby' $6,000

Seattle, May 8.

Firstrun biz continues very sluggish here but some of new films are helping the over-all total. "World Without End" looms fine at the Coliseum while "Gaby" shapes solid at Blue Mouse. Elsewhere, most houses are dragging bottom. "Tribute To Bad Man" is especially slow as the new entry at Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; 90-$1.25) — "Gaby" (M-G). Good $6,000. Last week, "Cry Tomorrow" (M-G). (8th wk-6 days), $3,200.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.25)—"World Without End" (AA) and "Indestructible Man" (AA). Fine $10,000 or near. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col) and "Uranium Boom" (Col), $6,300.

Fifth Avenue (Evergreen) (2,500; $1-$1.25)—"Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Cash on Delivery" (RKO). (2d wk). Dull $3,000 in six days. Last week, $6,400.

Music Box (Hamrick) (850; 90-$1.25)—"Diabolique" (UMPO). (4th wk). Fine $3,000. Last week, $3,300.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; 90-$1.25) — "Alexander the Great" (UA) (3d wk-4 days). Modest $4,000. Last week, $6,800.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,700; 90-$1.25)—"Tribute To Bad Man" (M-G) and "Steel Jungle" (WB). Rather bad $5,500. Last week, "Swan" (M-G) and "Killer Loose" (UA) (2d wk-8 days), $5.700.

Paramount (Evergreen) (3,039; 90-$1.25) — "Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk-4 days). Slow $3,500. Last week, $5,000.

'Bad Man' Lusty $12,000, Buff.; 'Rock' Smooth 11G

Buffalo, May 8.

"Tribute To Bad Man," lively at the Buffalo, and "Rock Around Clock," fine at Lafayette, are standout newcomers here this round. "Hilda Crane" is coming through with an okay session at the Center. "Cinerama Holiday" shapes stout in 14th stanza at the Teck.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)—"Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) and "Manfish" (Indie). Lively $12,000. Last week, "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Broken Star" (Indie), ditto.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 60-80) —"Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "Scarlet Hour" (Par). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Mohawk" (20th) and "Mystery Black Jungle" (Indie), $13,000.

Center (Par) (2,000; 50-80)—"Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Forbidden Cargo" (Indie). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk), $8,000 in 6 days—at $1 top.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 50-80)—"Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Ketchum Desperado" (Col). Good $11,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col) (2d wk), $7,000.

Century (Buhawk) (2,000; 60-85) —"Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Brain Machine" (RKO). Mild $8,000. Last week, "World Without End" (AA) and "Atomic Man" (AA), $9,200.

Teck (Cinema Products) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (14th wk). Stout $14,000. Last week, $15,000.

PULITZER-PREDICTING WALD HITS GOTHAM

Jerry Wald, production v.p. at Columbia, arrived in Gotham over the past weekend to catch the new plays, onceover the opening of "The Harder They Fall," and be on the spot for the outcome of the Pulitzer Prizes. He had predicted "Andersonville" was a cinch to cop the top novel citation. It did.

Wald talked Col into buying the MacKinley Kantor book, at a cost of $350,000, in manuscript form. He since has assigned Irving Ravitch to do the treatment and screenplay. Wald also has "The Last Hurrah" on his schedule.

Production exec has been the subject of many rumors, all having to do with a possible split with Col. Not true, he says. He's staying on the lot except for lots of vacation time due him, including eight weeks this summer which he'll spend with his wife and two boys on their Huntington, Va., farm.

Wald's deal gives him a participation in two pictures which he's called upon to select prior to production. This year he chose "Picnic" and "Fall."

'Knew He Had to Kill Her' Line Okayed in Copy For 'A Kiss Before Dying'

It's all right for a girl on the screen to be pregnant so long as she doesn't use that word in public announcements. At least, that's the stand apparently taken by the Motion Picture Assn. of America in a hassle with United Artists over ad copy for "A Kiss Before Dying."

MPAA's Advertising Code Administrators rejected UA copy for the film, the objection being that the line, "She was pregnant . . . Now He Knew He Had to Kill Her," was too rough. Issue has been resolved with a change in the layout showing the gal proclaiming, "I'm going to have a baby." The "He Knew He Had to Kill Her" part of the ad is permitted to remain.

Change was suggested by MPAA and Roger Lewis, UA ad-pub director, agreed to it.

British Unions Draft Answer On Film Quota

British unions have completed the first draft of their reply to the British Board of Trade in response to the latter's invite to state their recommendations on possible future changes and legislation, including the upcoming quota act.

While a meeting will be sought by the unions in the near future to arrive on common ground regarding these recommendations, it's very likely that they will favor elimination of Eady tax benefits on American or any foreign-made films brought into Britain.

"It's our aim to help promote and protect the British industry," British labor leader Sir Thomas O'Brien, head of Britain's National Assn. of Theatrical & Kine Employees, stated in Gotham Monday (7). "The Eady levy was, after all, invented to directly aid the British industry, and it's only more or less by accident that the Americans got into that. If this Eady cut should be denied them, I don't see why the Americans should be either offended or feel slighted."

O'Brien stressed several times that the argument, that American imports should not qualify for any part of the Eady coin, was not anti-American. "It's simply economics," he said.

British producers, in their advisory to the Board of Trade, are said to be advocating the elimination of Eady contributions to American films made in Britain. O'Brien said he wouldn't go that far.

At the moment, O'Brien said he didn't think the British quota should be changed. "In fact, I'd oppose any move to increase it as being unrealistic," he said.

M.P. Urges Info Center to 'Sell' Brit. Pix in U. S.

Establishment of a British film center in the U.S., to sell British pictures and their stars to the American public, is an absolute "must" and should not be delayed any longer, Sir Thomas O'Brien, British M. P. and labor leader, maintained in Manhattan Monday (7).

He said that, on his return to London, he'd take up the idea of the center with the British unions and the producers and that, should he not find the desired support, he would have to investigate how far the Government was prepared to aid in the creation of a publicity-promotion setup.

In addition, said O'Brien, the British industry should arrange a festival of British films in New York or some other key spot. "It is shocking," he observed. "that after all these years the British have not had a film festival in the U.S. in the interest of a widening friendship between the two countries."

O'Brien said he envisioned the film center as being "above the battle," i.e. unconcerned with the day-to-day selling of the British product. "What we need here—and we need it so obviously that it's amazing it hasn't been done—is an agency that will help educate the public to our film ways," he stated. "We have a tendency to worry about the distributors and the exhibitors. Actually, it's the public we should worry about."

Film fest idea will be put up to Richard F. Walsh of the IATSE and to Eric Johnston when the British labor leader returns to the U.S. in June or in early fall. O'Brien said that, on his return home, he'd explore "how far the British producers are willing to play ball."

Reminded that, in the past, there had been some British producer opposition vs. the establishment of a film info center, O'Brien let loose with a quasi-blast.

"The future of the British industry and the imperative need for close Anglo-American understanding of mutual problems constitute far greater issues than the sectional interests of one group or one person," he stated. "That's exactly the reason why this center must and will be put up one way or another."

British industry execs, along with those of other foreign industries, have always held that the most important key to the American market is the popularity of local screen personalities. Both the Italians and the French have established film centers in N. Y., and the Germans are planning to follow suit.

As far as it's known, the strongest opposition to the idea in Britain has come from the Rank Org's John Davis. Argument is made that, since British pix are sold to a variety of indie distribs, a film center might dissipate itself. However, said O'Brien, "we don't need an office to publicize each individual film. We need a unit that can sell the British picture per se."

As for the quality of recent British productions, O'Brien said he was very satisfied with it. Also, employment among his union members is up, partly due to television. "We have trouble making 'international' pictures," O'Brien commented. "For that we need American stars."

Allied Members 'Too Poor' To Attend Convention

Minneapolis, May 8.

Attendance at next weeks' North Central Allied convention here next week may be down because so many of the territory's no longer can afford to attend the meetings, according to the current NCA bulletin.

But if they possibly can attend, the exhibitor should come to Minneapolis because, says the bulletin, "the convention is the place to oppose the film companies' confiscatory sales policies and the organization alone can save theatre-owners from being knocked off one by one, which will happen to them if they try to fight alone."

Intelligent Censorship of New York Conceded—But Argue, 'Why Any?'

Statistical survey of New York censor activities during the year ended March 31, 1956, has some industry execs arguing that the board has become little more than a senseless burden on the industry.

Noted particularly has been the fact that the N. Y. censor didn't touch any film carrying a Code seal. Nor, for that matter, did it ban any 35m feature of any description during the year. Same situation prevailed in 1954-55.

Arguments about the censor divide into three categories: (1) The majors feel that pix with a Code seal shouldn't be required to have to pay the censor fee. (2) The indies, particularly those handling foreign films, maintain that, like all state censors, the N. Y. board is unconstitutional under various rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court. (3) Some in both camps maintain that it's best to leave well enough alone and to pay the penalty for the sake of having peace.

"If all censors were like the one we have in New York, we wouldn't have much to kick about," was one argument.

Motion picture division of the State Education Dept. collects over $400,000 annually from censoring fees. Gov. Harriman just recently vetoed a move to reduce the censor fee.

While various N. Y. censors, notably Hugh M. Flick, now assistant to the State Education Commissioner, have taken a remarkably liberal and lenient view of film content, they've also been quite adamant in their stand, i.e. that pre-release censoring of pix is necessary. It's generally conceded that the state censors, and this definitely includes the one in New York, are on shaky legal grounds and apparently will go to almost any lengths (short of outright obscenity) to avoid a court contest. Assumption seems to be that each case going to court is almost certain to chip off some of the censor's authority and scope.

New York censor in the year ended March 31 reviewed 1,283 films (35m and 16m). Of these, 653 carried no Code seal. A very small percentage of the no-seal product was forced to make eliminations. Total of such films ran to 40, of which 14 were American and 26 foreign.

Companies argue that it's unfair that, for the sake of 14 out of a total of 738 American films, the entire industry should be penalized.

C-RATE 'NAKED NIGHT,' IMPORT FROM SWEDEN

"The Naked Night," Swedish import released by Times Film, has been given the "C" (condemned) rap by the National Legion of Decency. Stated the Catholic reviewing group: "This film by reason of grossly suggestive costuming, dialog and situations throughout is judged seriously dangerous to Christian and traditional standards of morality and decency. It is completely lacking in morally compensating values."

On the Legion's "B" (morally objectionable in part for all) list this week are United Artists' "The Killing," because of its "low moral tone"; 20th-Fox's "Revolt of Mamie Stover," because "the subject matter of this film, both in theme and treatment, is highly questionable for entertainment motion picture purposes . . . tends to glamorize and arouse undue sympathy for an immoral character . . . contains suggestive dialog and situations"; and, RKO's "While the City Sleeps" because of "suggestive costuming, dialog and situations."

MAIN ST. TAKE-A-CHANCE FANS FEWER: UPS VALUE OF N.Y. BALLY, REVIEWS

By LES REES

Minneapolis, May 8.

Tradesters here increasingly forecast more or less boxoffice "disaster" when meritorious pictures are booked "cold" prior to national pre-selling or before there's the prestige of a Broadway run and its attendant publicity and before judgment has been passed on the picture by the New York reviewers.

This view is expressed regardless of the fact that the picture may boast name stars of proved marquee value.

In these days of high admissions, numerous drains on entertainment purchasing power and of television and more other competition for leisure time, there apparently aren't enough prospective patrons who'll "take a chance" on screen attractions for which they've been insufficiently advance-conditioned.

At the same time, Charles Winchell, Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount Theatres) president-general manager here, points out that product scarcity and lack of the promised uninterrupted flow of pictures make it necessary to play films as soon as they become available much of the time now, even though it's better boxoffice policy to wait with them.

While successful New York runs and favorable New York reviews don't guarantee acceptance or boxoffice clicks here, such advance "conditioning" usually proves an asset, says Winchell.

Winchell also points out that there are exceptions like the recent "Last Hunt" which had its world premieres in South Dakota and in the Twin Cities on successive days and played to big grosses. In such instances, however, there's usually an elaborate, expensive advance campaign on a local level, possible only for premieres. Or there may be some angles in connection with the film's locale to make it a natural here under any circumstances.

Among recent pictures of high quality (for the most part) that have been boxoffice clicks in many or most other situations, but which failed to attain anywhere near their anticipated boxoffice potential here, was "The Swan."

Others included "The Conqueror," "Jubal," "The Harder They Fall," "Meet Me in Las Vegas," "Anything Goes," "The Court Jester," "The Man Who Never Was," "Serenade," "Backlash" and "Miracle in the Rain."

In most of the instances, exhibitor leaders here feel that the unsatisfactory boxoffice showings resulted mainly from the fact the pictures were played "too soon"—prior to New York or before they were sufficiently pre-sold nationally or for both reasons.

FINAL 'MIRACLE' BRIEF IN CHI COP APPEAL

Chicago, May 8.

A final brief in a three-year-old censorship case, involving the controversial "The Miracle," has been filed by the American Civil Liberties Union in the Illinois Court of Appeals. Originally turned down by the Chicago Police Censor Board as "obscene," only grounds on which a feature can be banned here, the case has already gone up to the U. S. Supreme Court which refused to hear it on the grounds that a lower court had not ruled on the pic's "obscenity." Rights to the film were turned over to the ACLU under terms of the late Joe Burstyn's will; Burstyn owned distribution rights for "The Miracle."

The ACLU suit contends that the Chicago municipal ordinance establishing censorship is unconstitutional, that "The Miracle" is not "obscene" and that the city has not produced evidence that the film "would tend to arouse sexual desires in a normal person." A decision is expected within two months, opening the way either for showing of "The Miracle" in Chicago or for a second attempt to get a U. S. Supreme Court ruling on the case.

New Italo-U. S. Co-Production In Cards—Sherman

Hollywood, May 8.

Italian producers will begin seeking co-production deals with Hollywood firms, producer-director Vincent Sherman predicted here, in an effort to break into the U. S. first-run market. Italo filmites, he said, face rising costs and the possibility that the government may reduce or withdraw the 16-18% subsidy—and the returns from the art house circuit aren't enough to return the necessary margin of profit.

Italian films, he added, can recoup their costs in Europe but need the U. S. for the profit. Consequently, producers are looking to circuit operations, such as Fox West Coast, rather than to art houses as formerly.

Sherman, who directed "Scandal in Milan" for Titanus, in Rome, slated to be dubbed in English as well as Italian and French, returned here for the twofold purpose of setting up his own indie outfit and finalize a deal with NBC-TV for production of a telepix series tagged "Cafe 101," which has been in the discussion stage for some time. Pilot is expected to go this summer.

Articles of incorporation probably will be filed this week for new company, which already has three story properties on its agenda, Sherman reported. Initialer is expected to "Smashup," to roll in the Fall. Other two are "Walk With the Devil," scripted by Elliot Arnold and Lew Schorr, which Sherman will make in Italy, and "Two Came By Sea," novel of Tahiti by William Stone. En route back from Rome, producer stopped over in Paris for discussions with French producers on later. Script will require a French government okay for filming in Tahiti, according to Sherman, and in a French co-production deal he's hopeful also of getting a government subsidy.

Sherman also has a verbal commitment with Titanus to direct "Rainy Night," which he originally was to have made before "Milan" suddenly was handed him when two young American actors couldn't be found for "Night." While here, he will try to cast pair, who will co-star with an Italian femme. There is a possibility, Sherman declared, that 20th-Fox may take over release of "Milan" in this country.

NON-THEATRICAL VERSIONS

McGraw-Hill May Distrib Metro's 16m. Library

The McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. is negotiating with Metro to handle distribtuion of the film company's 16m library in the nontheatrical U. S. market.

Terms of the deal call for Metro to share percentagewise in the take. M-G is a newcomer to the field which covers everything from hospitals and schools to penal institutions and shutins.

Most other companies' 16m nontheatrical product is released via Films Inc.

Lady-for-Free A 35% B.O. Boon

Kansas City, May 8.

Borrowing an idea from baseball boxoffice, Fox Midwest Theatres held a ladies day on the opening of "Never Say Goodbye" last Wednesday (2) in its four first runs here, Tower, Uptown, Fairway and Granada theatres. Ads invited men to bring the ladies, cuffo.

Stunt worked to the point of boosting attendance about 35% over average of opening days, and held the gross about on an even keel. Most of the details were handled by Harold Guyett, Uptown manager. Film, dualled with "Day of Fury" went on to give a favorable performance, topping average gross ($13,000) slightly.

Circuit had been mulling the idea for some time, based on big stir made by major league baseball's advent via the Kansas City Athletics here. A suitable woman's picture was awaited and "Never Say Goodbye" got the nod.

Stagehand Changes Signs Thrice-Wkly; Compromise With New York Drive-In

Albany, May 8.

A compromise to employ a part-time stagehand for the signboard changes brought to an end a 19-day strike involving Stage Local 12, Projectionists Local 324 and Fabiau's Mohawk Drive-in on the Albany-Schenectady Rd. The local IATSE stage unit put up pickets at the reopening of the 1,000-car, because it no longer was using a stage hand; the projectionists refused to cross the line. Performances continued with other boothmen.

The Mohawk had payrolled a stagehand for nine seasons, the only drive-in of the Albany area to do so. It tried to make a shift last summer, but the union held to the terms of the long-time agreement and the idea was dropped.

The management claimed there was not sufficient work to warrant the employment of a full-time man. Compromise calls for him to handle thrice-weekly sign changes.

OVER-PRICED MATINEES SLASHED IN PHILLY

Philadelphia, May 8.

Heavy drop in matinee trade in the midtown houses has led to slashing of prices before noon in two first-runs and started speculation about a price war.

William Goldman cut the the admish to 99c up until 12 o'clock at his Randolph Theatre to woo an early audience for "The Swan." Despite sock evening biz, Harry Sley lowered morning tab at Viking to 75c for "Man in the Gray Flannel Suit."

Feeling is that the early matinee shows are over-priced and frightening off trade. Sley has further complicated the picture by opening his Locust, West Philly key, at 11:45 a.m. with a 35c admission.

Theatrical Press Agents 'Typed'

Hollywood, May 8.

Jim Backus, essaying the role of a press agent in "The Great Man," Jose Ferrer starrer at Universal, says after "researching" the part he's concluded New York has two different varieties of p.a.'s, not 57.

"I'm in the first category—a seedy type smelling of bourbon. That's the theatrical press agent type in N. Y. He wears an unidentified lodge pin in his lapel. He's sour, and usually a frustrated writer with a wife who lives alone in the Seventies, and is crippled or alcoholic.

"Then there is the Madison avenue p.a., with baggy pants. His counterpart in Hollywood has baggy knees in Bermuda shorts. He wears narrow lapels and is always about to have a Gibson—that's a gray flannel martini. And he speaks in a jargon all his own," added Backus.

'Not Us, Our Co-Tenant!'

Vatican Film Cooperation Ends, Philly Archdiocese Raps Screen Guild for Link to 'I Am a Camera'

Quel Delicate!

Minneapolis, May 8.

W. R. Frank's neighborhood Avalon isn't permitted by the newspapers here, both under a single ownership, to advertise its current "Intimate Relations" as such. In the newspaper ads the Jean Cocteau film is called "Dangerous Relations."

When previously presented two years ago the picture was advertised in same newspapers under its true name.

Attempt to force a permanent boycott against theatres playing films considered "indecent" by the Catholic Legion of Decency will be revived by the Philadelphia Archdiocese in the wake of an incident involving 'I Am a Camera".

The guilty party, according to a pamphlet sent out by the Philadelphia Archiocesan Holy Name Union, was Screen Guild. Distrib acquired a picture about the Vatican and Pope entitled "The Immortal City" and requested cooperation from the Archdiocesan Vigilance Committee.

Committee agreed to help under the condition that Screen Guild promised it wouldn't handle indecent pictures When the outfit became connected with "I Am a Camera," which SG partner Jack N. Harris said was really distributed by Distributors Corp. of America which makes its headquarters in his office, the Committee clamped down and refused all further cooperation, accusing Harris of "double dealing."

Said the pamphlet: "At its next meeting the Vigilance Committee will define what constitutes 'matter of policy' in the Legion of Decency pledge so that pastors can decide at what point a motion picture theatre within parish territory goes out of bounds and there is to be avoided by Catholics regardless of what type picture it shows."

Pamphlet complained that not only were pix condemned by the Legion numerous enough "but pictures classified by the Legion as partially immoral are increasing in production." It said that "now that the perpetrators of indecencies in motion picture entertainment have won the first round of this fight in the Supreme Court, their guns are trained on the Legion to put it out of business or worse still to have Catholics ignore the Legion."

You-All Censors Can't Bare-All Swedish Film

Albany, May 8.

A court appeal is expected to be taken by Excelsior Picture Corp. from the decision of the Regents Friday (4) which upheld Helen H. Kellogg, acting director of the State Education Department's Motion Picture Division, in refusing to license "Garden of Eden," unless many excisions in four reels of the film were made.

"This motion picture depicts, in color, life in a Nudist camp with many views of nude men, women and children, singly, and in pairs and groups, walking, talking, swimming and playing together," said the Regents' ruling.

"Nudist camps, where permitted, are segregated from the general community, a recognition that the mores of our people and the standards of American decency would be outraged by any such public display," continued the Board.

"These same mores and standards would make the public display of this motion picture in the amusement theatres of the State before a mixed audience of all ages indecent. They constitute, in our opinion, a valid standard for prior restraint."

So holding, the Regents affirmed the action of the Acting Director denying the license, unless they added parenthetically, "the eliminations directed are made."

Sol A. Rosenblatt, attorney for appellant, in an 18-page brief filed with the Regents, as a three-man committee viewed "Garden of Eden" at an April 6 screening, placed great emphasis on the unanimous opinion of the Appellate Division, Third Department, which had been given April 5, in a reversal of the Board's rejection of a license for "Mom and Dad."

Thieves Hit Drive-In

Merrimack, N. H., May 8.

Thieves who broke into the Nashua Drive-In Theatre pried off the door of a 500-pound safe, which had been installed in the establishment only four days before, and made off with $175.

They missed the establishment's weekend receipts, which had been deposited by the manager, Arthur Rosenbush.

Smashing a cigarette machine, the intruders got about 40 packages of smokes.

NEW RAP AT 'DOLLS' % CITES UNNAMED HOUSE

Minneapolis, May 8.

Current North Central Allied bulletin warns this territory's exhibitors they'll be "sorry guys" if they buy "Guys and Dolls" at the terms now demanded and it cites as a "horrible example" what allegedly happened to one theatre-owner.

This exhibitor, whose operating expense is $425 a week, played the picture for a full week and grossed only $660, according to the bulletin.

"Do you want to repeat his sorry experience?" asks S. D. Kane, NCA executive counsel.

2d Blaze Completes Job; Cops Suspect Arsonist

St. Louis, May 8.

The second fire in three days last week completely destroyed the shuttered Powhattan Theatre, a Maplewood, St. Louis County nabe. Cops have ordered an arson investigation. The first fire, originally believed to have been due to faulty electric wiring, damaged the structure $2,000.

Second blaze that brought fire fighting apparatus from several county municipalities was fought for nine hours. The theatre of wood and stucco construction was 48 years old, and was shuttered in 1944. Condemned as unsafe after the first fire.

'YOU CAN'T KID THE KIDDIES'

'Show Trains' (Legit-Opera) Eater-Uppers of Film Space In Columbus and Cleveland

Exhibitors, constantly on the alert to prevent the curtailment of film news in local newspapers, charge that the "show train" promotions of several dailies is encroaching on the motion picture coverage. The situation at present, it's said, is most acute in the Columbus (O.) Citizen and the Cleveland Press although both papers are generally friendly to the film industry.

Point made by the exhibitors as well as distribution pub-ad staffers is that news of the "show trains" are featured on the amusement page of the newspapers, thereby taking away space that previously went to motion pictures. The promotions in both the Citizen and the Press, it's noted, are being handled by the film editors who double as legit editors — Norman Nadel and Omar Ranney—respectively. Both writers, it's claimed, devote considerable space in their columns to the "show train" activities and as a result do not cover films as fully as they have in the past.

Film industryites stress that they are not opposed to the "show trains," but they feel that news of the events should be placed in other sections of the newspapers where it cannot interfere with the film coverage. Said one theatre chain pub-ad chief: "The number of people who can come to New York to see the shows is very small compared to the number of moviegoers in the area the newspapers cover." The "show train" idea it's emphasized is snowballing to the extent that the Columbus Citizen is currently promoting three different show-opera tours of Europe, news of which is all presented on the amusement page.

Local theatremen have protested the practice and have received some assurance from the dailies involved that efforts would be made to report the "show train" activities in other sections of the papers.

The promotions use considerable space since they are started many weeks prior to the event and are reported fully when the local citizens are in New York or Europe.

On another front, the film biz is encouraged by developments in St. Louis, rated as one of the worst newspaper towns for film coverage. The St. Louis Globe Democrat has launched a Sunday 16-page tv-amusement section. Although the section leads off editorially with tv news, there is considerable coverage of film news. The cover photo each week is alternated between a tv and film personality. The industry, in general, has termed the paper's move as "a step in the right direction."

Trib's Willin'

Chicago, May 8.

VARIETY's story about the United Artists' "Alexander the Great" ad campaign making use of double trucks in key cities got immediate reaction from Chicago Tribune amusement advertising director Lambert Swattig.

In reply to the story's subhead "What Do They Do for an Encore?" Swattig says: "We'll be very happy to accept four color double trucks in our Sunday editions. This is the next step up."

COLUMBUS CITIZEN POLICY EXPLAINED

By NORMAN S. NADEL
(Theatre Editor)

Columbus, May 8.

Bulk of our show train promotion is off theatre page. Exceptions are a few columns I have written about our trips, on days when no movie openings had to be reviewed. Protests in Columbus were voiced by Robert Wile, exec secretary of Ohio Independent Theatre Owners. A few theatre men feel concert, recital, amateur drama news shouldn't be on movie page with their stuff. We class all that as entertainment, belonging on entertainment page.

Our stand is this: anything we do to make theatre page well-read benefits theatre page advertisers. Page full of studio or theatre handouts can be dull, doing more harm than good to movie industry. Variety of entertainment news and features, attractively displayed, is more apt to make people read page. Movie men here admit, when pressed, that Citizen gives them more coverage than they'd get in most cities.

FILMS OUGHTA CHEER

By OMAR RANNEY
(Theatre Editor Cleveland Press)

Cleveland, May 8.

Comparative number of inches given to this or that phase of show business is not in itself a gauge for measuring overall reader interest in newspapers' movie-theatre page—which is our main concern.

In covering stage-screen beat, our constant effort is to attract the greatest number of readers to this page. On that basis, some movies are worth more space than others. Some visiting film players are worth barely a paragraph mention, while others are good for a column.

We are always receptive to story ideas from film publicists, but they must be high in reader interest. Unfortunately, many movie tub thumpers have never even seen the picture they are "promoting."

As for our show trains, they stimulate strong subscriber interest in show business in general, tying a good many readers more closely to daily reading of the paper's movie-theatre pages. Space we give them is strictly on that basis. The film people should cheer.

Cinerama Execs at Dallas

Dallas, May 8.

Executives of the several corporations controlling Cinerama were here to participate in the premiere festivities of "Seven Wonders of the World" which made its bow at the Melba.

Included in the group were Harry M. Kalmine, veepee of the Stanley Warner Corp., in charge of theatres; Lester B. Isaacs, director of exhibition; Cliff Giesman, director of group sales; Harry Goldberg, director of advertising for the Stanley Warner Corp.; Everett C. Callow, national director of publicity and advertising for the Stanley Warner Cinerama Corp.

EXHIBS TIRE OF UPLIFT-URGERS

"What our youngsters today expect from film entertainment seems to be a lot different from what some of their more conscientious parents think they ought to see."

Thus, in a nutshell, an exhibitor last week wrapped up his definition of why the kids no longer seem interested in special children's shows.

Theatre operators, plenty frustrated by the recurrent charge that they aren't doing enough to bring "wholesome" films to the younger sector of their audience, say that women's groups and the like, who persistently call for "good" children's entertainment, are barking up the wrong tree.

"The type of features they have in mind may be psychologically perfect, but the kids stay away from them in droves if we play them," complained the exec of one of the large circuits which used to arrange Saturday afternoon kiddie matinees in N. Y. "This may be a tough truth to swallow for both parents and educators, but our youngsters simply reject the kind of film fare that adults decide is 'good' for them."

In Manhattan, only a handful of houses arrange occasional Saturday afternoon kiddie shows, with a specially selected feature and cartoons. In the suburban areas, juve matinees are more frequent, but they're geared to the older group and are uninhibited in their choice of screen material, i.e. they pick mostly westerns.

In several New Jersey towns in recent weeks the biggest hit with the young crowd has been horror pix, such as "Atomic Monster," "Cat Creeps," "House of Horrors" and "Dracula's Daughter."

"They'll go to see that stuff, but you can't get them in for the kind of films that are recommended and made available let's say by the Children's Film Library," said one exhibitor. "It's not that we aren't interested in offering proper shows for the kids. But there is such a thing as the boxoffice, and there is little sense carefully arranging a parent-approved program to which the youngsters won't come. It's about time that some of the women's groups realized our problems, too."

"The problem" referred to goes apparently a lot deeper than just a lack of interest in films. Tied into it are postwar changes in Americans' mode of living and the impact of television.

"It's ridiculous to 'protect' a child from harmful films in the theatres when he can watch—and is allowed to watch—the very same thing right in his livingroom on tv," noted one circuit man. "This 'protect the kids' concern needs some realistic reevaluation. Our youngsters today are exposed to so many influences, they take a much tougher view of life."

Exhibs tend to agree with the women's groups that Hollywood's isn't turning out enough family type films. At the same time, observed a vet theatreman, "we now find that pictures about children are boxoffice poison, at least as far as the kid audience is concerned."

Here and there, an exhibitor will express concern over the lack of the "movie" habit among youngsters. "It's something to think about," said one, "but we aren't going to develop it by listening to the handful of parents who seem to care what their children see in the theatres or on the air. Their arguments sound good, but—when it comes down to it—they're the last ones to give us steady support when we try to practice what they preach."

Lesser Corp. Loses His Name

Name of Sol Lesser Pictures Service Corp., Sol Lesser subsidiary which had been dormant until taken over by Jacques Grinieff a year ago, has been changed to Prudential Motion Picture Co.

Lesser has no part of the company which engages in the trading of foreign films.

'Independent Talent Inheriting Biz' So Why Not Freelance Flacks? Ballyhooligans in Spitball Feud

The battle of the "home" versus the "visiting" pressagents entered a second round this week as the indie ballymen were quick to take exception to the comments of the major company pub-ad staffers. The major company flacks had charged that the independents representing outside producers "hampered rather than helped" the overall campaign for a picture. Representatives of film companies who have become allied with indie producers only recently were most bitter in their denunciations.

In reply to the charges, the "visiting" publicists acidly stated that the major company drumbeaters have been the last to become aware of the revolution that has taken place in the industry whereby "independent talent is inheriting the business." It's noted, for example, that the companies for which the publicists work are sufficiently alert to make the transition and that the pub-ad men, rather than being in the forefront of the changes, are hamstringing them with their "jealous" efforts to guard their positions.

The indie tubthumpers, insisting they render a valuable supplementary service, claim that the film company pub-ad men are operating under a tremendous fear psychology in an attempt to maintain the "old hierarchy." Commented one indie flack: "They are only interested in routine operation. They work under the theory that if you don't do anything, you can't make a mistake. They feel they are vunerable if they make a suggestion that doesn't work out. The job should be daring. Producers are constantly taking chances. Why shouldn't the publicists? They're afraid they might antagonize somebody. As a result, they do nothing."

The indies disputed the charge that they are out to snare the credit. "We don't care who gets the credit," said a rep of an outside producer, "as long as the stuff gets in the papers." The indies' role, it's asserted, is to use the manpower of the major companies and to aid in the direction and execution of the campaigns. It's stressed that the outside press-agent recognizes that while he is present to protect the producer that he is working for the major film company. "They should welcome new ideas and suggestions," emphasized one indie.

The "visiting" ballyhooligans maintain that the offer unique and valuable contributions. For example, they claim they provide all the material, produce the stars when they are needed, take a considerable load off the film companies' understaffed departments, and relieve the distributors of all work up to the delivery of the print. They also, it's said, act as "buffers" and "heavies" in difficult situations with publicity media since the blame for not producing a star can often be shunted to them. In addition, the indies claim, they can take a position in embarrassing situations—such as for or against the production code—without endangering the prestige of the major companies.

The argument of the majors relating to conflicts in the contacting of communications media is summarily dismissed with the comment that it's better for two or three people to get in touch with a newspaperman or radio-tv rep than none at all.

The use of indie pressagents, it's claimed, is a "healthy trend." It's pointed out, for example, that one of the major distributors when it takes on the film of an outside producer insists that the filmmaker hire an independent publicist. The film company, it's noted, can devote its time to the "hard, routine sell" while the indie can provide a plus service aimed at popularizing the picture.

United Artists, which has the most experience in dealing with the outside pressagents, came to their defense. Roger Lewis, UA pub-ad chief, declared emphatically that he has always found them to be "reliable and cooperative" and stressed that in general "they do a great job for the producer and the distributor." Lewis said he found them more often "willing to give credit to the distributor" than anxious to receive the accolades themselves. UA, which deals almost exclusively with the indie pressagents, has had a happy relationship with them, Lewis insisted.

Technicolor 25c Equiv.

First quarter net of $503,904 for 1956 was reported last week by Technicolor. That's equivalent to 25c per share.

During the same period last year, the net was equivalent to 36c per share, and in 1954 it equalled 19c.

"As Usual, 100 Please"

A castle-dwelling Californian orders his Countess Mara Cravats 100 at a crack. Just one of the many well-dressed gentlemen who take pride in collecting these finest of neckties, he likes light patterns. Others have their individual, sometimes rare tastes. For instance, a most successful play producer once asked for a tie covered with hundreds of applauding hands. And a conductor of international note proudly wore phonograph records flying over a pin-checked background, with an obligato of little grace notes. Countess Mara ties tell a good deal about gentlemen. $7.50, $8.50, $10.00, $15.00, and more. Bow ties (clips, and to tie) $2.50 to $5.00. Chi's New Major Status as Focal Point for NBC's News Coverage

Chicago, May 8.

Although Chicago plays but a minute role in the network's programming bill of fare, at NBC at least the web's Windy City news operation has carved out a key niche for itself. As the focal point of a "stringer" setup that embraces 21 midcontinent states for the radio side and 13 states for television, the Chi NBC bureau ranks with New York and Washington as a source of network "copy," which in the case of tv includes newsreel footage.

It was just a year ago this month that NBC set up a separate Chi news arm, installing Chet Hagen as manager of news and special events for the central division. With the advent of "Monitor" and the continuing importance of the regular news shows on the radio web, plus the demand for newsfilm coverage from the tv side, Hagen's department and the list of his hinterland "correspondents" has grown steadily. Additional expansion is in the works with plans to establish fulltime bureaus in other key midwestern news points such as Kansas City and elsewhere.

Recently added to the staff was Walter Pfister brought in to assist Hagen with the homeoffice details. Working the midwest beat out of the Chi office are newsmen John Chancellor and Jim Heulbut backstopped by three cameramen and a sound man.

Network virtually has the midwest blanketed with no less than 91 camera stringers spotted around the 13-state area. Lensers, either local freelancers of staffers with the NBC affiliates, are paid a basic rate per yarn plus so much for used footage.

Hagen's crew feeds an average of eight stories weekly to the regular radio-tv programs, plus about the same number for the weekend "Monitor." Naturally, the activity ebbs and flows depending upon how the news is breaking in the midwest. Aside from being responsible for the hard news in the area, the operation is geared to generate feature material to give that grassroots flavor to the network shows.

Hagen, incidentally, was tossed a first anni party by his colleagues last week.

Danny a Widower

Producer Lou Edelman has killed two birds with one stone in his decision to make Danny Thomas a widower next season on "Make Room for Daddy." For one thing, he's solved the problem of a replacement for Jean Hagen, who has achieved such a strong identity with the show that now that she's leaving it would be difficult to write in a new wife for Thomas.

Better still, he's mapped out his entire new approach for the comedy series for next fall. For with Thomas out scouting eligible femmes, the new story line has his two children, Rusty Hamer and Sherry Jackson, steering him off the dames and getting him out of scrapes.

Pitt KDKA Buys N. Y. Radio Time to Plug Its New Disk Jockey

Out-of-town-radio station have occasionally bought time on the N.Y. outlets to plug shows and personalities for the benefit of agency time buyers, but Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. is going them one better. Company bought a full-quarter hour daily on that station to air taped segments of a new deejay show it has on its Pittsburgh o&o, KDKA.

WBC bought two weeks cross-the-board on WINS at 10:30 a.m. as anchorage for Art Pallan, who does his session for KDKA, with a daily tape being flown to N.Y. immediately afterwards. Pallan, who just switched from Pittsburgh indie, WWSW, is trying directly for the attention of the time buyers.

Pallan, who began his Pittsburgh-to-N.Y. jockeying Monday (7), has begun playing request records for the buyers, and is also giving them the "small town treatment" via name-mentions, etc. KDKA's station reppery, Peters, Griffin, Woodward, has salesmen in time buying offices all along Madison Ave. while the stanza is being aired. They're armed with portable radios—tuned to WINS.

48-HOUR TELETHON ON TAP FOR WABD

Plans for one of the first full 48-hour telethons are being worked out at WABD, N. Y. Station reportedly has Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis lined up as co-emcees.

Stanza, for Muscular Dystrophy, will start Friday night late and run through Sunday evening, if station boss Ted Cott can arrange clearances.

Live TV Payroll In H'wood Upbeat

Hollywood, May 8.

Despite the increase in telefilming, live video employment on the Coast continues at a healthy upswing, according to AFTRA. Moreover the recent "clarification" agreement means "electronic tape should bring substantial increase in production of tv programs under AFTRA jurisdiction" according to Hollywood exec secretary Claude McCue.

Membership in Hollywood, the union's second largest chapter, continues to grow with 4,914 paid-up members as against 3,970 a year ago and 3,339 two years ago. However, nearly 75% of the Hollwdood membership earned less than $2,000 last year. About 9% made between $2,000-$5,000; 7% between $5,000-$10,000; 5% between $10,000-$20,000; 2½%, $20,000-$30,000; 1½% over $50,000.

CROSLEY 'REVIEWING' 'COMEDY HOUR' COIN

Crosley is in the throes of reviewing its sponsor identification with NBC-TV's "Comedy Hour." The network, on the other hand, is in the midst of revising the troublesome Sunday night 8 to 9 show, with Steve Allen heading it up under his name come June 24.

The Avco Manufacturing subsidiary was one of the three participants lured to "Comedy Hour" last year when the network revived that long-running title after a brief reign under the "Variety Hour" label. The other underwriters are Jergens and Brown & Williamson (Tareyton Cigs). The word is that Crosley wants out, but whether this would be before or after the Steve Allen entry is still to be determined.

This Strange Agency Business

Those conflicting network slottings for clients operating out of the same ad agency has created a somewhat awkward situation for J. Walter Thompson as it relates to three of its most prized accounts, Kraft Foods, Eastman Kodak and Ford Division of Ford Motors.

For some months, it has been engaged in a two-fold mission in relation to the first two of these accounts: (1) to upgrade the "Kraft Theatre" series as one of the most qualitative hour dramas on tv, a move which has brought some handsome payoffs in recent weeks; and (2) to transform Kodak's negative contribution to tv into a positive one. The latter, with several millions in billings at stake, has been a particularly sensitive one in view of the fact that the agency has come up with what the trade regards as two Kodak floperoos in a row, the "Norby" series and the current "Screen Directors Playhouse." On top of this has come a third mission, to find a new time slot for one of its top programming success stories, "Ford Theatre," which it has dislodged from its longtime Thursday at 9:30 NBC slot to make way for the new Tennessee Ernie Ford show.

So what happens? First JWT moves Kodak out of its present Wednesday at 8 slot on NBC and places it Wednesdays at 9 on ABC opposite "Kraft Theatre." And as a coup de grace, the agency is talking to ABC about buying up the Wednesday 9:30 period, opposite the second half of "Kraft" as the new home for "Ford Theatre."

Protest Axing of Studio Director Of Senate & House B'cast Facility

Washington, May 8.

A move by House Democrats to grab more patrontage jobs on Capitol Hill is seen as the basic reason for firing Helen B. Coar as studio director of the Senate-House facility which makes radio and television broadcast tapes and films for members of Congress.

A fight appeared to be shaping up to protect the jobs of Mrs. Coar and her husband, Robert J. Coar, head of the facility, who is on the Senate payroll. His wife works for the House.

Despite several other excuses and reasons put forth by Ralph Roberts, Clerk of the House, it boiled down to this:

"I acted on instructions of the House Democratic Committee," Roberts admitted. Rep. Francis Walter (D., Pa.), Patronage Committee chairman, told newspapermen that Mrs. Coar was dropped because she had no political sponsor for her job which pays about $6,000.

What creates confusion in the matter is that the facility produces tapes and films for both Senators and Representatives in the same quarters and using the same employees.

And each chamber jealously guards it's prerogatives from interference from the other. Some talk on Capitol Hill is that the Senate may start its own facility, completely independent of the one operated by the House.

Mrs. Coar is a onetime child star of silent films and her husband is a veteran recording and radio engineer, with considerable Hollywood background.

Several years ago, the Coars operated a radio recording studio in downtown Washington which was patronized by several members of Congress who made tapes and platters for their home districts. They invited the Coars to move their equipment to the Capitol and serve Congress on a large scale. This

Burt Lambert Ankles WABD for WOR Sales

Burt Lambert has ankled sales at WABD, the DuMont tv'er in N. Y., for a similar spot at Gotham radio outlet WOR. Lambert, who had spent several years in local radio sales at WNEW before joining WABD under Ted Cott a year ago, was brought into his new post by Bob Leder, who recently took over WOR management.

Between starting at WABD last June and leaving WNEW, Lambert spent a while in Ziv TV sales.

Arctic Defense Operation Seen Possible Harbinger Of An Int'l Video Setup

Ottawa, May 8.

Intercontinental television may result from today's Arctic defense operations, according to federal officials here. A long-distance communications system they call "Scatter" is in operation in the Canadian Arctic and Alaska to link radar warning lines with distant centers, with a maximum range of 1,200 miles.

"Scatter," which the officials say will carry a tv signal, drives a radio signal at the ionosphere or troposphere layers above the earth. The signal hits and scatters but enough reflection is left to be picked up by receivers hundreds of miles away.

PUREX IN MAJOR SUMMER SPREAD

Chicago, May 8.

Purex Corp. purchased a total of 12 half hours on NBC-TV for a summer sprint. Cleansers outfit, through Weiss & Geller, will take over the Friday night 9:30 (CDT) slot for eight weeks starting next month and has picked up the Saturday night 8:30 half-hour for an alternate week hiatus spin.

Programs for the two periods are still to be selected.

Knomark Buys Third Of Caesar's TV Hour

Knomark Mfg. Co., dropping out of ABC-TV's "Masquerade Party," has fastened its stake in tele for another season by buying in on one-third of "Caesar's Hour" on an alternate-week basis next fall. Knomark wanted to stay with "Masquerade," on which it had skip - week representation, but wasn't satisfied with the show's new time slot and further found itself in an awkward spot when the two sponsors of ABC's "Chance of a Lifetime" pulled a swap and took on sponsorship of "Masquerade" instead.

With Knomark in and Remington renewed, the Caesar segment is now half-sold for the fall. American Chicle and Helene Curtis have ankled their participating segments.

Demise of Quality Seen; Ryan Exits

Virtual end of the Quality Radio Group venture was seen this week in the resignation of Bill Ryan as exec v.p. Ryan leaves the tape-network venture May 15, after having helped organize and run the Quality Group a year and a half ago following his stint as prez of the Radio Ad Bureau. Ward Quaal, president of Quality, said its member stations in the New York area would continue to handle sales for Quality, but with the absence of a full-time sales topper, this was seen as merely forestalling a final demise.

Inception of Quality, comprising a group of powerful outlets mostly in the NBC and CBS radio affiliates camp, was made with the ambitious purpose of giving the advertiser a small but powerful lineup of stations using taped entries in prime hours. Quality pitched up several properties, but few of them ever got off the ground, and the project as envisioned never fully came about.

Dundes Succeeds Fein As CBS V.P.

Jules Dundes, general manager of KCBS, the CBS owned-&-operated radio station in San Francisco, is shifting to New York to rejoin Arthur Hull Hayes, his exboss and now CBS Radio president. Dundes will succeed Irving Fein as vice president in charge of sales promotion, advertising and press information. Fein is rejoining Jack Benny on the Coast as prexy of J. & M. Productions, newly-formed corporation of which Benny is board chairman.

Dundes-Hayes association dates back many years to the days when Hayes headed up the New York flagship radio station of CBS. When Hayes shifted to Frisco Dundes went along with him, and when Hayes returned to N. Y. last year to helm the network radio operation, Dundes was appointed to the KCBS managerial post.

Succeeding Dundes in Frisco will be Henry Untermeyer, who is the present sales manager of WCBS in N. Y.

Philco's 1st Quarter Drop

Philadelphia, May 8.

Philco Corp. sales and earnings showed a drop in latest quarter as compared to similar period of last year. Sales eased to $92,476,000 from $96,825,000 in the 1955 segment. Net income fell to $1,517,000, or 38 cents a common share, from $2,447,000 or 62 cents a share one year ago.

Accompanying the report was a statement by William Balderson, chairman, and James M. Skinner, president, that "competition in the field is more intense than any previous times in recent years."

Swezey's 'Jukebox Station' Swipe Brings Buckley, McGrath Rebuttal

Boston.

Editor, VARIETY:

It's a pity one of Bob Swezey's stature should make such a thoughtless attack on a part of the industry which has brought him so much prominence. Boston was a much safer location for this "holier than thou" address to the women broadcasters of the country than say Chicago, where a few days earlier the NARTB assembled the victims of Swezey's evangelism. Women broadcasters can only purr over such overtures, but the station operators are capable of answering back. It may have been intriguing but actually ungallant to romance a group of 600 women with a problem over which they have no control rather than accept the opportunity of the preceding week when such purported evil could have been placed squarely in the laps of the accused.

It is possible that Bob has been giving more effort to speeches than to his radio operations, a current malady affecting some of those who are suffering from sudden exposure to the "quick bucks" of an associated television operation. This must be else he would not have allowed himself to be found in such a vulnerable position.

In the nomenclature of the trade an unfortunate labeling has developed—"music and news." It implies to some that stations who feature popular recordings and frequent newscasts are not much better than jukebox operations. It could well be pointed out to Mr.

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

In his recent speech before the American Women in radio and tv in Boston, Robert Swezey was as wrong about today's successful radio station as was his illustrious network predecessor, Deke Aylesworth, when he wrote his immortally wrong article about radio's future in 1949 entitled: "Radio Is Dead!".

If Mr. Swezey hadn't been involved, the words in Boston would not have merited more reaction than a shake of the head; just another case of a "radio man" whose principle contribution to "radio in its good days, and its glorious moments" had been to plug in the network line and let the commercial programs roar day and night. Yes, sir! Those soap operas hour after hour, day after day, were pretty glorious, weren't they, Bob?

Mr. Swezey's speech is disturbing because he is an extremely intelligent human being. Anyone who knows him, knows that! I, for one, can't make the person in this one particular case jibe with the words that came out of his mouth, so it would be most unfortunate if anyone anywhere were influenced by them.

Mr. Swezey was most unjust when he judged all radio from the standpoint of the least able. Radio is a big business. With hundreds of stations, there are bound to be some excellent, some good, some fair, and some bad. The same as with any commercial enterprise,

INSIDE TV: ALL 'OUTSIDE' BUYS

Can't Keep Tabs Without Scorecard

Here's the lineup of program buys thus far this season for next fall. Out of 12 new programs set, eight are completely "outside," two are in-between borderline cases, and two, hour and 90-minute lengths, are "inside," i.e., network owned and controlled.

Program	Network	Producer	Sponsor	Time Slot

Mountain Climber With a 'U'

Bill Putnam Bemoans Fate as Springfield Newspapers Give Him Silent Treatment

In Springfield, Mass., William L. Putnam is identified as "a local mountain climber." At least that's all the recognition the local newspapers will give him, he maintains.

Putnam, youthful operator of WWLP, one of the two UHF'ers in Sprinfield, says he's been getting the works—or lack of them, would be more precise—from the nabe dailies since the station went on the air in 1953. He feels that generally not only he—but his station—gets the "silent treatment" by the papers. Only time he can recall their mentioning his name was when they were listing the names and titles of all members on the local United Fund budget committee of which he was chairman. Put at the bottom of the list, that was the time he became "mountain climber," a monicker, in fact, which is accurate, since it's his fave pasttime.

He insists the local print boys simply skip listing many of WWLP's live local video stanzas in the daily logs; they don't even list all his news shows, he says. He adds that the vast majority of stories about the various tv shows that hit the town are about shows

Bob Colwell In Return to JWT

Linked with the departure of Bill Griffin from J. Walter Thompson to head up the creative operation at Kudner agency as senior vice president is the revelation that Bob Colwell is relinquishing his partnership at Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles to return to the JWT camp. Colwell left the agency some years back to help form the new agency and move in on a management level.

Like Griffin, considered one of the top creative men in the agency and a singular coup for Kudner, Colwell's flair with a piece of creative copy made him an undisputed "man of distinction" among his agency brethren in the days when he helmed the JWT copy writers.

Colwell has been vacationing for the past few weeks with official confirmation on his SSC&B exit not forthcoming until this week. He moves over to JWT about June 1 as the agency's overall creative braintruster.

Gillette's Summer Ride

Gillette will ride through the summer months with its Friday night NBC-TV boxing card for the first time this year. Razormaker normally goes off in June, but this year will continue through on both radio and tv for 10 extra weeks, the new cycle beginning July 6. Gillette apparently feels that the International Boxing Club can book enough bouts of interest to sustain the summertime audience.

Business was set via Maxon agency.

CBS-TV Sat. Grid Razzmatazz As Answer to NCAA

CBS-TV news & public affairs chieftain Sig Mickelson has come up with some grid-slanted electronic razzmatazz which he plans to throw against NBC's Saturday aftternoon NCAA football competition. Mickelson presided over a closed-circuit tv unveiling last week in which he presented the eight-week sports spec presentation to the affiliates. If enough of the affils buy the idea—and it's

Dodge Loves That Welk, Gives Him Second Show

Dodge dealers, which canceled out of the Danny Thomas "Make Room for Daddy" series and is a sure bet to drop "Break the Bank," made it even-steven-plus with ABC-TV by picking up an extra hour on Mondays with Lawrence Welk to more than counterbalance its two cancellations, since on one of them it was an alternate-week sponsor. The second hourlong Welk showcaser will feature teenage talent, airing in the Monday night 9:30-10:30 hour following Bishop Sheen.

Welk's Saturday hour for Dodge continues to boom, with the last-time-out Nielsen giving the hour a 32.5 total audience. Grant agency set the deal for the Monday hour, figuring it might as well make the most of a good thing. Starting date will probably be Sept. 3.

A FIELD DAY FOR PACKAGERS

There's more than casual significance in the fact that practically every tv network program sale for next season represents "outside" program buys. This hasn't happened in a flock of years. What makes the situation even more intriguing is the fact that NBC and CBS collectively have spent somewhere in the neighborhood of $3,000,000 on new pilots on projected film series designed for showcasing next season, with likelihood that only a bare handful will pass muster. Virtually all of the network-owned pilots screened thus far have been rejected as unsatisfactory by the webs' high command.

Thus the trade is asking: Are the so-called "outside" buys deliberate on the part of the networks in view of the fact that they're currently on the D. C. hot seat in the wake of Congressional "monopoly" accusations? The networks say, in effect, "Absolutely not; it's just a case of weighing our own product against those purchased on the outside and we find our own wanting."

Whatever the reason, for the first time in years the "outside" packagers, and particularly the telefilm producers and distributors, are having a comparative field day. Not only are they responsible for virtually all the new program buys by the network sponsors, but for the first time in at least three years, they've been able to sell programs directly to the networks themselves. Cases in point: "Circus Boy," purchased by NBC from Screen Gems; "Sir Launcelot," bought by NBC from Official Films. With the sole exception of "My Friend Flicka" last year in the 20th-Fox to CBS-TV deal, this is the first time in at least three years that a network has committed itself to buy a series of 39 films in which it doesn't have a financial stake and for which I didn't have a sponsor all lined up and waiting.

By and large, it's been the film syndicators' year thus far. Of 10 new half-hour shows already set for the fall, eight are film, and of these four are from the syndicators while one is a network co-production property and three are out of agencies or indie producers. The lineup reads Official Films, two ("Launcelot" and "The Buccaneer"); Ziv one (its first ever on a network), "West Point Story"; Screen Gems, one ("Circus Boy"), Indie is the Julian & Sol Lesser "Journey" for Ralston-Purina on ABC-TV. Coproduction is the ABC-Lou Edelman "Adventures of Jim Bowie," while the agency-originat-

NBC-TV's Whoppers As Brillo Buys 'Matinee,' NCAA Grid Hits SRO

NBC-TV pulled in a couple of kingsized "lifesaver" orders this week, chalking up one of its largest single sales yet on "Matinee Theatre" and at the same time rounding out sponsorship of its fall NCAA football schedule. "Matinee" deal is with Brillo, for a 52-week alternate-week run of two participations a week on the Burbank-originated tinter. Brillo deal comes at a particularly critical time when the web's program brass is reappraising prospects of the hour drama series for next fall.

Football sponsorship is on a sell-out basis for the web's eight national contests and a half-sold status for the five regional games. In addition to the previously set Sunbeam and Bristol - Myers quarter - sponsorships, NBC has signed on Zenith and U. S. Rubber to one-quarter sponsorship of the national frays, spelling a sellout in that quarter. On a regional basis, Sunbeam and U. S. Rubber will each sponsor a quarter of the five tilts, giving them a half-sold status.

Livingston's Modus Operandi For NBC's Kagran, With Major Accent On Telefilm, Theatrical Production

No Twofers for CBS

Suggestion tossed into the CBS-TV program board meeting hopper:

"No reason at all for CBS to lose any more sponsors; at least not for duration of run of 'My Fair Lady' (of which CBS owns 40%, entitling it to four house seats every night).

"If a client threatens to cancel, four tickets to the smash musical should do the trick.

"Alternate sponsors, of course, would only get two."

NBC's reorganized and expanded Kagran Corp. subsidiary will lay its primary emphasis on telefilm and motion picture production, with other phases of it's operations taking a subsidiary aspect. So says Alan Livingston, newly appointed prez of the subsid. Livingston further points out that the company will be independent in nature and will not take the form of a "catch-all" for the network to cover loose ends not directly connected with networking.

On the contrary, Kagran's operations will be limited to four fields: film production, film syndication, theatrical (legit) financing and licensing-merchandising. Of these four, the main accent will be on film production, both telefilm and feature film, with the majority of production for television. In this department, Kagran will produce under it's own banner and with it own facilities new programs for national sale (to networks and to sponsors for network use), programs for syndication and below-the-line or physical production for all NBC network film shows.

Company as yet has no specific properties ready — Livingston in fact says he's receptive to all ideas and projects—and the first order of business is the acquisition through rental, lease or purchase of a complete studio or several stages on the Coast. Kagran is already close to a deal for exclusive use of four stages at the California Studio (Gross-Krasne), but is dickering to buy out the entire nine-stage lot. It's figured that it will take two or three months to firm up a purchase; after that would come the staffing of the studio and creative staff, with the timetable on this calling for completion by the end of the year.

Emphasis will be on national sale of its new properties, either directly to networks or to advertisers who will then place the shows on the webs. Kagran of course hopes

'Jack & Beanstalk' As Musical Spec For Mary Martin?

A pre-Thanksgiving Day "Jack and the Beanstalk" spec is being plotted by NBC-TV. It would be a musical version on a Monday, falling into the "Producers' Showcase" trough, but extended from that slot's regular 90 minutes to two hours. Helen Deutsch, vet scenarist, has been assigned to do the book, with music by Jerry Livingston, who popped 'em out for Walt Disney's animated "Cinderella" (RKO) some six years ago in collab with Mack David and Al Hoffman. Livingston will bring in a minimum dozen songs. He and Miss Deutsch are the packagers in control of the film rights of the television.

The network would like Mary Martin for the name role, with Boris Karloff a possibility for the ogre in the folk tale. NBC figures it has another "Peter Pan" in the opus.

"Beanstalk" has had several nontune celluloid versions, one of them as far back as 1917 in a Fox production. Latterly, there was a '52 musical edition in color produced by Alex Gottlieb (for Warners) starring Abbott & Costello, with songs by Bob Russell and Lester Lee.

ALUMINIUM BACK ON 'OMNIBUS' RIDE

First "Omnibus" sponsor to renew for next fall's series on ABC-TV is Aluminium Ltd. of Canada, which is coming back for a quarter of the program in its new Sunday night slotting. With the Aluminium renewal under their belts, the ABC sales boys are now hitting up J. P. Stevens & Co., with prospects for the textile house's return said to be good.

Status of Scott Paper, the third of this season's sponsors, is still iffy, even though it's been indicated that Scott will withdraw. Paper house is said to have failed to reach a final decision on the show, mulling it in connection with the future status of its "Father Knows Best" series on NBC. Even if ABC signs Scott, it still must get another sponsor before hanging up a complete SRO sign.

Biow's Industrial Plans Following Liquidation

The Milton (Melisse) Biows sail today (Wed.) on the Queen Mary for a European holiday, to include England, France and the Lido-Venice and upon his return the founder of the Biow Co. may engage in some consultative work, directorship of companies, and the like.

He is liquidating the ad agency bearing his name and, as he approaches 70, he is content to "take it easier."

Aaron & Zousmer NBC-TV Dickers

NBC-TV may have its own answer to "Person to Person" next season—and under the same John Aaron-Jesse Zousmer production auspices, though obviously without the services of Ed Murrow, whose CBS identity is on an exclusive basis.

It's known that Aaron and Zousmer, who have no such exclusive ties with CBS, except where "Person" is concerned, have had some talks with the NBC program braintrusters with an eye toward evolving a full hour show premised to the on-the-spot, actuality format. If negotiations jell, it's understood it will go into the Tuesday night 9:30 to 10:30 period, possibly as a replacement for the Armstrong-sponsored "Circle Theatre" (whose dramatic entries also are in the actuality-concept in programming).

CBS-TV PLANNING HAROLD ROME SPEC

CBS-TV programming chieftain Hubbell Robinson Jr. is negotiating a deal with Harold Rome to compose an original tv score for a musical adaptation of "Mary Poppins," based on the w.k. series of English books, on which CBS owns the tv rights. Paul Osborn would do the book adaptation.

"Poppins" is slated for a showcasing on next season's "Ford Star Jubilee" scheduled of 90-minute attractions. It would be the initial tv contribution for Rome, composer of the current "Fanny" musical on Broadway.

$15 TV License Fee Proposed For Can. Set Owners As Income Shrinks

Ottawa, May 8.

Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s suggestion that license fees for operating radio and television receivers would be the best method of financing CBC's operations in the future, and a demand by the Canadian Assn. of Radio and Television Broadcasters for an independent body to regulate radio and tv in Canada, were bill-toppers at the initial hearings of the Royal Commission on Broadcasting in Ottawa this week.

Besides the briefs from CBC and CARTB, latter representing privately-owned radio and video stations, the commission heard from Canada's new million-member Canadian Labor Congress, formed last week by merging two separate labor groups. Commission shuttered its Ottawa sittings last week and moves on to Winnipeg and other western cities before returning to Ottawa in September to reopen sessions.

Because it's headed by R. M. Fowler, president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Assn., it's called the "Fowler Commission" and was set up to probe CBC operations and financing. It will hear briefs and opinions from any group or individual interested in the subject before it closes down in the fall and submits a report to the federal government, probably by December.

First brief was from CBC, augmented by the corporation's chairman, A. D. Dunton, who said CBC opposed an independent tv authority along the lines of the supplementary web in the United Kingdom. "Good broadcasting," said Dunton, "comes not through regulation but through the responsibility of the broadcasters themselves." He believed an independent authority would divide responsibility from authority.

CBC, he said, doesn't compete with private stations in Canada but if the private stations and CBC were ordered into competition, he claimed the corporation could do so easily. He didn't suggest it happen, but CBC would be ready if it did and would set up stations of its own in areas now served by the CBC web through non-CBC outlets.

CBC is currently financing its video operations on revenue from a federal 15% excise tax on each tv receiver sold, but sales are dwindling, said Dunton, and something else would have to be set up. He believed the best source of such revenue would be an annual license fee of $15 per tv set to allow CBC to provide adequate English and French coverage to 75% of the population for the next 10 years. He based these figures on CBC's 1952 financial estimate. That, however,

Lou Cowan's New CBS Inc. Status

In his new status as one of the free-wheeling veepees operating off the 20th floor corporate shelf at CBS, Louis G. Cowan, designated as vice president—Creative Services—will spread himself into the three areas of television, radio and Columbia Records. He will also function as a member of the CBS Editorial Board.

In a memorandum issued to the heads of all operating divisions over the weekend, Frank Stanton, prexy of the CBS corporate setup, stated that Cowan will be responsible for assisting executive, operating and service management in obtaining maximum effectiveness in each of the company's operating divisions having to do with the creative product. Memo points out that to avoid any misunderstanding, Cowan has no direct operating responsibilities in the creative field; rather his position is advisory to both board chairman William S. Paley and to Stanton as president and, upon request from the divisions, to CBS Radio, CBS-TV and Columbia Records.

Cowan joined CBS last August as supervisor of the network's 7 to 9 brace of morning programming. What was then a $2,000,000-a-year losing proposition now appears headed for the black.

The Weekend Trendex

It was NBC-TV most of the way over the weekend, with the web clobbering the Noel Coward-Edna Best "This Happy Breed" spec on the CBS "Ford Star Jubilee" Saturday; the Perry Como hour the same night following the now-familiar pattern of dominating 8-9 but losing out in the first half to Columbia's "The Honeymooners."

"Happy Breed" pinned up a 13.6 average for the 9:30-11 span, as compared with NBC's 22.9. The half-hour breakdowns showed ABC-TV's Lawrence Welk dominating the 9:30 period with a 19.3 Trendex, NBC's Jimmy Durante next with a 17.3 and "Breed" just behind with 15.1. The spec lost audience, coming up with a 13.5 for the 10 p.m. period, way behind George Gobel's 25.1 but up ahead of ABC's "Chance of a Lifetime's" 11.9. In the final third, "Hit Parade" registered a 26.2, against "Breed's" 12.3, with ABC dark.

Earlier in the evening, "Big Surprise" took the laurels from CBS' "Beat the Clock," 18.6 to 14.7. Como averaged 28.8 on the hour, against the "Honeymooners" - "Stage Show" 18.9 average, but "Honeymooners" was on top for the 8-8:30 slot, 23.7 to 20.7, with the singer doubling "Stage Show" in the second half, 28.8 to 14.0. ABC's "Ozark Jubilee" averaged out to 6.2 in the hour and a half.

SRO for 'Stanley', 'Launcelot' Series

NBC-TV pinned up the SRO shingle this week on its two new Monday night entries in the 8 to 9 block, "Sir Launcelot" and "Stanley." The Sid Caesar replacements (Caesar shifts to Saturdays at 9 in the fall) both embrace a dual sponsorship setup. "Launcelot" has been signed on by Whitehall Pharmacal and Lever Bros. for an alternate-week ride, while "Stanley," Max Liebman's new Buddy Hackett starrer, has been signed by Pall Mall and Helene Curtiss, the former funneling over its "Make Room for Daddy" coin from ABC-TV to take on the new show.

While the two program deals solve NBC's Monday night problem, the web has encountered a sponsorship hurdle on the Caesar show itself. American Chicle, one of this season's bankrollers, has bowed out completely, while the Curtiss "Stanley" buy spells the end of the cosmetic house's stake in the Caesar show. Chicle, it's understood, has already served notice of cancellation and will concentrate its coin in ABC-TV's "Jim Bowie" plus another alternate-week half-hour, probably "Ozark Jubilee." Meanwhile, Remington has renewed its third of Caesar and Knomark Mfg. (Esquire Boot Polish) has picked up one-third on alternate weeks.

TARCHER & BENRUS IN SHIFT TO L&N

Benrus Watch account, one of the remaining question marks left at the soon-to-fold Biow agency, switches to Lennen & Newell, effective July 1. Key to the move is Jack Tarcher, who shifts to L & N that date as a senior v.p. and management account supervisor, bringing the watch business, with which he's been associated for 32 years, with him. Tarcher was a Biow v.p.; before that he operated under his own shingle with Benrus as the key account.

Little more than a year ago, Benrus was a key factor in keeping the Biow billings at an even keel, for when Terry Clyne decamped for the McCann-Erickson agency with the Bulova billings in hand, Tarcher brought Benrus into Biow, thus maintaining a semblance of status quo.

WISN's New Home

Milwaukee, May 8.

WISN and WISN-TV, Hearst-owned stations, are getting a new $1,250,000 home. Work is to start soon on the two-story building which will house two tv and two AM studios and the exec offices.

New setup will be laid out and equipped for color tv.

Cleve. Newsmen In a Stew Over 'No Radio-TV'

Cleveland, May 8.

A five-man, fact-finding committee, has been picked by the Cleveland Newspaper Guild to investigate a newspaper publishers' ban prohibiting newsmen from appearing on radio and tv programs.

The ban has already forced off the air such names as W. Ward Marsh, Plain Dealer film editor, who had authored a series of tv scripts, and Franklin Lewis, sports editor of the Cleveland Press. At the same time, the Plain Dealer and the Cleveland News, both owned by the Forest City Publishing Co. whose president, Sterling Graham, is on the Board of Mutual Broadcasting, refuses to sanction its newsmen appearing as panelists on KYW's "Press Club Presents" a weekly half-hour public service stanza emanating from the Press Club.

The boiling issue began crystalizing when "Press Club Presents" first went on the air and a group from the Club talked to the three editors. The Cleveland Press' Louis Seltzer okayed public service appearances by his staffers and Press reporters have been regular panelists with more than a dozen reporters having appeared. Recently, another move was made to have the two other sheets relent and the News' N. R. Howard, temporarily agreed, but later reversed his decision. Meanwhile, Wright Bryan, editor of the Plain Dealer, told VARIETY, the issue "is one between the editor and reporter, and I have no comment."

Newsmen believe, the Plain Dealer holds the key to participation by both Plain Dealer and News personnel.

The Guild's five-man committee,

Tom Duggan 'Needling' Invites a 300G Suit As Sponsor Is Yanked

Los Angeles, May 8.

An aftermath of the incident which found auto dealer Jack Johnson losing his sponsorship of Tom Duggan, because the uninhibited commentator needled him into blasting biz practices of other dealers, found Johnson suing KCOP (TV), here, for $300,000. The Superior Court suit asks $150,000 for breach of Johnson's 13-week contract and another $150,000 damages for sale of his participation to a competing dealer.

Last month, when Johnson decried "shoddy" practices of other dealers in remaining open Sundays, despite a local agreement to the contrary, Duggan incited him to name names on the air. The suit alleges that after he fingered two dealers, both heavy KCOP advertisers, he promptly found that he was no longer sponsoring the commentator. Johnson has suffered loss of goodwill and reputation as a result of the cancellation and the subsequent sale of his participation to a competing dealer, he charges.

HAZEL BISHOP'S 520G 'MONITOR' SPLURGE

Hazel Bishop, which over the past several months has been funneling more and more of its ad coin into radio, threw some largesse NBC's way this week with a $520,000 firm-52-week order for weekend newscasts on "Monitor." Cosmetic house bought 10 five-minute newscasts, five each on Saturdays and Sundays, starting May 26.

Order was placed through the Ray Spector agency.

Doerfer's Equal-Time Stance

Milwaukee, May 8.

"Insincere, publicity-seeking political candidates" were cited as one reason why FCC Commissioner John C. Doerfer advocates the junking of equal time for politicos.

In a filmed interview carried on WTMJ-TV here last week, Doerfer said, "I think Congress should repeal Section 315 of the Communications Act which requires that broadcasters give equal time to all political candidates. It sounds good, but in practice it defeats the objective because anyone who qualifies as a political candidate would be entitled to equal time.

"In some cases, that results in so many people declaring themselves candidates that there is no broadcasting station—radio or television—which can afford the time. Nor do I think that people spend that much time listening to all those who aspire to public office.

"Unfortunately, many people are not sincere in running for office, especially if there is a chance to be seen and heard on television. They are primarily interested in publicity for themselves and their particular occupation. Hence the public is deprived of the opportunity of seeing and hearing those who have a sincere interest in running for office and serving in the event they are elected."

Ampex Boon to Politicos?

'Better Than Kine' Tape Seen Easing Plight of Networks in Election Year

The advent of Ampex video tape is expected to have its political ramifications. The "better-than-kine" tape device which broke big at the NARTB Chi convention is believed capable of opening new vistas for the Washington speechmakers, most particularly for the President—getting them to tv audiences they can't always reach.

Habit of telecasters has been to run an Eisenhower reports to the nation on all stations at the same time. A N. Y. tv operator, whose station carried the Ike statements at precisely the same time as the network competitors, feels that the simultaneous showing on all stations is not only unnecessary duplication but deprives a good part of the non-liesure tv audience a chance to see and hear the speech in its entirity. Since kinnies haven't been of the best quality all along, some stations resisted the idea of delayed showings of Ike speeches, and the cost of film being relatively high, many other outlet managers shunned later exposure of the celluloid versions. Tape offers clarity, the N. Y. station exec said, so that the Presidential talk can be carried any time without impairing quality. And, he added, that once beyond the initial expenditure for tape equipment, the cost of operation is rather low.

In the straight network area, Ampex and other machines of its ilk can ultimately ease a dangerous situation for NBC, CBS and ABC. Solons have lately been complaining that panel shows haven't been getting very good time commitments from the webs; most of the from-Washington info shows are in times when either the station has option to refuse them or at times when sets-in-use figures are nominal. However, use of tape will afford stations elasticity, enabling them to fit these programs into the sked at the best times possible, thus obviating many Senatorial gripes.

BMI Clinics Resume

Second half of the Broadcast Music program clinic series began in Des Moines and Trenton, N. J., last week. Three traveling teams of about seven men each, supplemented by 42 local execs, will complete the current annual cycle by June 15.

First of the BMI sessions were completed prior to the NARTB Chi conclave. They were followed by a month-long hiatus.

Favor ABC-TV Tie To Mex Affiliate

Washington, May 8.

American Broadcasting - Paramount Theatres should be permitted to switch its affiliation from KFMB-TV, in San Diego, to XETV, in Tijuana, 15 miles away in Mexico. This was recommended last week by the Broadcast Bureau of the FCC.

KFMB-TV, who now carries both CBS and ABC programs, has been opposing the change since the FCC first proposed to okay it, back in November 1955. The San Diego station contended it would suffer financial loss. It further charged that the Mexican station was violating some Mexican regulations by offering most of its shows in English and beamed to the U. S., and that XETV also had carried programs which are in violation of FCC regulations.

Broadcast Bureau told FCC:

"We cannot shares the views of the protestants (KFMB-TV), for they are premised upon their own selfish interests (though understandable), to the exclusion of the public interest considerations which are paramount."

Broadcast Bureau said KFMB-TV devotes most of its network program time to CBS originations, and offers just a few of the best ABC programs.

"We can find no fault," added Broadcast Bureau, "with granting an application which will enable both the people of Mexico and of the United States in the area concerned, to receive the programs of a third U. S. national network and also eliminate the need for ABC to rely on the protestants' station on a secondary basis, for the clearance of its programs."

Philco's Closed-TV

Philco has ordered a closed-circuit telecast for 25,000 dealers in approximately 100 cities May 15 which it will produce in cooperation with ABC-TV to intro its new laundry line. Undoubtedly, the program will serve as a pep-talk also on the Philco sponsorship of the political conventions on ABC this summer, since the closed-circuit cast will be headed by ABC veep John Daly, who is slated to head up the convention coverage.

Others in the cast will be cartoonist Al Capp and Arlene Francis. Dealers will also be introduced to Philco's new line of 14 and 17-inch portable television sets.

SAG & AFTRA's 1-Card Up Again

Screen Actors Guild and American Federation of Television & Radio Artists bigwigs are slated to hold joint meetings in Hollywood on Monday (14) and Tuesday to discuss "problems of mutual concern." One of the issues arising is expected to be talk of merger into a one-card actors union. Another will be how to handle jurisdiction on new electronic tv devices hitting the market.

Meeting has been in the offing several weeks, according to an AFTRA exec. He said it was prevented because all the braintrusters involved couldn't find a single time for meeting.

N. Y. board of AFTRA is one faction behind one-card unionization. AFTRA and SAG will powwow in SAG's new Hollywood building, it's reported in N. Y.

P & G LEADS TV SPOT PARADE

Here Is Freedom of Expression

Hollywood, May 8.

In virtually an unprecedented action, the Los Angeles Times editorially castigated commentator George Putnam, employed by KTTV, owned by the Times, for "pillorying important, respected public officials." However, the station officials emphasized the newspaper didn't attempt to influence Putnam or halt his telecasts.

Editorial ran Saturday (5) after Putnam had concluded a seven-week campaign against District Attorney Ernest Roll on many counts. He had often invited Roll to come to his teleshow and present his side, but the official declined. Putnam said the editorial proves that various facets of the publishing empires operation have complete freedom of expression.

Editorial, entitled "Rumor, Gossip, Innuendo Not News," sharply criticized Putnam, for attacks on officials whom "he has; by surmise, inference, conjecture, recklessly, irresponsibly held up to public scorn." Putnam read it on the air, including a statement that his comments "exceeded the dictates both of journalistic resonsibility and good taste. Such conduct should be repudiated by all who regard the profession of news reporting as a trust, not to be abused by self-constituted reformers or misguided crusaders."

Elverman's 'Nitwit Network'

Comedy Writer Tapes a Show and Preems It In A Charlotte Barber Shop

Louisville, May 8.

Bob Elverman, former WAVE and WAVE-TV promotion manager, now living in Charlotte, N. C., where he has been publicist for the Community Chest, is making a radical switch in activities which involves his again entering the comedy writing field directly from the social work status. In his unusual switchover from social work to comedy, Elverman launched his mythical network last week by transcribing a sample show in five voices on tape and then held a surprise "world preem" in a Charlotte barber shop to test audience reaction.

A 15-minute comedy routine was brought in cold without advance notice and drew a mixed reaction from their barbers and their surprised customers. Not rebuffed, but profiting by the experience of the initial effort, Elverman found an audience of office-workers, gave them a prelim warmup by explaining what he was trying to do, and scored a hit. Other Charlotte audiences have echoed their approval of Elverman's walking network.

Elverman said he chose the novel technique for presenting his work because it was one sure way of gauging audience reaction. Now that he has proved his point to his own satisfaction, he plans to continue using his Nitwit Network routine for club dates around Charlotte to promote a larger audience appeal and is building for a possible air shot. He has a backlog of other original comedy routines and will work out of Charlotte on a p.a. tour after he leaves social work on May 15.

Sure Enuf

Latest bit of commentary making the rounds as applied to any particularly bad television series:

"It ought to be a spectacular; just once a month."

Hurok, NBC Get Together Again

Concert entrepreneur S. Hurok has signed a new one-year pact with NBC as a tv consultant and producer. The impresario brought in a brace of longhair specs for the network this season, "Sleeping Beauty," fronting the British Sadler's Wells ballet troupe, and the big name "Festival of Music." Both were displayed on "Producers' Showcase."

Hurok, back recently from Europe in a talent prowl, will fly over the Sadler's Wells company for the "Cinderella" specola projected as an early '57 entry.

Meanwhile, another NBC'er abroading is Samuel Chotzinoff, producer of the upcoming tour of the NBC Opera and of the TV Opera Theatre, who planed out over the weekend for six weeks in England, France, Holland and Italy. Accompanying him for part of the trek is Jascha Heifetz, his fiddling brother-in-law. Chotzinoff will look over opera talent and composers, the latter for possible tv assignments.

RCA Loves Those NBC Specs; Plans 3-Way TV Ride

RCA is studying the idea of being identified with the sponsorship of 50% of three spec series on subsidiary NBC-TV next season. This would embrace Saturday, which Oldsmobile maintains wholehog, the Monday night "Producers' Showcase," which the head company already shares with Ford, and the brand new Friday night specolas. Going along with RCA would be Whirlpool Washing Machines, acquired by the giant corporation some months ago.

The Friday 90-minute shows are not yet fully resolved. Hallmark is virtually set for the every-fourth-week 9:30 to 11 slot under a switch from Sunday afternoon. With Maurice Evans vacating the producer berth, his longtime production associate, George Schaefer, plus Mildred Freed Alberg, likewise in the Evans camp for many years, will take over the reins.

Friday may also be one of the spec showcases for Tony Miner, who was recently put under contract by the network to bring in 22 outsize stanzas over a four-year period. And with Fred Coe, whose NBC pact was renewed last week, also knocking at the spec door, he might become one of the rotating producers for that night. With

SERLING'S 'DOOMSDAY' ON WIDMARK AGENDA

Hollywood, May 8.

"Noon on Doomsday," Rod Serling tele drama seen on "U. S. Steel Hour" last April 25, is being negotiated for by Richard Widmark, who wants to feature film it with his indie company. Theatre Guild has already bought legit rights to "Doomsday," and Serling is adapting his teleplay for the Guild.

Drama deals with mob prejudice which results in a murderer being acquitted; as a small town defies pressure from outsiders to convict their fellow townsman.

Serling previously sold "Patterns," "The Rack," and 'Incident in an Alley" to pix; UA is finalizing a deal to buy his 'The Strike," and is also negotiating for "Portrait in Celluloid," another Serling teleplay.

EXPENDITURES DOWN $3,700,000

Television national spot and regional expenditures dropped from the $103,872,000 level in the last quarter to $100,209,000 in the first fourth of 1956, according to Television Advertising Bureau figures. Procter & Gamble leads the list of top spot buyers with a grand total of $5,782,800, dropping sharply to Brown & Williamson's second-place $2,921,900, it was learned.

Nighttime video copped the largest share of the spot coin, the second TvB study, to be released the week after next, states. Prime after-dark hours got $55,620,000, late night $9,952,000 and daytime tv $34,637,000.

Announcements received $44,599,000 of the first-quarter '56 coin; ID's $12,183,000; participations $21,410,000. Programs had a slight edge for second place on spot allotments, receiving $22,017,000. These figures represent time-buys only, with actual program cost extra.

Behind P&G and Brown & Williamson was Sterling Drug's $2,252,000, General Foods' $2,053,000 and Kellogg's $1,780,000. In sixth, Miles Labs spent $1,696,900 on national spot time; Colgate-Palmolive $1,583,100; Philip Morris $1,542,200; National Biscuit, $1,478,400, and General Motors $1,264,200. Lowest expenditure of the top 200 national spot advertisers was $94,700 by Blumenthal Bros. confections.

In terms of product classifications, food and grocery products lead with a combined outlay of $28,461,000 for the first quarter, baked goods spending nearly $5,000,000 of the overall share. Beer and ales spent $7,193,000; drug products $10,726,000—nearly $3,500,000 by cold remedies; cosmetics and toiletries $7,442,000; dental products $4,253,000; confections and soft drinks, $4,673,000; tobacco products $7,081,000, with several other categories spending diminishing amounts in national spot and regional time.

The drop from $103,872,000 to $100,209,000 comes to a loss of $3,663,000.

From TvB comes word that its spot presentation in N. Y. (fashioned after the Chi success) has been postponed to May 22 at the Waldorf-Astoria, to avoid conflict with the Toilet Goods Assn. meeting on May 16.

'Pal Joey' Slated As Ford TV Spec

Hollywood, May 8.

CBS-TV may have a televersion of "Pal Joey," the legit musical hit, long before Columbia Studios makes its film version which will star Frank Sinatra.

Web has "Joey" on the "Ford Star Jubilee" spec series potential list for next season, and already has approached Maureen O'Hara to star in it. Also being planned for the series for next season is "Follow the Girls," and Miss O'Hara has been offered a starring role in this one also.

Actress comments "I don't think either one is quite on the beam for me. However, I'll have a look at the scripts before deciding."

Nielsen Invades Canada

Chicago, May 8.

A. C. Nielsen research firm is prepping an Audimeter "invasion" of Canada via its north-of-the-border adjunct. First step will be to work out a plan for radio-tv audience measurements for the Toronto market coupled with a blueprint of a proposed expansion into other cities, eventually embracing cross-country coverage.

Initial talks with Canadian broadcasters, agencies and advertisers were incepted by Dean Prather, prexy of the Nielsen Co. of Canada, and veepees Henry Rahmel and John K. Churchill from the U. S. homeoffice.

Talent Associates Into NBC Camp On $1,500,000 Specs-Plus Longtermer

In a deal approximating $1,500,000 over the contract's span, NBC closed long negotiations with Talent Associates on Monday (7) which makes that major packaging house an entity of the network. Under the pact, TA will function exclusively for NBC in the supply of scripts, productions and production services for radio and tv, as well as in the development of half-hour and hour-and-longer programs, with accent on specs.

First application on the specolas will come September 29 in a 90-minute musical, "A Man's Game," originally done as straight play on "Philco TV Playhouse" under the then TA aegis. "Game" is themed on baseball and will be aired around World Series time.

Arrangement is retroactive to May 1 and runs to September of 1958 with options for additional five years, making more than seven years in all. NBC would be committed to make kines of TA projects and front them for sponsorship, with TA and the network sharing in the official credits. The specs will be wholly produced by the packagers, headed by the partnership of Al Levy and David Susskind, with at least four outsize shows, including "Game," envisioned for the maiden season. On a refusal of NBC to buy a given program, TA cannot present it elsewhere. There is no limitation set on the number of shows coming off the TA assembly line, with all programs on a co-ownership basis.

NBC would not participate in TA properties which came into existence before the pact. These include a number of feature films based on telescripts, with shooting in N. Y. on Robert Alan Aurthur's "A Man Is 10 Feet Tall" (Metro) finishing up this week: as well as upcoming legiters, one of which is Aurthur's "A Very Special Baby," also from his teleplay. However, it's reported that NBC might become interested in financing other such non-tv projects out of the Talent Associates hopper, in line with recent trends of networks to latch on to outside ventures, notably legit and films.

1-Big Happy Breed

An NBC-TV brassman gave a party for a CBS-TV cast Saturday (5). Nat Wolff, recently installed as v.p. over program planning at NBC (in a switch from Young & Rubicam), was host to the troupe of Noel Coward's "This Happy Breed," the Ford "Star Jubilee" CBS spec aired that night. Assisting him in "pouring" at their eastside New York apartment after the show was Edna Best, Coward's costar. Miss Best is Mrs. Wolff.

A previous Coward-linked gala was more of the intramural kind. That was when CBS' board chairman feted Mary Martin and the Britisher after their first Ford spec, "Together With Music," last fall.

Wick Crider Exits Key Post At K&E; Miffed at Reorg?

Wick Crider served notice on Kenyon & Eckhardt over the weekend that he was resigning as radio-tv director of the agency effective June 1. Announcement took the agency by surprise for, as far as is known, Crider has no immediate future plans. There have been some reports, however, that he may return to BBD&O, where he did tv-radio duty before joining K & E.

Crider's announcement is believed linked with the top-level reorganization announced last Friday (4) whereby the agency is split up among five senior vice presidents, with Crider thus having been slated to report to G. Maxwell Ule, who was named senior v.p. of marketing services (under which radio-tv is bracketed). Previously Crider had reported directly to prexy Bill Lewis.

Under the new K & E reorganization, Edwin Cox becomes vice chairman of the board of directors, with Ule, David C. Stewart, Don C. Miller, Anderson F. Hewitt, and Barrett Brady designated as the senior veepees. Their duties break down as follows: Stewart, treasurer and corporate services; Miller and Hewitt, account management; Ule, marketing services, including research, promotion, media and radio-tv; Brady, creative services, including the copy, art, commercial production and print production departments.

BARRY GRAY SETTLES MIAMI SUIT FOR 1G

Miami, May 8.

A $250,000 libel suit instituted by Miami Beach Councilman Melvin Richard against Barry Gray in February, 1951, was settled this week by the radio commentator with payment of $1,000 and a notarized statement that he had been "used" in making published and broadcast statements that were "untrue" via local station WMIE and in a column in the now defunct Miami Morning Mail.

Original suit was dismissed by Dade County Circuit Court in April, 1952, but the Florida Supreme Court reversed that decision when it heard an appeal on the case in January, 1953, and remanded it for retrial. In April of this year, Gray was cited for contempt after he failed to comply with a court order to appear for testimony and interrogation in the suit. With the settlement and letter the contempt order has been dropped. The litigation was based on a claim by Richard that Gray had implied that he had been involved in a $200,000 bribe offer.

Rosalind Russell In 'Birthday' Nix

"Producers' Showcase" forthcoming tv spec production of "Happy Birthday," the legiter in which Helen Hayes starred some years back on Broadway, hit a casting snag this week when Rosalind Russell nixed an offer to come east for a N. Y. origination. Miss Russell agreed to do the show if it would emanate from the Coast Burbank studios of NBC-TV, but "Showcase" impresarios Henry & Saul Jaffe insist that it come out of the Brooklyn studios.

"Birthday" is slated for a June 25 presentation. It'll be directed by Alex Segal, making three in a row on his Producers' Showcase identity. He's doing this month's "Bloomer Girl" musical production and brought in the April "Dodsworth" spec.

Elgin Time Runs Out On 'P to P' June 22

Chicago, May 8.

As anticipated, the Elgin watch firm is departing its alternate week association with CBS-TV's "Person to Person" as of June 22. Cancellation was handled by Young & Rubicam although the account moves back to J. Walter Thompson July 15.

No future television plans for Elgin have been worked out as yet at the new agency.

East-West Acad Factions Hassle Over '57 Emmy Awards Structure

Hollywood, May 8.

Henry S. White and Tex McCrary, repping the N. Y. branch of the Academy of Tv Arts and Sciences, spearheaded an attack on Jack Webb's proposals for reorganizing the Emmy award structure at a Hollywood ATAS membership meeting last week.

Webb's proposal, created with an assist from writer Frank Burt, would have created two award nights, one each for live video and telefilms. White commented that the matter had been discussed informally by the N. Y. Academy, with the general feeling that the end-result, not the technique, should be the prime consideration in awards. He also stated that establishment of separate live and film categories would be a threat to the unity of a truly national Academy.

McCrary seconded White, but paid tribute to another part of Webb's scheme. In this, individual tv stations would submit kines or films of local shows, to compete for national awards. "The recognition of the local station in this idea is the most important thing we've heard on building the usefulness of the Academy," he stated.

At the meeting, Webb wryly rebutted that there seemed little chance that his double-night idea might be adopted, but that the fields of live video and telefilms were so vast as to call for such a division. After the meeting, he told VARIETY, "I'm amazed that New York considers this a danger of splitting the Academy."

Also at the meeting, it was disclosed that Webb had been appointed to head a Hollywood Emmy revamping committee. Webb subsequently confirmed his acceptance, subject to time and the interest of other Academy members. Also, "I'm accepting on the understanding that the present system will be revamped. I'd like to emphasize that it doesn't necessarily have to be our system, but we want every-

The Reluctant Mercer

Hollywood, May 8.

Over his protests, Johnny Mercer Monday night (7) was elected president of the Hollywood Chapter of the Television Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Mercer said with possible Broadway production upcoming he might not be able devote fulltime to the Academy. He succeeds Don DeFore.

Fund for Republic 'Almanac' TV Strip

Hollywood, May 8.

The Fund for the Republic, supported by Ford Foundation coin, has commissioned five pilots for a possible daily five-minute strip, based on U. S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas' book, "Almanac of Liberty." Justice Douglas' tome contains 365 segments, all based on American historical incidents.

Producers Syd Cassyd and Phil Booth are currently filming the five pilots, to be delivered to the local Fund hq by July 1, then to be transmitted to N. Y. for final determination on followup shooting and commercial sponsorship possibilities. Lensing is at Cambria Studios, with Booth directing and Ed Gillette handling cameras.

FFR feels that the five-minute format is on the up-swing, according to a spokesman, and is exploring the use of the series as a daily strip. Each segment would be a 3½-minute dramatization, plus commercials.

Title of series is tentatively "A Date With Liberty," and five pilots are called "Alfred E. Smith's Veto," "Impeachment Trial of President Johnson," "Eliza Lovejoy," "William E. Borah Incident," and "The Trial of Sir Walter Raleigh."

FFR has been extending an exploratory toe into tv for some time, and last year commissioned Worthington Miner to make a half-hour telepix pilot. However, nothing further developed on the project.

WICC Scrams Yankee

Bridgeport, May 8.

Decision of WICC, Bridgeport, to pull out of Yankee Network and Mutual on May 23 will end a 25-year association of the station with Yankee. The 600-kilocycle was for many years given the personal attention of late John Shepard 3d, Yankee's longtime head man. Understood the New England regional tried hard to get Philip Merryman, president of WICC, to reconsider, but he feels his station can do better as an allout indie.

Move follows Chicago's WGN decision to wind up with Mutual.

Segal Pulls Up K.C. Stakes for Denver

Kansas City, May 8.

Dave Segal pulls up stakes here and moves the headquarters of his Mid-America Broadcasting Co. network of middle America stations, to Denver. This follows sale of KUDL here to Heart of America Broadcasters, a New York outfit of which H. Scott Kilgore is president.

Segal is going to center his activity in Denver where his KOSI is becoming a ranking independent. Sticking relentlessly to its news and platter policy, KOSI has had eight rate boosts in its year and a half and is readying a new rate card with comfortable increases for fall.

Rating-wise the Denver outlet has come up strongly, the last Pulse and Hooper checks showing handsome increases in virtually every quarter hour. Station is managed by Ed Guss, a veteran Segal man.

Mid-America at present is a three-ply setup, with stations in Ottumwa, Iowa (KLEE) and Greenville, Miss., (WGVM), as well as Denver. Segal at times has had as many as seven stations, and is bidding to expand his operations again. He has applications before the FCC for stations in Boulder, Alberquerque and Phoenix.

Heart of America outfit takes over KUDL this week, following FCC approval of sale announced some time ago. Purchase was reported for $175,000, plus $35,000 in accounts receivable. This for a daytime only operation which started from scratch just a short time ago (three years or so).

For the time being KUDL will continue here as it has been going. Irving Schwartz, commercial manager, and Harold Backun, business manager, former Segal hands, stay on at the helm.

KEAR, Frisco Longhair Station, Changes Hands Under 5-Year Lease Deal

San Francisco, May 8.

KEAR, longhair music radio station here, has been leased to Bartell Broadcasters for five years at $60,000 a year, owner S. A. Cisler said last weekend.

Cisler reported he "had come to agreement" with the Bartells, who own and operate WOKY, Milwaukee, WAKE Atlanta, KCBQ San Diego, and KRUX Phoenix. Deal, of course, is contingent on FCC approval.

Cisler said the Bartells had an option to buy the independent station for $125,000 after operating it five years, thus making it a $425,000 deal in all.

Cisler said Lee Bartell, one of four Bartell brothers, would run KEAR and added that call letters would be changed to KACE with a pops-and-personality format installed. Station will change hands either June 1 or July 1.

NAUGATUCK DAYTIMER

Ansonia, Conn., May 8.

WADS, 690-kc. daytimer serving the Naugatuck Valley, debuts next Sunday (13) as Connecticut's 26th airer. Station is owned and managed by Syd Byrnes, formerly of CBS news staff.

TOWERS' MBS DEALS, PROMPTER DOWN UNDER

Harry Alan Towers, in New York from London in another of his transatlantic visits to trade in radio and tv properties, reports a five-way radio deal with Mutual Network and plans for the sale of other properties.

Deal with Mutual includes "The Queens Men," the first Royal Canadian Mounted Police series which was originally sponsored in Canada; "Secrets of Scotland Yard" starring Clive Brook; and reruns of "Lives of Harry Lime," "Horatio Hornblower," and "Adventures of the Scarlet Pimpernel."

Teleprompter, reports Towers, will be on hand in Australia this fall when commercial tv comes to that country. Towers has completed arrangements to represent the Teleprompter interests in the down-under country as he does in England. Teleprompter, says Towers, is being used widely in England by both commercial and BBC television and by many film companies producing commercials such as the Rheingold spots.

Brown's 6-Part Seminar For Tyro Talent on How To Make Good in Video

A six-part seminar on problems facing new talent in tv goes into its final phase tomorrow (Wed.) at the office of N. Y. talent agent Henry C. Brown, who inaugurated the series. Originally started for the Powers models, repped by Brown, others started to attend the sessions to expand the theme beyond its original scope.

At each meeting so far, network execs, packagers and ad agencymen spoke before tyro as well as established groups in an effort to clarify the basic requirements to "make good" in the medium.

First seminar covered problems faced by the casting director, particularly when confronted with the dilemma of choosing between known actor and promising novice. Followup sessions dealt with makeup, contracts, personal appearance and first impressions.

Straka Strikes

Unusual facet of the sale by ABC-TV to Cheseborough-Pond's of its "Adventures of Jim Bowie" series was the fact that the program was sold via television—closed-circuit television, that is. When McCann-Erickson, repping the cosmetic house, and ABC-TV got together on the show, Cheseborough-Pond's prez Jerome A. Straka was in Ft. Lauderdale attending a convention. Agency and ABC-TV set up a closed-circuit presentation via video line and telephone to Straka, with ABC, agency and client reps sitting at the web's Little Theatre around a conference table and outlining the show, costs and plans, plus kicking the entire matter around with Straka, who was viewing via WITV in Ft. Lauderdale. Of course, the pilot film in the series was also shown to Straka.

It all came about faster than the ABC people could blink their eyes when ABC prez Bob Kintner screened the show for the agency, and followed that same night at a special screening for the Cheseborough execs. Following day, McC-E v.p. Terry Clyne suggested a closed-circuit, and that same night at 6 p.m. they were at the theatre. The next afternoon the order was in the house for alternate week sponsorship with American Chicle.

KIDS INFLUENCE BUYING HABITS

Sullivan's Nippon Nipups

Tokyo, May 1.

Ed Sullivan, here to scout talent for his tv show and to shoot a clip of Metro's Japan location work on "Tea House of the August Moon," kicked off his talent hunt by serving himself as part of the talent at the Tokyo Foreign Correspondents' "Japan Nite" last week.

Sullivan, who arrived April 26, was prevailed upon to appear as part of the entertainment provided by the club for their charity affair for benefit of the Japanese contingent to the Olympic Games at Melbourne this fall.

Club raised $2,000 from the affair, to which Sullivan added a personal $1,000. Fund will go toward transportation of Japanese thinclads to Australia.

Part of the floor show at the Correspondents' Club was a unique and seldom seen Drum Dance performed by natives of Sado, a tiny island off the coast of Japan. Sullivan said he would attempt to film this dance for his show.

Sullivan added he is interested in getting films of a kabuki puppet dance, a unique comedy baseball act and several other Japanese acts he has heard of but not yet auditioned. He said he thought it would be impossible to take any Japanese entertainers back to the U. S. in person but that he would arrange to get them on film.

Peron Corruptions Leave Ownership Status of Arg. Networks Up in Air

Buenos Aires, May 1.

There is still only one television transmitter, LR3-TV, operating in Argentina, and that one is badly in the red, so prospects of new television developments are remote.

All radio and tv operations are still "intervened," since the revolution, by two Ministries: Telecommunications and Interior, while the investigations into the deposed Peron regime's ownership of the entire radio and tv network approach completion.

The Provisional government is only too anxious to reestablish an entirely democratic press, radio and tv setup, on a free-enterprise, commercial basis, but the investigations uncovered such a maze of corruption that the tangle is difficult to unweave. Rightful ownership of the three webs is in doubt and probabilities are that new tenders will have to be called for reallocation of licenses.

As from November, 1954, LR3-TV was owned by APT (Asociacion Promotor Teleradiodifusion), which took over from the heirs of Jaime Yankelevich, founder of Radio Belgrano. APT was a front for Juan Peron, for whom the setup was administrated by Mercedes-Benz Tycoon Jorge Antonio. One Victor Madanes simulated management of APT, and headed its Board, although it's now disclosed that he owned not a single share in the outfit, merely fronted for the other two. A controlling block of APT shares, which has a staff of several

TV 'Wire Service' Snares Sponsor

First of ABC-TV's two projected hour-a-week film shows for next fall has latched onto a sponsor and stands a good chance of grabbing another blue-chipper. Series is Don Sharpe's "Wire Service," and the first pactee is R. J. Reynolds, which has purchased a half-hour on alternate weeks, or one quarter of the show. Additionally, the network has an option out to Colgate-Palmolive for another half-hour every week, which if picked up by the soap outfit would give the series a three-quarters-sold status.

Series, which stars George Brent, Dane Clark and Dennis Morgan as members of a news syndicate, is set in the Thursday 9-10 period on the web. It's preceded by the other hour show, Sheldon Reynolds' "International Theatre," which has yet to taste any sponsorship blood. Incidentally, the network's 90-minute filmed project, "Command Performance," is no longer listed on the web's tentative schedule, due to the fact that there's no 90-minute slotting currently available for it. That's not to say that ABC wouldn't push aside some other new-and-unsold stanzas to make way for it should it come up with a bankroller.

WOV's All-Nite Spin

WOV, N. Y. Italo-Negro radio indie, is going around the clock for the first time in its 30 years. Until now station was off the air between 3 and 6 ayem, but gap is being filled Mondays through Saturdays hereafter by "Gone With the Dawn."

"Dawn" will be a deejay stanza for the Negro market of N. Y. coming from the Palm Cafe in Harlem. Herman Amis and Elaina Brooks will split deejaying.

Far From Selling, WGN, Sans Mutual, May Widen Vistas

Chicago, May 8.

WGN made it official last week with a terse announcement it was severing relations with Mutual when its affiliation contract runs out Aug. 31. This confirmation immediately heightened speculation as to what Mutual will do for a Windy City outlet when its lines are dropped by the Chicago Tribune station.

Also implicit in the statement issued by J. Howard Wood, president of WGN, Inc., is the denial of a couple of rumors regarding the station's future that have been floating around Michigan Ave. Wood's emphasis that "we can best serve our broadcast area as an independent station" put the kiboosh on reports that WGN might make a tie-in with ABC which is currently in the midst of negotiating a new affiliation deal with WLS.

More importantly, Wood said the WGN adjunct has "recently reappraised its position in the industry and has formulated definite and more aggressive plans for continued growth in radio as well as television." This is seen as a move to kill off once and for all the frequent reports that the Tribune radio-tv operations were up for sale.

It's taken as pretty much a certainty that the publishing empire is in radio and tv to stay with a clearcut tipiff of that coming when Wood moved over from the Tribune side to head up WGN and WGN-TV shortly after the death of editor-publisher Col. Robert R. McCormick a year ago. That the parent company which also includes the N. Y. Daily News and WPIX

TOASTMASTER INTO 'T-H-T'

Chicago, May 8.

Toastmaster Division of McGraw Electric bought a $176,000 spread on NBC-TV's T-H-T trilogy, starting in October.

Toastmaster is down for eight insertions apiece in "Today," "Home" and "Tonight." Agency is Erwin, Wasey.

TEMPLE U STUDY BARES TV 'SELL'

A survey of 213 tv families, concluded recently by students at Temple U., gives some indication of why it makes sense to pitch the product at Junior. Seventy-three percent of the 213 families reported that kids in the house requested the candy and soft drink items advertised on juve video stanzas, and as a result of these requests, mom or dad came through 62% of the time. Where food was concerned, 76% of the families admitted getting asked for advertised merchandise, and 67% bought it.

Results are taken from a pilot study on family purchasing patterns by members in Temple's research marketing class. Because the study sample was not picked at random, the university warns that it cannot be considered representative. Nevertheless, apart from this one warning, total implication is that it's a fair indication of things as they are.

In the toy sponsorship results, the kids didn't request that more than half of the 213 families buy them the advertised playthings. Belief of school: "Evidently these items did not have as strong an impact as the others." Incidentally, parents came through only 32% of the time with toy purchases at the behest of the kidlets. Same general percentages hold true for clothing advertised on tv. Next biggest kiddie category, culled from a miscellaneous question asked of the parents in the 213 homes, was which product drew kid support next most. It was toilet articles, with 22% of the children requesting times, but less than 12% of the parents coming through.

Families were questioned as to why they purchased the stuff requested. They relied on three motivations, where confections were concerned: family already used the product; child liked the product; to keep the kids quiet. In food, purchases were principally regulated according to: the food was good for the youngster; kids liked the food, or the parents did.

Answers given as to why a purchase was not made after the kids requested it were: family can't afford everything advertised on tv; family didn't normally use product; child already had enough.

Repeat purchase pattern on tv items was covered in the Temple report: 74% of the families said they made a second purchase of one or more of the listed commodities herein.

Because of this kiddie influence, many new products are added to shopping lists, predominanttly soft-drinks and foods. Overall wrapup of findings read thusly: "An analysis of the reasons given for making purchases reveals that the children's requests were predominating influences."

WGN-TV'S CUTBACK ON NEWSFILM SETUP

Chicago, May 8.

WGN-TV, which has pioneered in newsreel coverage of hometown happenings, is cutting back on its newsfilm operation. Chicago Tribune station's whole approach to the use of film reporting is being reappraised in light of the experience gained the past eight years with indications being the emphasis will be on more comprehensive treatment of selected stories rather than on volume coverage.

Although WGN-TV is retaining two of its four cameramen and likely will hook up with one of the newsreel services to supplement its own shooting, its trailblazing "Chicagoland Newsreel," currently a nightly feature, is being dropped.

WGN-TV's decision to streamline its film adjunct focuses added attention toward WBBN-TV's free-wheeling newsfilm department which plays a key role in the Columbia station's scheme of things. WNBQ, with no newsfilmers of its own, has access to the stuff shot by the NBC-TV "News Caravan" Chi crew, ABC-TV's WBKB hasn't entered the celluloid sweepstakes.

Crowell-Collier Also Has Eyes On TV Feature Production & Disks

Cecil Makes It

Hollywood, May 8.

For actors, those tv commercials can pay off in more ways than one.

Cecil Rogers, the gal who dances in a raincoat and with an umbrella in the White Rain teleblurbs, was spotted by director Stanley Donen on tv, and signed for a role in Paramount's "Funny Face," which stars Fred Astaire and Audrey Hepburn. The dancing doll of tv was picked to play the part of assistant to Kay Thompson, seen as an editor in the picture.

Hollywood, May 8.

Crowell-Collier which entered AM-tv station field last month with a $17,000,000 buy of four tv and five radio stations, is also considering entry into both tv and feature production, Paul C. Smith, prexy-editor in chief, disclosed here last week.

As part of C-C plans, a new across-the-board policy for buying story property rights has been established, with rights purchased for both publication in C-C mags and possible later dramatization. At present, Collier's "American Tradition" series is getting the new double-duty rights purchase treatment, with others in the offing, Smith noted. Some $1,500,000 in unused C-C literary properties may also come under this setup, and all future buys will be scanned for dramatization possibilities. "Up to now, all we've bought have been the first magazine rights," Smith said in indicating a future change.

In pix, establishment of a production subsid is still in the future. But Smith noted that he has assembled a youngish corps of execs, realizing a longtime dream of training editorial people to such jobs. "They're a lean, hungry group which may branch out," he commented anent feature filming.

Records will also play a part in the Crowell-Collier branching-out. The waxing operation is being established in the east and three months ago, Bill Fowler, formerly of Capitol, shifted to C-C to set it up. "It's practically ready to go, except for the selling season," Smith declared.

Mainstay of the new waxery will be a record club, not retail sales, Smith observed. "We have a natural built-in mailing facility, with a mailing list of 10,500,000 names," he noted.

At present, the C-C tv operation hq are in N. Y., and while the plans aren't yet firmed, both live and telepix production are under consideration, Smith admitted. As for the station properties acquired last month, it's likely that the fifth FCC-allowed tv station will also be in Flint, Mich., to accompany purchase of WFDF, there. Application for a station there is cur-

1,500,000 Tune To Granada TV Bow With Sponsor SRO

Manchester, Eng., May 8.

Eliminating the pomp and pageantry which has characterized other commercial tv launchings, Granada TV Network went straight into the act when they inaugurated their northern station in Manchester last Thursday (3).

The official part of the proceedings was confined to the introduction of the workmen and technicians who had designed and built the new studios, and they were interviewed by Quentin Reynolds, a close personal friend of Sidney L. Bernstein, the Granada topper. There were also interviews with Sir Kenneth Clark, chairman of the Independent Television Authority and the Lord Mayor of Manchester.

It's estimated that there were around 400,000 receivers tuned to the new station and a first night audience of more than 1,500,000. Entire advertising time was sold for the opening programs, yielding an estimated $39,000 in income.

With the launching of their station, Granada has at last lifted the veil of secrecy which covered their operations, and indicated the extent to which they're cooperating with the other commercial tv programmers in networking. Among the programs they'll be taking from London and Birmingham will be Val Parnell's "Variety Star Time," "I've Got a Secret," "Double Your Money," 'Take Your Pick" and "Escaper's Club." Filmed programs will include "Gunlaw," "Liberace," "Dragnet," "Count of Monte Cristo," "Colonel March," and juve times, "Roy Rogers," "Rin Tin Tin," "Hopalong Cassidy" and "Lassie."

In return, a number of programs to be originated by Granada will be beamed to commercial stations in London and the Midlands. Among them will be a series produced under their exclusive tieup with the Zoological Society, "My Wildest Dream," featuring Tommy Trinder and weekly variety and drama shows.

ABC Summer Incentive On 'Aft. Film Festival'

ABC-TV is seeking to retain the interest of sponsors in its "Afternoon Film Festival" during the hot months via the introduction of a summer incentive plan which will offer one free participation on the two-hour cross-boarder for every three participations purchased up to 40 a week. Plan is similar to the bonus offer made some months ago for charter clients on the series, at the time it bowed on the network.

New plan will be extended to clients already booked for the summer on the film show.

Godfrey Ayemer Takes Client Rap

Arthur Godfrey, who already has been blanked out of his Wednesday night "Friends" segment on CBS-TV, is now suffering some sponsor defections on his morning "Godfrey Time" simulcasts, among them his longtime Pillsbury Mills bankroller, which is dropping two of its four segments come May 30. Network has picked up some replacement business but not enough to counteract the anklers.

Pillsbury renews its Tuesday and Thursday 11:15-11:30 segments on the show for a solid 52 weeks, but drops the Monday and Wednesday quarter-hours. Lever Bros., effective June 27, drop its Monday and Wednesday 11 to 11:15 quarter hours. Bristol-Myers, which currently has three quarter-hours a week riding through October, shifts two of them into the Lever time, one into a Pillsbury-ankled slot and picks up a fourth segment slated for the other Pillsbury vacancy. Additional bankroller is Bauer & Black, which effective June 5 takes on the Tuesday 10:30 segment for a 10-week span.

Elsewhere on the CBS-TV daytime front, the web has recovered one of the two quarter-hours on the Bob Crosby show vacated by Scott Paper via a sale to Procter & Gamble for the Thursday 3:45 segment. Also, Sterns Nurseries, via the Fairfax agency, added six participations to its schedule on "Good Morning."

DISCUSSION
With Leon Pearson, Jimmy Powers, Joan Crosby, Buck Cannell; Bill Hanrahan, announcer
Producer: Steve White
Director: Cal Darnell
30 Mins.; Sat., 6 p.m.
WRCA, New York

WRCA has slotted "Discussion" as an early evening paneller aimed at kibitzing on a variety of subjects and drawing upon those identified in the fields under informal survey. It's an interestingly done, conventional treatment akin to the roundtable aspect of Lou Cowan's "Conversation" pieces, et al., though this one's opening was a bit undisciplined on the chatter. The preem was pegged on "Has baseball gone theatrical?", stemming from the sage words of Al Schacht, clown-of - the - national - pastime - turned - restaurateur. These words were quoted or perhaps paraphrased by moderator Leon Pearson, the station's critic-at-large, either because Schacht couldn't gather 'round the transcription table or his tape-via-phone text was a bit growelly. Heading up the supporting cast taking it from there was Jimmy Powers, N.Y. Daily News vet sports columnist and sportscaster, joined by Joan Crosby ("Giant Jottings," WPIX) and Buck Cannell, who beams games in Spanish and French to Latin-American countries.

There seemed to be a tendency to throw a hammer at baseball for latching on to extra-curricular acts and events as alleged hypos at the ballpark turnstiles. Television also came in for side criticism as compelling some ballplayers, managers, umpires, etc., to "ham it up" for the cameras. As for the declining gates, there was no hint that tv itself might be partly responsible. Apparently a radio station, even if it's a flagship (NBC), will not engage in such realism vis-a-vis a competitive medium.

TOWARD THE HAPPY LAND
With Irving Berenson, narrator; John Daly
Producer-Director: Don Pringle
30 Mins., Fri. (4), 9:30 p.m.
ABC, from N.Y. (transcribed)

In his 30,000-mile trek around the Far East for the United Nations, reporter Irving Berenson taped some rather incisive interviews about the economics of the countries visited. But the first of the two-part "Toward the Happy Land" lacked vitality as a radio presentation, because the interviews were of such a nature that they could have been made, without losing much, inside the UN's N.Y. headquarters. Though Berenson tried to provide some betweentimes local color of Thailand and Burma (two of the five nations visited by him), his flowery language dulled the sense of on-the-spot reality.

There'll be another half-hour radio transcription in the series next Friday (11) on ABC which covers Idonesia, India and Pakistan. Both parts of the Berenson report will probably be available for syndication after the two-time network run.

As for the initialer, Berenson's formula was simple. In Bangkok and the surrounding Thailand areas, he interviewed three or four different people who, by way of seemingly prepared answers, explained their missions — Bangkok harbor development, diversified crop planning, irrigation agronomy; the procedure was followed in Burma also, with the subject matter varying slightly. As was said, the questions were intelligent, but the lack of spontaneity made the trip and the radio show seem mostly of travel time.

Young Ideas

Jim Lowe, who's been hosting a daytimer on CBS' New York key, has been promoted to the network with the emcee chair on "Young Ideas." He's replacing Fred Robbins, who scrammed to the Coast several weeks ago.

Lowe has the right tone and platter flair for this series which brings on newcomers to display their vocal wares. His easygoing style and friendly demeanor puts the tyros at ease as he leads 'em through the q.&a. sessions. Since the show is pegged on getting the talent to showcase their stuff, Lowe doesn't waste too much time with fan mag styled queries. The patter is pointed and well-paced.

On the show caught Saturday (5), Lowe hosted thrush Darlene Zito and crooner Andre Phillipe. With the help of Alfredo Antonini's orch, both singers came across in fine style. Best thing about the show is its song repertoire selection. Saturday's stanza, for example highlighted tunes from three current Broadway musicals, "The Most Happy Fella," "Mr. Wonderful" and "My Fair Lady."

Police Blotter

"Police Blotter," the fifth and final cog in the weeknight "Mysterytime" strip on ABC Radio, was minutely better than the opening floperoo in the 7:30 slot, "Mike Malloy, Private Eye." That's because there's something implicity believable about a policeman while it's hard these days to cozy up to the notion of a for-real private eye who gets everyplace before the regular law enforcers. Otherwise, "Blotter" is no more noteworthy than the Steve Brodie-starrer.

"Blotter," a murder whodunit, has a narrator-chief performer in Sgt. Brad Peters of the big-city force. Peters, played by Bill Zuckert, and the mobsters and gun molls in this far-fetched piece of copperama are all deadpan, wise-cracking characters. As a matter of fact, there is too much wise-cracking and not one joke in the entire half-hour.

(The hardened girl, whom hard-boiled policeman Peters knew as a kid in the slums, did it.)

Kagran

to sell to NBC network, but it will offer its shows as well to CBS and ABC as well as sponsors who can place the shows on the latter two networks.

Sales on this national level would be consummated on the basis of single pilots or strings of two or three pilots; as to who would handle sales, that isn't determined yet, but it may be Carl Stanton, head of the NBC Television Films Inc. syndication division of Kagran or it might even be Livingston himself, although he'll be headquartered on the Coast. Emphasis will be on production of half-hour shows, though there's every likelihood Kagran will also produce hour and 90-minute series for television as well.

Syndication Expansion

As for the syndication operation, that too will be expanded under Stanton, with Kagran providing it with new properties. However, Stanton will be left free to take on outside-produced properties as well if he and the Kagran brass feel high on the properties. Along with product expansion, there will be an expansion of manpower in the homeoffice and among the field sales staff. Homeoffice for the syndication division will continue to be New York.

As regards feature film production, that's definitely on the schedule, but off at some indefinite date. Kagran in most cases will shy away from coproduction schemes and prefers to handle the entire production of a pic on its own, but there's the possibility of working in cooperation with such picture vets as Joseph Mankiewicz, with whose Figaro Productions the network already has a coproduction agreement. Kagran won't undertake any theatrical distribution; instead it will sign distribution agreements with individual major companies as each pic comes up.

Unquestionably, tv properties, either series or individual teledramas, will get major attention as subjects for feature pix. While NBC isn't writing any rights clauses into its contracts with tele scripters, it's understood that the web already has assigned Kagran screen rights to several tv properties. Though in the future Kagran will have to bid on the open market for screen rights to television properties, fact that it's a subsidiary of NBC means that it will be in a position to jump the gun on its competitors.

Third "division" of Kagran is the "theatrical division," concerning itself with legit (fourth is the fast-expanding licensing-merchandising division). Its function will be to invest in Broadway productions; also manage the NBC Television Opera Co. and the touring version, the NBC Opera. Likelihood is that the opera unit will be the only road company Kagran will handle; that's a pubservice-prestige unit on which Kagran doesn't expect to make any money. And Kagran's primary purpose in being is to make money in show biz. Consequently, all its efforts will be directed in participating in or wholly backing incoming Broadway shows. These won't be restricted to musicals; in fact the accent will be on straight plays.

The legit division will operate on an "at our own risk" basis, with no guarantees beforehand of network use of the play. There will be occasions where the web will express interest in a property and suggest that Kagran look into it, but by and large Kagran will have to "sell" the network (or any other web) the tv rights to a drama which it owns. Other ways will be used to defray the production costs; kinescopes of a network production might be put into motion picture distribution overseas, for example. In most cases of musicals, Kagran will try to buy up original album rights for sale to RCA Victor, but this would constitute only an incidental phase of any backing negotiations. Similarly, Kagran might try to buy up screen rights, either for sale elsewhere or for screen production under its own banner.

Peron

thousand employees, have disappeared.

Until situations such as this are resolved, there can be no tv expansion, meanwhile the cost of operating LR3-TV is high and finances so rocky that recently the Government contemplated putting it away in wraps until a commercial setup takes over.

Programming has improved since the revolution, but not enough to justify advertisers splurging on the medium. Agencies do their best to improve matters, but cameras and other essential equipment are lacking and can't be imported due to devisen shortages.

The Mundo web already had a tv license, but until LR3-TV is out of the red, it would be folly to embark on more tv ventures.

Public interest in telecasts has grown in the past six months, mainly because all such media deal with facts and not propaganda. Many disclosures on the Peron regime scandals have been made by tv and politicians are invited to participate in open-forum debates, and this has whetted interest. When elections are eventually held tv can play a most important role in determining outcomes, unfortunately the left-wing politicians are the only ones alive to this angle, and a great majority of key tv posts are held by fellow-trevellers. In any case set-owners are mostly in the higher brackets and it is a pity that the lower brackets can't be reached by this medium for educational purposes.. In any case, public event telecasts are now easily saleable to sponsors, whereas under Peron their cost was borne entirely by APT.

American agencies estimate the number of sets in use at from 55,000 to 70,000. So many were brought individually by returning travellers that it is impossible to determine the exact number. The percentage of saturation is 4%; in other words, 4% of homes in Greater Buenos Aires possess a tv set and 90% of sets are owned by upper-class families. American residents almost all have tv sets brought as personal baggage, and are the medium's best propagandists.

Peron and his entourage were very tv-conscious and the loot found in their various homes, official and secret, included hundreds of tv sets which had never paid customs dues. These will be auctioned for benefit of the "National Recuperation Fund."

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Bob Hope Show

Back to the comedy revue format, Bob Hope's writers tailored a nicely-paced show to the comic's considerable talents last Tuesday (1) with a high quotient of yocks from Hope's opening monolog to the final guest roundup. Hope also collected a variegated but talented roster of guests, including Kathryn Grayson, the inimitable Pearl Bailey, and George Sanders, who revealed a nice talent for knock-about comedy.

Additionally, George Gobel made an effective surprise appearance, to plug his "Birds And Bees" in tandem with Hope's plug for his own pic, "That Certain Feeling."

Miss Bailey's casual, breezy style was displayed to best advantage, both in warbling "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart" and in an adept cut-up terp routine with Hope. Her accompanying chit-chat, always a crowd-pleaser, registered solidly.

Miss Grayson, one of the real lookers in the chirping field, revealed her voice is richer than ever. However, her forays into comedy were spotty, especially in the broader slapstick efforts.

Sanders trouped through his efforts vis-a-vis Hope to great advantage, using his suavity as a most effective wall off which to bounce his own gags, and to afford Hope several fine opportunities.

Among the various numbers, Miss Bailey's songs, Hope's turn with her and with Sanders, and Miss Grayson's singing came off best. An elongated hillbilly sketch by Hope and Miss Grayson got in several good licks, but the material wore rather thin.

Jack Shea's fast-paced direction rated kudos, as did Les Brown's musical support an Nick Castle's musical staging. The Chevy commercials, featuring Joel Aldred, were ably staged and proved effective. Kove

See It Now

Senator Alben W. Barkley's death recently cued a special "See It Now" segment on the Eric Sevareid Sunday news show on CBS-TV Sunday afternoon (5). Originally recorded in January, 1955, the segment presented the late Veep in a conversation with Ed Murrow about some general questions of politics, government and war. Barkley was shown in one of his expansive verbal moods during this interview and tended to answer every question with a long speech. Murrow's queries didn't help either. They were pat, leading questions about obvious matters that hardly inspired Barkley to display some of his wit or anecdotal talents.

Sevareid closed the news show with a repeat of Barkley's words just before his death. The sound effects of the falling microphone on the original tape of this speech were, gratefully, not included. Herm.

Jackie Rae Show (Canada)

On original lethargy of this Sunbeam-sponsored series, Jackie Rae is manifestly injecting some of his new and imaginative ideas on production values. Latest (3) was his guesting of a "sister act," Janine LaFleche, sister of Giselle Mackenzie, and Betty Harmer, sister of Shirley Harmer. Both Canadian singers have obviously not attained that stage of development in song-styling reached by their sisters across the border but, though trading on the family names, are over on entertainment novelty, notably for uncanny resemblance and hair-do of their more widely-known distaffs.

Both girls duet in neat lyrics of "Sisters," trademarked by the Whiting girls, with Janine then into a bouncy, French version of "Hello Baby, Mademoiselle," and Miss Harmer trailing for a ballad styling of "I've Got a Crush on You." Singers have plenty on looks and understanding of the lyrics, need plenty of coaching on song-salesmanship, and deserved more close-ups than evident long-shots.

Bespectacled Billy O'Connor, who looks a lot like a juve Bobby Clark, has his own Saturday night tv show and, as guester, tossed out a fine "Rhythm of the Beat" to his own piano accompaniment, later back with Rae for their clowning cross-patter at the keyboard of an oldie medley of "When You're Smiling" and "If You Knew Susie." Relaxed Rae earlier does some neat ballad-baritoning of "When Your Lover Has Gone." Whole bill is back-grounded by The Four Grads (vocal quartet of three boys and a girl), plus Jack Kane's orch, with Jackie Rae currently in for hypo of some of his own ideas for a big production pickup on that trans-Canada weekly series. McStay.

Let's Take a Trip

Medal-making isn't something kids or adults usually go out of their way to explore. Last Sunday (6), though, CBS-TV's noontime entry, "Let's Take a Trip," showed how it's done. The program moved its cameras into the Medallic Art Co. for an informative and interesting half-hour tour of the plant and offices.

The creative talent, skilled labor and special machinery necessary for production were all highlighted in the tracing of a medal from its inception on the drawing board to the finished product. The various facets of the operation were explained by employees and Medallic's president, with the show's regular trio, moppets Ginger MacManus and Pud Flanagan and their adult guide, Sonny Fox, pitching the questions.

Stanza marked Fox's return after a four-week absence, during which time Johnny Harlan subbed. Fox kept the session running smoothly for satisfactory juve and oldster appeal. Jess.

Goodyear TV Playhouse

Small episode during the Civil War, involving a Southern raiding party behind Union lines, was the theme of "The Sentry," play by John Gay which was presented Sunday (6) over the Goodyear TV Playhouse on NBC-TV. It was a rewarding script, and it made for an hour of absorbing teledrama.

There was plenty of excitement inherent in the story and the characterizations were sharply drawn and well acted out. Even without the scope of the motion picture, "The Sentry" created a sense of action and of danger, and when it lapsed into some lyrical moments it was touching rather than maudlin. It caught a mood at the very beginning and, thanks in part to Sidney Lumet's expert direction, never let it go.

"The Sentry" had more than ordinary merit since it concerned itself with the men that made up the patrol as well as with its raiding activities. Added twist involved two brothers, one fighting for the south, the other for the north. They never met in the play, and in the poignant ending, the one didn't realize that the other—dead from a northern bullet—was his own kin. Throughout ran the individuals' frustrations with a war that was none of their making.

George Grizzard as young Meade, the southerner whose patrol touches on his prewar home, had strength and great sensitivity in a difficult part. In this he was matched by Andrew Duggan as Owen, the western adventurer who had joined—and come to believe in—the southern cause. John Connell made the most of the brief part as the young northern lieutenant. Si Oakland registered strongly as the coward in the patrol, and Roy Fant was adequate as the southern sympathizer.

Gay's script sounded plausible and was interpreted with a fine sense of movement and mood by Lumet. Sets were unusually good in this Herbert Brodkin production and Glenn Arthur's plaintive drum-and-song backgrounds were very effective as was the overall lensing. Hift.

Yankees Co-Axing Back Road Games to WPIX

New York Yankees will pipe back 16 road games to New York for WPIX programming starting with Monday night's (14) clash with the Cleveland Indians from Municipal Stadium. Ballantine and Camel-Winstons are bankrolling as they do all home games.

The Tuesday (15) game from Cleveland and the Yanks-White Sox contest from Chicago, Friday, May 18, also get the after dark coaxial treatment as will the Orioles-Yankees game from Baltimore, Saturday night, May 26.

Only one day game is on the out-of-town schedule Saturday, June 16, also from Cleveland. The remaining 11 tv arc-lighters are June 20 at Detroit; July 7, Washington; 25, Chicago, and 28, Kansas City; Aug. 1, Cleveland; 6, Boston; 18, Baltimore; Sept. 1, Washington; 18, Chicago; 24 and 25, Baltimore.

Mel Allen and Jim Woods will roadshow the games for both sponsors via William Esty.

COLOR TELEVISION DIGEST
With Norman Brooks
Director: Jack Bidus
15 mins., Sat. 4:45 p.m.
WRCV-TV, Phila.

"Digest," new 15 minute frame, is good sales gimmick to acquaint "black and white" viewers with color tv and by letting him know what he's missing, to stimulate desire for the new receiver. The "price is right" angle is not used.

Emcee Norman Brooks sets out to break down buyer resistance, following similar pattern each week, reviewing and previewing a major colorcast, interviews with art directors, scenic designers, painters and other authorities. A "Clinic" segment answers listeners' questions.

Brooks opened program showing a small American flag, expounding that from experience we could picture colors. Then came the French and Italian tri-colors, making the point that because of unfamiliarity we were in the dark as to their hues.

In reviewing "Dodsworth" he stressed the added glamour of Paris, Naples and London locales in their true shades. Boris Blai, sculptor and dean of the Tyler School of Fine Arts, a color television enthusiast, discussed "Richard III," finding in its tones a transparency that painters failed to achieve with underglazes and other techniques. He envisioned the average dialer as an electronic artist developing a cultivated taste as he turned the knob for a little more green or a slightly deeper red. Blai foresaw masterpieces glowing in the living room and culture for everyone who could afford it. The dean's maltreatment of English, however, would come out just as scrambled in compatible color.

The write-in "Color Clinic" question was "Is color television difficult to tune?" Apparently it's a cinch. Brooks in both voice and appearance is a deluxe choice for the class selling job. Gagh.

NICHOLS NICKELODEON
With Dave Nichols
Producer-director: Jack Anthony
30 Mins., Tues., 7:30 p.m.
WLW-C, Columbus.

This new show relies on an old theme—the Roaring '20s—for its format. Dave Nichols, bedecked in handlebar mustache and blazer, seats himself at a player piano to add atmosphere while he comments, often with gentle sarcasm, on the old flickers being seen on the screen.

The two silents used on the initial show were a "Snub" Pollard production called "It's a Gift" and a Laurel and Hardy romp, "Criminals at Large."

The first show began with a handicap. In addition to the show name appearing upside down at the beginning, the appearance of a barbershop quartet failed to materialize and the extra silent film was thrown into the breach.

In the future, WLW-C hopes to feature a barbershop four on each program which should add considerably to the interest factor. The show has possibilities although it got off to a slow start last Tuesday. Conn.

OSU TV WORKSHOP
Producer-director: Jack Anthony
30 Mins.; Sat., 12:30 p.m.
WLW-C, Columbus

"May Week, 1956" at Ohio State U. and elsewhere in the world, was the topic of the first 30-minute variety show.

The program, written and produced by members of the OSU Department of Speech in cooperation with WLW-C, featured five foreign students at OSU who discussed how May is marked in their respective countries. One student even did a hula dance.

Highlights at the OSU celebration also were discussed.

The program provides an excellent commercial outlet for OSU to present the new series of programs. Conn.

Brown & Williamson, Brillo's TV Daytimer

NBC-TV has latched onto two daytime bankrollers for its upcoming Ralph Edwards package, "It Could Be You," slated for the 12-12:30 p.m. cross-the-board slot starting the second week in June. Brillo has come in for a quarter-hour every Thursday, while Brown & Williamson has bought a quarter-hour on alternate Fridays.

Brillo deal, part of a larger buy that included "Matinee Theatre" as well, was set via J. Walter Thompson. B&W came out of Russell Seeds.

THE CRADLE SONG

HALLMARK CARDS

Gregorio and Maria Martinez Sierra's "The Cradle Song" was given a whale of a production on Maurice Evans' "Hallmark Hall of Fame" Sunday. It's remarkable what television can achieve given the right story, fine casting, expert direction and inspired performances; in spite of commercial breaks and the distractions of home viewing, such a production can still succeed in breaking up a viewer and plummet him into a state approaching tears.

There's much that is static, much that is stereotyped in the Sierras' story of a girl raised by a group of nuns. The parts of the prioress and the vicaress, for example, tend to fall into familiar lines, and so does the role of the young heroine. In fact, the basic story itself lends itself to the extremes of the cliche. But as adapted by Thomas Costigan from John Garrett Underhill and brilliantly performed by a cast headed by Judith Anderson, Siobhan McKenna, Evelyn Varden and Deirdre Owens, the obvious became the marvellous and the cliche became the universal truism.

Miss Anderson, as the prioress, gave depth and humanity to the role of the understanding and wise head of the nunnery. Miss McKenna, in spite of her brogue (what's that doing in a Spanish convent?) did a beautiful job as the sister who actually raises the child. a performance replete with intimations of semi-repressed emotions. Miss Varden made the part of the convent's battleaux convincing and sympathetic, while young Miss Owens provided fine contrast as the spirited daughter of the nunnery. Barry Jones was his customary crisp self as the doctor who visits the convent daily and who makes possible the adoption of the child by the sisters; Anthony Franciosa gave the right touch to the part of the earnest young suitor; and Mildred Trares, Jeanne Tobey, Zohra Alton, Katherine Raht, Kate Harrington, Margaret Hill, Gerry Fleming and Gerry Jedd looked and acted right as the other nuns.

Credit director George Schaefer with much of the glory for this beautiful job, first for topflight casting, second for expert direction in staging the show and giving it a stateliness and dramatic pitch that wrung every line dry. Robert Wightman's sets, Noel Taylor's costumes, Julian Prol's music and everything else associated with the production were of the highest artistic order. Chan.

T. N. TATTERS
With Daryl Laub, others
Producer-director: Bob Sears
Writer: Laub
30 Mins.: Mon. thru Fri., 8:30 a.m.
KSTP-TV, Minneapolis

Even if the average small fry wasn't predisposed toward the little home screen normally, this kiddie show would be calculated to attract him. Comprising a tattered clown in the capable person of Daryl Laub and an especially good selection of "Terrytoons," it provides the sort of juvenile video entertainment that has proved its youngster appeal.

In this instance, distinction arises from Laub's skillful performance in the title clown role, his shenanigans with a live singing trio and otherwise, the cartoon comedies' high quality and the manner in which the star socks over commercials to make even the latter amusing for the kiddies. Spotted just right to lure the early birds little ones, it undoubtedly does a good selling job for its bankrollers as well as pleasing the young viewers.

Laub not only cuts didoes, but also tosses in jokes and riddles. Show's format calls for him to interrupt the cartoons periodically to engage in live chatter, the commercials and clowning generally. Trick photography has him conversing with a superimposed wraith-like toy clown in addition to gab with puppets. It adds up to a successful performance. Rees.

THIS HAPPY BREED
(Ford Star Jubilee)
With Noel Coward, Edna Best, Patricia Cutts, Robert Chapman, Joyce Ash, Roger Moore, Guy Spaull, Norah Howard, Beulah Garrick, Rhoderick Walker, Sally Pierce, others
Producer: Richard Lewine
Directed and staged by: Ralph Nelson (A Lance Hamilton-Charles Russell Production)
Writer: Coward
90 Mins., Sat. (5), 9:30 p.m.
FORD
CBS-TV, from New York (color)
(J. Walter Thompson)

Noel Coward, whose on-again-off-again tv status managed to grab off considerable headlines in recent months (apparently either Ford or CBS wasn't too jubilant about his continuance because of the low Nielsen-Trendex voltage of his two previous efforts), served up his third "Ford Star Jubilee" spec contribution last Saturday (5). It was a tv version of his 1944 London stage production, "This Happy Breed" (which was subsequently made into a film). As a '56 video vehicle, it was, for the most part, trite, cliche and maudlin. Yet there's no denying that this one-family-dimensioned "Cavalcade" had its rewarding moments — thanks chiefly to Coward's own personification of middle-class Britannia, which is a far cry from the more familiar Coward-cherished concepts as exemplified in his sophisticated songs and lyrics.

"Breed" is a paean to the ordinary man and his ordinary wife and his ordinary family living complacently their routine life, with the storied British restraint supposedly concealing the deeper feelings and emotions. It covers two decades (1919-39) in the life of a family and then hands on the reins to the next generation, content that they will pull for old England and all that. The family squabbles are bandied back and forth by a maiden aunt and a crotchety old grandmother: the happenstance of life and its tragedies are all woven into a smooth play producing some chuckles, maybe ringing a tear, yet steering fast and true. Coward mastered it all and it was mainly he who oozed its essence.

Perhaps in a wartime England of '44, Coward's play more fittingly complemented the times. But somehow today there's a smug and shallow ring to the glorification of that tiny Island in a one-world miasma of jets and H-Bombs. Yet for all the family sentimentality and cliche-ridden banalities, "This Happy Breed" nonetheless made for rewarding viewing if only for Coward's performance. Divorcing himself completely from the white-tie-and-tail identity, Coward was the sincere father and the perfect husband with all the middle-class virtues and standards indelibly portrayed. It was a capital performance.

Edna Best as the wife and mother acquitted herself creditably, though she might have spanned a wider gamut of histrionics. She was at her best in the play's more tragic moments but rather static when a giggle or a squeal could have registered better than her even keel. Practically everyone in the supporting cast fulfilled their assignments admirably, with Norah Howard as the grandmother and Beulah Garrick as the spinster aunt outstanding in their roles.

All the correct production niceties were brought into play in this Lance Hamilton-Charles Russell production (save perhaps for the noticeable failure of Miss Best to age over the 20-year span). Ralph Nelson's staging and direction always succeeded in capturing the pace and the mood. Rose.

OF NOTES AND NOTIONS
With Connie Cooke, Morrie Kline
Producer-director: Jack Anthony
30 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 1:30 p.m.
WLW-C, Columbus

WLW-C has taken a line from Tallulah Bankhead's billing on her former radio show, "The Big Show," and bills mistress of ceremonies Connie Cooke as an "unpredictable hostess."

Miss Cooke isn't quite as uninhibited on the show as that phrase might suggest, but she is a warm television personality. Also dubbed a "chatterbox" in some promotions for the show, Miss Cooke isn't that either. She is able to give pace to the show with her comments, but they cannot be considered superfluous.

Miss Cooke is joined on this women's show by "a nextdoor neighbor," Morrie Kline, who provides music and a few nervous (the first week) comments.

The most unfortunate part of the program is that, on the Friday (4) shown at least, it was broken up by too many commercials. Conn.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

'What's Wrong About a Circus?'

Ely Landau's Defense of Vidfilm Merchandising As Good Show Business

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

It was nice to read VARIETY's story about the brisk business reported by film syndicators at the NARTB confab in Chicago. What caused my eyebrows to twitter, however, was your reasoning that the spurt in interest by film buyers who looked and inked contracts were the results of the curtailment of the circus atmosphere and the substitution of the "dignity approach" to film peddling. Then you went on to say that these same syndicators will be back at next year's convention without the circus atmosphere that was standard until now.

It seems to me that VARIETY, steeped in the traditions of showmanship, approached the subject with a jaundiced eye. Showmanship and circus atmosphere are not incompatible. They go hand in hand. Showmanship, as you very well know, has always played a major role in the entertainment field —especially since its emergence as a major industry. Take the show out of show business and its allied arms and you take away its life's blood and its link with the public.

I think that some of the tv fraternity all too readily forget that they are in show business—especially when it comes to merchandising their own wares. We must never lose sight of the fact that showmanship whets the appetite. Too many of us are content to sit back and let nature take its course. Showmanship will go a long way towards awakening the film buyer as well as the public about our product.

NTA's exhibit at the convention resulted in more traffic than we could handle at times. The accent

Socony 11-Market Newsreel Splurge

Socony Mobil Oil Co., already immersed in spot television with its 50-odd market spread in "Mobil Oil Theatre" (Douglas Fairbanks series), is taking an additional plunge in the fall with a new once-monthly newsreel show in 11 key markets. Newsreel, to be produced by Marathon TV Newsreel of N. Y., will deal exclusively with matters relating to oil and will be booked into Class A time in markets like N. Y., Los Angeles, Dallas, Billings, and wherever else Socony has major plant installations. Socony, of course, will pay for the time.

There's an unusual twist to the operation, since the series will be aimed mostly at Socony employees. Oil company figures the television treatment is less costly than sitting its employees down in an auditorium for the same thing on company time. Additionally, there's the extras in terms of public relations institutional advertising and stockholder relations. Series will start on a monthly basis in September, but Marathon is first producing two "dummy" reels for placement on the stations during the summer months in order to get the kinks out of the project.

For Marathon, the show means a reactivation of its newsreel service after several years. Marathon, headed by Konstantin Kalser, was one of the pioneer newsreel-for-tv outfits, but abandoned this phase of its operations to go into the filming of public service films for industry, under a setup where Marathon would produce the film and distribute it free of charge to the stations. Now, the newsreel setup is being reactivated, with staffers and stringers set to shoot for Socony in Paris, Vienna, London and Canada, among other places. Socony, incidentally, is a longtime Marathon client in the pubservice field.

300 For 'All-Star'

Some sort of record was set last week by Screen Gems when it made its 300th station sale on the "All-Star Theatre" series, which comprise the reruns of "Ford Theatre." Fact that it was the 300th sale doesn't necessarily mean that the show is currently on 300 stations, since the Columbia Pictures subsid has been selling the reruns for nearly three years now. Films, however, do play more than one station simultaneously in the same market, since they can be divided into different packages with different titles.

Milestone was set by KMID-TV in Midland, Tex., which picked up all 117 films.

Liberace Is Going Tint But 117 Segs Are Still in Can

Guild, having recently repacted Liberace to a new five-year contract, is going to do the next 39 of his films in tint. There is some talk of going into production on the Coast for September. But it's more than likely that the piano player won't be going before the vidfilm cameras for another full semester or two, what with Guild's desire to hold off for accelerated tint set sales, and station conversion to color, to make the series a more feasible idea.

There are 117 Liberaces in the can, and the series is slotted first run and rerun in 163 markets currently, a drop of 61 from its alltime high.

Meantime, Guild has finished the first print on the science fiction "Tobor," which last week began the round of agencies in a national spot-network pitch. Company has completed all 39 of "The Goldbergs," but it's iffy whether it'll continue with a new batch next year on the syndicated half-hour. Another series upcoming is "Captain Grief," based on Jack London material; it is expected to go the national route.

Guild has made a tieup with Jerry Capp, vet product promotion man and brother of cartoonist Al Capp, to work out the merchandising details of the "Tobor" kidvid series. First step in the plan has already been worked out, with Capp devising a complete gift package including comic books, picture cards, scientific gadgets and membership certificates.

Self-liquidating merchandising scheme is being integrated to the national sales pitch on the series.

Official Bows to BMI On 'American Story' Tag

Official Films and Broadcast Music Inc. reached an amicable agreement over what could have proved a legal hassle over the title "The American Story." That's the tab used on BMI's radio series dealing with American history, and the hassle began when Official Films, having acquired rerun syndication rights to the duPont "Cavalcade of America," retitled the reruns with that very same "American Story" tag.

After a couple of legal conferences, Official gracefully gave way, coming up with "The American Legend" as the new moniker for the series. BMI said thanks and wished Official luck with the property in a joint announcement with Official.

WON'T BLAST NETS IN TRUST PROBES

A friendlier attitude toward the networks in the current antitrust hassle and a partial repudiation of KTTV's Richard Moore by the top film syndicators was indicated this week in a letter circulated by National Telefilm Associates prez Ely A. Landau to other syndicators, along with a set of circumstances surrounding distribution of the letter. These, set against a background of increasing syndicator hesitancy about going off on the deep end against network practices, make it a vertible certainty that any telefilm testimony on the matter of network monopoly charges will be at best conciliatory.

Landau's letter, mailed over the weekend to some 20 major telefilm distributors, is a paean for the networks as the organizations directly responsible for the vast development of television. The problem, Landau states, lies not in the matter of must-buy lineups, program control, option time or the like, but in a faulty allocations system that must be revised if television is truly to become competitive. He calls upon the telefilm industry to crystallize its own opinion in the matter and to speak out before the FCC, both individually and in combination in a telefilm industry association.

Landau's missive was sent out amid the following circumstances:

1. A paragraph of the letter expressing concern that the five companies who are working on a presentation covering network practices and their effects on syndicators for the FCC's Barrow Committee were planning to attack the networks was deleted. The head of one of those companies, hearing about the paragraph before the circulation of the letter, called NTA and protested that no attack on the networks is contemplated in the report, as a result of which Landau consented to deletion of the paragraph.

2. Ralph Cohn, Screen Gems boss, as one of the five company chieftains, wrote last week to VARIETY stating that the companies were not planning any attack on the networks but were simply seeking to contribute to a solution of the medium's many problems.

3. Other indications came that the five companies had decided that "we've got to live with the networks for a long time to come," that under the present character of the industry the networks are vital to the program syndicators, and that "we're reappraising our thinking on this entire situation."

4. Report that the five compa-

Vitapix Network Clears Time For 'Top 52' RKO Pix

Finding a network deal difficult, RKO Teleradio has gotten Vitapix to clear an hour-and-a-half of nighttime on its 57 tv stations for showing of the "top 52" RKO feature films. Times submitted, mostly at 10:30 p.m. once a week, are back in N.Y. for approval of the two bankrollers so far understood to be ready to ink on sponsorship of the three-way underwriting. They are Budweiser and General Tire, both handled by D'Arcy.

RKO Tel is reportedly trying to clear time on its own station, WOR-TV, in order to satisfy the N. Y. market needs of the bankroller brace, names of which were not disclosed. A spokesman for the distrib said that the possibility of a network deal was not dead, since there is "nothing specific" about the Vitapix arrangement.

Hal Roach Jr., who has a pact to provide Vitapix with half-hour material on film, is in N. Y. this week, among other matters, to pitch "Blondie" for Vitapix sale.

Ziv Pulls a Switch, Earmarks New Product for Syndication-Only

Maxon's Moxie

Some agencies, it seems, will go literally to any lengths for an integrated commercial. Like Africa, f'rinstance, in the case of the Maxon agency. Percentery is in the process of finalizing the details for shooting of a string of Heinz commercials for its "Captain Gallant of the Foreign Legion" on location with the show in Libya next month.

Maxon will send over one of its own commercial supervisors, probably Pete DeFur, while "Gallant" producer Harry Salzman and his crew will handle actual production of the blurbs. They will feature Buster Crabbe and his son Cuffy, stars of the "Gallant" show, against the natural settings of the program. Crabbe and Cuffy left for Rome (for interiors) this week, after first wrapping up some N. Y.-made commercials at Academy TV in Long Island City.

Anti-Censor Orgs Ask Abandonment Of TV Film Code

Abandonment of the proposed televesion code for tv film producers now being worked out on the Coast was urged this week by the American Civil Liberties Union and its anti-censorship affiliate, the National Council on Freedom from Censorship. Both bodies, invited to comment on the proposed code, attacked it as a "restraint in the trade of ideas" and because it "interferes with freedom of expression."

In a letter to Desilu, exec v.p. Martin Leeds, who has been acting as spokesman for the group writing the code, ACLU exec director Patrick Murphy Malin and NCFC chairman Elmer Rice opposed all industry codes in the communications media. Stating that the letter represents the views of the ACLU board of directors, Malin stated that it does not oppose a single producer prescribing for himself a set of standards. "But a different situation exists where a significant segment of the industry agrees to abide by a code. Collective adherence to a single set of principles in a code has the effect of limiting different points of view, because producers — as well as writers—are fearful of departing from the accepted norm lest they be held up to scorn of attack and suffer economic loss.

Using specific examples of limit-

Ziv's 4-Show Sale In Dominican Republic

Ziv's International Division made a clean sweep of all Latin American markets with television by selling a four-show package in the Dominican Republic, last of the South American markets not using the Spanish-dubbed product. Deal was set this week, with telecasting to start in Ciudad Trujillo in late summer.

Ziv also scored several Latino renewals, pacting General Electric to a second year on "Science Fiction Theatre" on two Puerto Rican outlets, Pet Milk to a third year of "Cisco Kid" and Nestle to a renewal of "Boston Blackie," also in P.R. In Caracas, Standard Brands renewed "Cisco" and Excello Cigarets renewed "Science Fiction." Ziv markets in Latin America now comprise Mexico, Cuba, Argentina, Venezuela, Colombia, Brazil, San Salvador, Panama, P.R. and Dominican Republic.

Though other telepix producers and distributors generally are against making syndication the first line of sales attack on new properties, Ziv is grooming several packages for syndication-only. M. J. Rifkin, Ziv sales veep, predicts an overall dollar volume gain of 50% over last year in syndication, if company's current sales levels continue.

Nearly every other packager, according to the established trend, is after the network or national spot "big one" for the quickest, safest coin return on investments. A sampling of the major vidfilm houses shows that they don't expect to do more than maintain status quo on the syndicated sales peaks of last year, which wasn't such a hot one for most, in the final analysis. Contrasting this, Ziv's Rifkin considers 1956 "a safe bet" for syndication, with regional and multi-market syndicated pacts increasing possibly as much as 80% over the previous annum.

Ziv, just having inked its first and only network sale on "West Point Story" with CBS-TV and General Foods, is expected to grind out at least three, maybe four, new half-hours for syndication this year. This keeps pace with the production averages set in past semesters.

A report from Coast production sources indicates that Ziv will launch its syndicated aspirations for next season with "Annapolis," the naval equivalent of "Point." Originally, the company aimed the series either as GF's successor to "Point" or as a separate package for network sale in late '57. Having clinched "Point" in a prestige setup, Ziv's change-of-mind was apparently motivated by a desire to get off fast with an opportunistic "just like 'Point'" pitch to stations.

Ziv may be convinced that the "network probe in the capital will force NBC and CBS to relinquish more Class A time," the way one syndicator put it. Yet, on the other

TPA in $1,100,000 'Susie' Rerun Coin

Television Programs of America, which some months back purchased all rights to Jack Chertok's "Private Secretary" series including ownership of all previous negatives as well as the current CBS-TV cycle, has run up past the $1,100,000 mark in sales of the "Susie" reruns on the show.

Most of the sales have been achieved on singlerun deals; there are only about eight "stripping" or other multiple-run setups on the show, with the remainder running the pix once a week. Market total has passed the 90 mark, and that includes major cities like N. Y., Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Baltimore, Washington, Detroit, Dallas, etc. Lineup includes three regional bankrollers, Blitz Beer in the northwest, Drewry's Beer in the midwest and Thorpe Financing in the state of Wisconsin.

'FRONTIER DOCTOR' INTO 30 MARKETS

Hollywood Television Service reports inking new half-hour telefilm series, "Frontier Doctor," in 30 markets. Additionally, the Republic tv subsid, has written $500,000 in feature pic sales in recent weeks, most of the coin purportedly coming from sale of the latest batch of Republic pix for television.

Coast-based company is mulling three new half-hour tv film shows, with "Hoodlum Empire," "Statue of Liberty" and "True Detective" on the planning board for exposure next fall.

one to have a chance to compete equally and have a place to compete. I won't be satisfied with only a slight change."

He also noted that, at the meeting, while his double-night scheme had been thumbed down, no other new idea had been advanced. Since under these circumstances the present award system might be reinstated through default, he doubled his value as chairman.

ATAS exec secretary Thomas Freebairn-Smith disclosed that letters had been sent to Albert McCleery, Groucho Marx, Dick Powell, Danny Thomas, Jack Benny, Cal Kuhl, George Burns and Desi Arnaz. The letters solicited comments, a la Webb's proposals, for revamping the award setup.

At last Wednesday's ATAS membership meet, some 250 members gathered in the first of a series of discussions on the Emmy revamping. At a prior board meeting, renewal of the NBC-TV pact to carry the award ceremonies came under discussion. It was decided to pass the matter on to the incoming national board, to be formed after a N. Y. membership meet this week.

But N. Y.'s Whi e observed at the Hollywood membership discussion that, "We may not be selling Oldsmobiles next year, or we may be making more money for selling them."

McCrary disclosed that the N.Y. Museum of Modern Art had formally offered to set up a kine and telefilm library, with proper support, like that of old pix.

McCrary also acknowledged that he hadn't seen all the choices he had voted for in last year's Emmy awards, casting some votes from hearsay. This confession preceded his plea the ATAS arrange for nomination screenings. Freebairn-Smith promptly countered that the Acad here had done so last year, but that so few members showed up that the practice was scrapped.

Present at the Hollywood meet were two reps from S.F.'s now-indie Tv Academy, who relayed that a reunion is highly likely.

Then Webb arose for his scheme discussion and the feathers hit the fan.

'Outside' Buys

ed shows are Max Liebman's new Buddy Hackett starrer, "Stanley," out of the William Morris office, Jeannie Carson's new "Jeannie" for Procter & Gamble out of the Morris Coast office, and Jan Murray's new "Treasure Chest" quizzer out of the Morris office for Mogen David. The other live entry is the new Tennessee Ernie Ford Thursday nighter for Ford on NBC-TV, and although Ernie's an NBC contractee, the show will be produced by J. Walter Thompson and packaged with the aid of MCA.

Thus far, the only new network-owned shows definitely slated for the fall are the CBS 90-minute "Playhouse 90" on Thursday nights and Columbia's hour-long Herb Shriner display on Tuesdays. "Playhouse 90" would bear out the webs' contention that the outside buys are merely coincidental and not by design, for the slotting of 90-minute drama show involved the heave of "Four Star Playhouse" and a subsequent public beef over web control by Dick Powell. "Playhouse" is already partially sponsored as a result of the inheritance of Bristol-Myers and Singer, the "Four Star", backers along with Ronson; the new Shriner entry is blank thus far. But even in the case of "Playhouse 90," there's an "outside" influence at work—Screen Gems will produce up to 13 of the shows on film for CBS.

Dick John's Soviet O.O.

Oklahoma City, May 8.

Dick John, newsman for KWY-TV in Oklahoma City, left yesterday (7) for a six-week tour of Soviet Russia and Europe. He will stop off in New York before and after his trek behind the Iron Curtain to appear on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

John will accompany 28 Oklahoma farmers and ranchers and Roy Stewart, newspaper columnist for the Oklahoma City Times.

unanimously approved by the Board, was picked by President Webb Seely, News, and includes Tom O'Connell, assistant radio-tv editor, Plain Dealer; Stan Anderson, radio-tv editor, Press; Gene Kelly, News, and Jim Turner, Press. The Guild points out there is nothing in their current contract that prohibits fourth staters from doing radio-tv work, but that newsmen are hesitant to accept guest appearances for fear of reprisals such as assignments completely apart from what they are currently doing.

Guildsmen also indicate that the ban harps back to the early days of broadcasting when publishers assumed the attitude "why should we permit our name personalities whom we've built up to now help our competition."

The Guild noted that Cleveland is perhaps the last city where such a stand remains, although many Press staffers have been on dramatic shows along with their "Press Club" appearances. It has also been noted that the editors themselves have frequently made guest appearances on both radio and tv.

The United Press, which previously had a similar ban, has now okayed its personnel for appearances on "Press Club" and other community shows.

Although both the News and Plain Dealer have kept its men from "Press Club Presents" which is moderated by Sanford Markey, KYW director of news and special events, the program has been on the air for seven months with its weekly panelists selected from Wall Street Journal, Central Press, INS, etc.

is in an expansionist frame of mind was revealed last week when the Tribune company entered an unsuccessful $2,214,000 bid for a one-third stock interest in the Cincinnati Enquirer. So the hunch is that the Tribune operation, with its tremendous financial resources, is more likely eventually to expand rather than contract its radio-tv identities.

In any event, there's a new aggressive spirit around the radio-tv side of Tribune Tower that befits the broadcasting arms of the "World Greatest Newspaper."

Meanwhile, it's expected Mutual will step up its romancing of possible replacements so as to have the needy Windy City outlet. Overtures have already been made to WCFL, the 50,000 watt station owned by the Chicago Federation of Labor. But it's understood the indie practically SRO under the stewardship of Marty Hogan, isn't interested in a.. affiliation deal but is willing to listen to any possible Mutual proposals on a straight buyer-seller deal at full rate card.

About the only other possible alternative is WLS, also a fulltime 50,000-watter. But even this would have to be a parttime arrangement since it's likely the Prairie Farmer station will come to terms with ABC on a new affiliation pact. Later web shares ownership in the station.

was done. About 1950, Congress voted to purchase the equipment, add new equipment, and retain the Coars to manage the studios for them. At present, 62 Senators and about 145 members of the House are regularly using the facility which provides the tapes and films at cost, much less than the commercial rates.

What irked some Democrats was that the facility made tv films for the Republican Congressional Committee. The Coars say permission was given to do this, and that the facility was equally available to the Democrats. Latter, however, haven't had the cash to take full advantage of the service.

U.S. Court Upholds FCC Non-Newspaper Nod In Shreveport VHF Grant

Washington, May 8.

Right of the FCC to consider newspaper ownership as a negative point in allocating broadcast channels was again upheld in the Federal courts.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled last week that FCC as well within its rights in awarding tv Channel 3 in Shreveport, La., to KTBS, Inc. there. The Commission's ruling had been appealed by International Broadcast Corp., of Shreveport.

"We find no denial of due process, nor can we say that the award was unsupported by substantial evidence in the court," declared the court. It found that that Commission had decided on the basis of management - ownership integration and diversification of control of media of mass communications.

The FCC decision admitted that both applicants were well qualified to operate a video station in the city. However, it found that International was under the same control as an AM-FM radio station in Shreveport; the city's morning and Sunday newspaper; plus other newspapers and radio and television stations within a 100-mile radius.

WABC-TV EXPANDS WEEKEND ROSTER

Six and a half additional hours of weekend telecasting are being added to its lineup by WABC-TV, the ABC-TV flagship in N.Y., starting May 26. Station, which previously signed on Saturdays at 1.25 a.m. and Sundays at 10:05, will move into early morning time on both days, with a signon of 7:55 and start of programming at 8.

New shows will all be film,, with both Saturdays and Sundays kicking off the 8-9 hour with cartoons. Saturdays 9-11 will be westerns, ditto Sunday 9-10. The Saturday 11-12 hour will comprise a "family" feature pic, while the Sunday 10-11 hour will have the same type of film.

an expensive one—CBS will put it on.

In effect it's a three and a half hour Saturday afternoon football roundup, a direct offshoot (though with multiple and more colorful variations) of the CBS Radio "Football Roundup" series incepted a few years ago by Red Barber. For the tv series, there will be as many as 15 pickups in one afternoon in all sectors of the country, with Bud Palmer as the N. Y. "anchor man." A specially-constructed studio will be loaded with electronic gadgetry, including an electronic brain which will compete with a live brain (Herman Hickman) in assembling all the data, records, etc., for the prognostications. It'll be run just like an Election Night video runoff, with all the attendant color and masterminding, switchoffs to regional games, etc.

Because of the expense involved, it'll be sold as a co-op venture, priced for 25-minute segments, with the stations recapturing the other five minutes for local cut-ins and sponsors.

"I'm standing on my head"

"Can't blame me for being so excited. My new television show is going great guns. It's already been sold in over 100 markets — big markets, small markets and medium size markets!"

It's a fact, THE GREAT GILDERSLEEVE is going great. But many important markets are still available. If you act now, this hilarious comedy series can get big audiences for you, just as it's doing in New York, Detroit, Ft. Wayne, San Antonio and the many other cities where it's tops in its time period.*

Gildy's especially valuable to sponsors because his personality is a sales-building extra that doesn't come with ordinary television programs. He's thoroughly merchandisable. And his loyal family following is great for boosting sales of products every member of the family buys — food, drugs, beverages and all manner of household needs.

Get the facts on how THE GREAT GILDERSLEEVE can sell for you. Call NBC Television Films.

nies, in a meeting with Moore during the NARTB convention, turned down Moore's proposal that an inter-industry committee, including independent stations and film producers as well as the syndicators, be formed to fight the antitrust battle against the networks.

5. Disclosure that the five-company report to the Barrow committee will be completed within two weeks, and that it will be presented in testimony in Washington sometime in June.

No Industry Org Yet

6. Failure of the five companies to come up with the formal announcement of the establishment of an industry association before the NARTB convention as planned, indicating at least the presence of several strains of thought among them vis-a-vis the network problem and allied industry concerns.

Landau, prefacing his letter with the declaration that "we, and others who have a stake in this business of broadcasting have an obligation to ourselves and to the industry to make our stand crystal clear and public," enthused that "you and I, and everyone concerned with the tv broadcast industry, should shout 'Hurrah for the tv network, without which tv as we know it today would not exist'!"

Stating that NTA has not been a supplier of programs to the networks and therefore is not waving a banner "for the network as our customer," Landau nonetheless declared that it is the webs which have been responsible for the enormous growth of the medium. "Where are the organizations that can claim and deserve as much credit for tv's amazing growth as the networks themselves? It seems to me that those within the industry as well as those without, who are publicly or privately picking apart the networks today, have short memories indeed."

Praising the initial investments of the webs in experimental tv and their "faith in the medium that enabled it to progress so fast and so far, Landau declared that "there is nothing wrong with the network concept today—that has not been brought about by the tv economy itself—an economy not measured in terms of bigger and better programming . . . nor measured in terms of bigger and better viewing audience . . . nor in terms of bigger and better advertising dollars—but an economy of stunted growth, brought about by a limited and entirely uncompetitive market situation.

"I say that there is absolutely nothing wrong with the networks' role in the television broadcast industry that couldn't be cured by precise and concise governmental action that will allow for steady and stabilized expansion of the television market. I sincerely believe that our hue and our cry can only be addressed to those in government who control the growth of our industry, calling on them to aim their sights in the right direction, that of increasing and stabilizing the tv station allocation picture."

Discussing the obvious need of stations for the network programs as a "cornerstone" of the industry, Landau analyzed the view of station owners as "he needs his network—but he'd be much happier if he had the competitive leverage of other networks to vie for the use of his time." He continued, "The fact that there are only three networks is the only thing wrong with the network role in the tv broadcast industry . . . and particularly since one of them is still very, very much in the embryonic stage because of our limited station picture.

"There should be more networks. There must be more stations before there can be more networks. There must be positive and sound government action before there can be more stations."

100% Gross Sales Hike For CBS-TV Film Sales

Gross sales of CBS Television Film Sales, the network's syndication subsidiary, are up 100% for the first quarter over the same period last year. Net profit for the quarter is up 200% over the first-quarter '55 level.

No actual dollar figures were revealed, but a 100% increase in gross sales should have brought the subsid's first-quarter sales to about the $3,000,000 level.

Weisfeldt to C&C

Jerry Weisfeldt has quit Hygo-Unity as boss of sales in 11 western states to go with Matty Fox's C&C Television in sales. Bob Seidelman, sales chief of H-U, is planing to the Coast this week to o.o. the bossless sales operation.

Hygo, meantime, has firmed sales on its latest 22 features (14 from Columbia, six from Universal, etc.) in 42 markets. Sixteen of the tv stations have signed in the last two weeks.

Webb's 'Noah's Ark'

Hollywood, May 8.

Jack Webb's Mark VII Producers is finishing a pilot on a new telefilm series, "Noah's Ark," about a couple of veterinarians.

Paul Burk, May Wynn and Victor Rodman have stet roles. Olan Soule, who created the series, is associate producer on the pilot and will produce the series if it sells. Webb is producer-director on the first film.

NTA's Vox Pop On Selznick Releases

Through paid newspaper ads, National Telefilm Associates is launching an audience research survey of its own, primarily to stimulate interest in its David O. Selznick pix. Buying space in dailies in Iowa, Nebraska and North Carolina, distrib is polling (1) public reaction to the full-lengthers for tv and (2) the acceptability of commercial announcements in feature film stanzas. With viewer response, prompted by the print ads, NTA says it hopes to get enough of a sampling to formulate a guide to acquiring and selling films the public wants to see.

After the initial three ads, which carry a coupon on which answers are placed by NTA, others will be placed in newspapers. First paid-for space is in Sabbath editions only. Copy, addressed at "Dear Mr. and Mrs. Television Viewer," says, in part: "As you undoubtedly know, sponsors of feature film programs gauge their continued expenditures for these presentations upon your affirmative acceptance of their advertising messages." After the buildup, NTA says, "assuming your local tv stations affords you the opportunity of viewing such highly budgeted feature films as listed below, would you, as a consumer, be more favorably inclined towards the advertising message of the program's sponsor?" Listed are: "Farmer's Daughter," "Notorious," "Since You Went Away," and other Selznick pix.

16 More Markets

National Telefilm Associates has sold its "TNT Package," the 35-picture group that includes the 10 David O. Selznick pix, in an additional 16 markets. New sales bring the market total on the package past the 70 station mark.

Included in the new tally of 16 are KPRC-TV, Houston; WJAR-TV, Providence; KHQ-TV, Spokane; WKY-TV, Oklahoma City; KJEO-TV, Fresno and KGGM-TV, Albuquerque.

ations on freedom of expression within the framework of the proposed Code, the Union pointed to the section on crime, which bars criticism of Congressional procedures, third degree methods and other illegal police practices. "These taboos," Malin and Rice wrote Leeds, "are not in accord with real life. Certainly the focus on Congressional investigations in recent years has revealed that certain Congressional committee procedures are wrong . . . Similarly, abuses of individual rights by certain police officers have become public knowledge, precisely because the press and radio-tv have exercised their First Amendment rights to expose these evils."

On the clause barring attacks on religion, the section "seems to violate the freedom of religious guarantees of the First Amendment; the Amendment clearly supports the right of atheists, or other non-believers to be heard . . . This is an instance of eliminating comment about a particular group (clergymen) and restricts freedom of expression." On the proposed ban against the use of divorce as a solution to marital problems, "it is a fact that divorce is legal in every state of the union and countless people have found it the only solution to their problems."

was on showmanship. It was indeed gratifying to see other exhibitors—syndicators, broadcasters and equipment people—bring their people down to our exhibit to see the effective promotional job we did. We had our cafe setup, the movie theatre and the conference room for business discussions. The buyers loved every bit of it. The interest shown in our products was more than satisfying.

Quality products will always attract interest. But add showmanship to the product and you'll increase business tremendously. The "dignity approach" is all right in a law office or similar profession but in our business showmanship is an essential ingredient.

The tv networks, always sensitive to circus atmosphere, maintain large staffs to inject showmanship into their efforts. In ballyhooing the recent Grace Kelly-Prince Rainier nuptials, which millions of persons watched on their tv screens, a major network used pink rice to publicize its coverage pattern. Showmanship, too, took a front seat when NBC's WNBQ inaugurated colorcasting in Chicago during the convention. A "dignity approach" would have turned this epochal event into just another presentation.

These same syndicators who were reported to have cast aside the "circus approach" for the "dignified touch, resorted to showmanship in co-sponsoring a huge cocktail party in the Conrad Hilton's grand ballroom. And it didn't hurt a bit. It was easily the biggest success at the convention.

I know my confreres will agree to a man that showmanship is their most effective weapon in promoting their products. And with solid grosses under their belts, these same syndicators will be back next year with bigger and better exhibits trying to outdo each other with gimmicks to lure more buyers into their parlors.

hand, another source noted that there were, as of last week, exactly 33 national bankrollers on the network waiting lists for next fall, and he speculated that the networks aren't about to relinquish any ripe time when fresh dollars are practically begging to be added to web coffers.

A Ziv spokesman said that many stations have approached them with an interest in new syndicated product. Though it hasn't been substantiated, these stations for the most part are felt to be in 60 or so low-paying smaller video markets, where consensus shows that in the past few months there has been a general easing on time and where syndicated stuff is in slightly greater demand.

Majority of big markets, from which the syndicators make most of their loot, are still as tight as drums. A salesman reports that in Pittsburgh, Charlotte, Boston, Providence, Philadelphia, etc., time is at a premium. Perhaps the only three large cities where there is any demand for local half-hours are N. Y., L. A. and Chi. While these are the three biggest and three most lucrative markets, they alone can't supply a sufficient return on a syndicator's production investment, and, even if they could, there's no absolute guarantee of sale.

Ziv can gamble on a strictly-syndication return where most others can't because the firm is in a unique production position. None of its coin comes from outside financiers, so there is no mounting interest to worry about over the long syndication haul. Aside from "Annapolis," there are three other stanzas that might go the straight syndication route for Ziv. Pilots are ready on "I Love a Mystery," "Dr. Christian" and "Stockade."

WPIX Buys 'Secret Mission'

National Telefilm Associates, having recently assumed distribution of the half-hour package, has inked with WPIX, N.Y., on "Secret Mission."

The 13 telepix, based on World War II, will be held by WPIX manager Fred Thrower until next October before exposure. Series was produced by Jack Skirball.

Marathon TV Sets Major Ampex Use

New Ampex video tape equipment has been ordered by Marathon TV newsreel, the pubservice - pubrelations - newsreel outfit headed up in N. Y. by Konstantin Kalser. Marathon has received a priority on the video tape equipment and intends to purchase two machines which Kalser states will pay for themselves in no time in reduced lab costs.

Kalser is dickering with Movielab, his Gotham laboratories, to set up a closed-circuit television chain between the west-side labs and his east-side office. Idea is that when the lab finishes a negative of newsreel, it would transmit it with polarity reversed on the closed-circuit. Kalser would tape the picture off the closed-circuit and would thus be able to use the tape as a work print, resulting in savings in time and money in completely eliminating the process of printing the work print and shipping it over to his office. Moreover, he would have the advantage of having seen the work print as it came over the closed circuit, and could start editing immediately as the tape was finished.

He sees even greater potential from the tape for use as a permanent "negative storage" device. The tape is non-flammable, reducing fire hazards and all the problems that go with storage; moreover, the negatives wear much better than celluloid negatives, and are less subject to chemical action like fading, spotting, etc. Kalser intends to pay off part of the investment in his machines by opening a negatives-on-tape service to other producers. He'll change negatives into tape for permanent storage via his closed-circuit-plus-tape operation at so much per foot.

Longrange, he sees eventual distribution of prints via tape, that is as soon as enough stations are equipped with the machines and a duplicating process is evolved. As of now, the only way to turn out 50 or more tapes at a time (his average print shipment per show is higher, about 200) is by playing them back on the same machine or machines, depending on how many are available. Once a duplicating process becomes available, he figures on substantial print cost savings, due to the extreme durability of the tape. Some day, even direct photography may be done on tape, but that's too far off to worry about now, says Kalser.

KTTV has won many an award for its leadership in film programming.

But another test of a station's stature is the degree to which it utilizes television's magic power to bring to the public direct coverage of events as they happen.

Of all the stations in the nation, KTTV has been selected by Variety as the leader in the presentation of special events.

To be chosen number one in this vital area of public service makes us very proud indeed.

McGrath's Answer to Swezey

Swezey that he might similarly recoil if his full network operation were classified as "pushbutton." Actually most network affiliated stations today during their locally programmed hours bear a striking resemblance to some of their independent competitors who at least accept the responsibility of their total broadcast time.

It is not my intention to engage in a contest over the merits of one type of radio operation versus another. Bob Swezey is too much an entrepreneur to be away from the facts too long. Nor would I contend that there are not within the industry stations whose programming borders on "mechanical formulae." Unfortunately some of these so-called juke boxes have made their competitors "Nielsen-nervous," for apparently television has made the radio audience seek alternatives the networks do not now supply.

This change in listening habit has had at least the one beneficial effect of getting the pushbutton boys off their network derrieres—not all, but some. Additionally, it has aroused the networks themselves to the realization they must deliver a different service than they did in "the good days and glorious moments" of Swezey.

It is pompous of anyone to propose that a station featuring music and news operate under a "second class license" for then one might fall victim to the proposal that a network affiliate, unable to sense the personal preferences and needs of its audience during chain broadcasts, might only be entitled to a "tertiary license." Such a station carrying eight hours a day of network has only 10 hours left to program in the interests of the area for which it was licensed.

Such rationalizations are dangerous, particularly when they come from within the industry itself. There isn't one of us who won't make every effort to preserve the freedom of self-regulation or help weed from the ranks those who would destroy this wonderful radio heritage. Intelligent criticism should be welcomed in any business. But because of the nature of radio and the inability of anyone in this entire country to avoid its exposure, there is a tendency to ignore the great things it is doing and feature its faults.

Radio is still the greatest informative force in the world today. TV may have glamour but radio has guts. It took that to survive the last seven years. What radio now needs more than anything else is affirmative support, rather than ill-considered mouthings from within the ranks. Incidentally, Bob's contention that advertisers are apathetic must be in error else the nation's agencies are making the greatest mass miscalculation since Noah's contemporaries.

Legislators are finding it politic to investigate our industry. Such investigations normally feature the faults and it appears we may have to weather such storms. If anyone feels the need of conscious-clearing—let him turn states evidence.

including the professions—doctors, lawyers, dentists, professors, etc. Is it fair to indict all doctors because a few perform illegal operations? Or to castigate all dentists because a few drill holes in sound teeth?

We at WNEW listen to more tapes of more programs throughout the country than any other single station or network, I believe. Most are unsolicited, coming from performers wishing to make an association with us. They run into the hundreds, and we listen to all of them. The great majority are a credit to radio. I mention this merely to reassure Mr. Swezey that radio entertainment is not a continuous juke box from coast to coast.

Actually, the independent format of music and news presents any single owner or group with the greatest opportunity to program according to the public taste and perform a maximum amount of public service. Evidently, the American public prefers this type of radio because all research indicates independents moving into Number One position in listening audience in many markets throughout the country.

I suppose our reaction at WNEW to Mr. Swezey's comments was so violent because we have just completed a new library to allow for expansion of our record collection, which already exceeds 100,000. And, believe me, we didn't go to this expense to program only "The Top Twenty" at 1130 instead of "1280 on your radio dial."

carried via WHYN-TV, owned by the same interests which publish the Northampton Daily Gazette and the Holyoke Transchipt. (Actually, WWLP is operated by Republican Television, owned by the Springfield Union News and Sunday Republican Employees Beneficial Fund.)

It's not only the fact that the competition is owned by the papers that keeps his name, face and his station's publicity out of print, he believes, but the belligerent history of his father and the local papers. His father, Roger Putnam, was mayor of Springfield from 1938 through 1943, the station boss noted. During that time his father "stuck his tongue out" at the newspapers and their supremacy in the area. Putnam Sr. is currently a manufacturer and prexy of the station.

Putnam says that the station, an NBC-ABC affiliate, is running steadily in the black in the all-U market despite lack of print support, and that by year's end WWLP will be permanently in the black. So he doesn't mind at all the slights by the newspapers—such as the time they took a picture of himself between Steve Allen and Skitch Henderson (when WWLP picked up the "Tonight" show). What happened was the papers chopped him out of the photo completely. He says Allen and Henderson were perfectly repasted in a real buddy-buddy closeup, so that it looked like he was never there in the first place. The way Putnam tells it now, he didn't even mind the fact that, in the two rotogravvure pages devoted to the "Tonight" spread, the paper didn't once mention the call letters or the channel number of his station.

Canada License Fee

didn't include color which would add another 25% to costs.

$34,000,000 Operating Cost

It costs $34,000,000 a year to operate CBC-TV now, Dunton told the commission, and saw color costing another $21,000,000 plus $9,000,000 for annual operation costs.

J. Alphonse Ouimet, CBC's g.m., said the corporation had "quite a number" of tv shows looking for sponsors. But, he added, Canadian advertisers preferred lavish, cheaper shows from the U. S.

E. L. Bushnell, assistant g.m. of the corporation, said negotiations are under way to export several Canadian tv shows, live and on film, to the U.S., UK, France, Australia. Successful dickering for this action had been delayed by upped artist fees.

Supporting CARTB's brief, its exec. v.p., T. J. Allard, told the commission the association wanted an immediate end to the CBC "monopoly" under which only CBC-TV stations can operate in major cities. CARTB also wanted an independent regulatory board to replace CBC's present control of radio and tv in Canada, its own and all other as well.

Allard said he was reluctant to make specific charges against CBC because the 140 radio and 25 tv stations CARTB represents had to apply to CBC for such things as power increases and changes of frequency, and complaints might be remembered. Freedom of broadcasting, he said, should be equivalent to freedom of the press and regulations should not hinder stations serving their listeners with news, information, opinion, etc. But he didn't ask elimination of all regulations. "We draw," he said, "a distiction between entertainment and information." Newspapers were not barred from printing comic strips but certain strips could be prohibited.

rently in dispute, which is the only reason it wasn't included in the C-C block buy.

As for future acquisitions, Smith commented that "We plan to go to the FCC limits, both in UHF and VHF." Same applies to radio station buys, he continued. Other than the likelihood that the fifth VHF station would also be in Flint, Smith refused to be pinned down further. However, he noted that since the initial announcement of the C-C buys, he had been inundated with station sale offers.

All AM-tv properties bought by C-C are either in the black or at the breakeven point, he further noted. But a consideration in their purchase was that they haven't, as yet, reached full earning potentials. No particular pattern was followed in last fortnight's buys, merely that within the "profitable operation" limitations, these particular stations happened to be available.

C-C plans call for establishment of a wholly-owned subsid, American Communications Enterprises Inc., to handle the stations, Smith disclosed. Presumably, other subsids will be set up for production chores.

Columbus—Jim Mader, a Madison, Wisc., disc jockey, began last week on WVKO, Columbus radio station. He replaced the station's early-morning record-spinner Maurice Jackson, who switched to WTVN Radio in the same city.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Eight winners of Young & Rubicam awards, and grants of two special awards, were made by agency prexy Sigurd S. Larmon yesterday (Tues.). Grants made by the directors of the Y&R Foundation were based on recommendations and advice of a Scholarship Selection Committee composed of educators nominated by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N. J. All scholarships are for a four-year period and the amount of each will depend on the need of the individual. Scholarship winners are Barbara Bisogno, Rose De Paola, Thomas E. Feare, Stephen Guzy, Edythe C. Haber, Robert C. Hackett, Patricia J. McNamara and Nathaniel M. Queen. Winners of the special $1,000 grants are Dominick Manfredi and Anthony Rodriguez.

Commendable gesture tieing in the elements of playwriting and play production with emphasis in the broadcasting media has come to light with the establishing by Hartford radio station WTIC of a fellowship along those lines at the Yale U. School of Drama.

Funds for the fellowship came from an award ($1,000) made to WTIC by the Alfred I. duPont Awards Foundation. Award, given annually by the Foundation, is for an outstanding job in presenting educational, cultural, and other public service programs. It is a natural for the Yale tiein inasmuch as the station's Sunday at 6:15 program, "Yale Reports" (originally, in 1942, "Yale Interprets the News") was largely instrumental in the award coming to WTIC.

May 25 showing of "Crossroads," the Chevrolet-sponsored series about the clergy on ABC-TV, will be an offbeat entry in a couple of respects. Teleplay, "God in the Streets," is about the Salvation Army, and the scripter, Herb Purdom, knows whereof he speaks, because the play is based on the actual experiences of his parents, both of them members of the Army. Father is Capt. Harry Purdom.

Even more unusual is the fact that the Army itself is going all-out to plug the show, with its 1,342 street bands across the country asking people throughout the week of May 21 to tune in the show.

A stockholder's ad lib at a previous annual meeting "why don't we all have lunch here?", prompted the box-lunch idea at last Tuesday's (1) RCA yearly open meeting in studio 8H of NBC where 1,000 attended. As an extra fillip, to celebrate Gen. David Sarnoff's golden jubilee with the company, prexy Frank M. Folsom had ordered a 5-foot birthday cake in honor of the occasion.

Some unexpectedly humorous turns eventuated such as some apparently hungry stockholders (food, not profits this time) who just dunked their bare hands into the fancy culinary production, not waiting for slices. One femme was seen stashing six slices of the cake into her handbag, and a few others' took two and three of the box-lunches out with them at the meeting's end.

David Karp will have good reason to remember 1956. First, he has won a Guggenheim Fellowship award for proposed studies in creative writing. Second, earlier in the year his third novel, "All honorable Men," was issued at about the same time as the announcement of the sale of his teleplay, "Good Old Charley Faye," to Figaro, Inc. (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) for conversion into a feature film. Third, Karp's "real life" short stories are aired on CBS Radio's "Aunt Jenny" sudser.

Paul Tripp, whose "Tubby the Tuba" kiddie albums have sold over the 1,000,000 mark, introduces a new "Tubby the Tuba Goes to Town" set via his "On the Carousel" educational show on WCBS-TV May 19 as a "first time anywhere" special. Tripp, who writes the words to the album series to George Kleinsinger's music, and also narrates, will go longhair this summer by appearing as narrator of the original "Tubby" album with two symphony orchs. He appears with the Reading Philharmonic May 27, then with the Philadelphia Orch July 11, the latter at a Robin Hood Dell concert. Alexander Hilsberg conducts both performances.

Story last week about the Frank Cooper agency incorrectly identified Robert Paige as emcee of Cooper's new "Stand Up and Be Counted" CBS-TV daytimer. Actually, Robert Russell will emcee "Counted," which preems for the web May 28. Paige is involved with another Cooper project, a new series called "Holiday at Home," pilot of which Cooper is developing on the Coast, where Paige is a film and tv personality. Russell will emcee "Counted" out of N. Y.

Hamilton Watch Co. has set up a series of awards to honor local radio and television commentators for service to their community, state or nation. The Hamilton Time Awards will be made by a committee of seven newspaper reporters and editors, and there will be no limit on the number of such awards. Purpose is to accord local as well as national recognition to radio-tv commentators who have performed important public service as well as competently reported or analyzed the news.

Committee consists of Null Adams (chairman), city editor of the Memphis Press-Scimitar; Eugene Dickmuth, financial writer for the N. Y. Herald Tribune; Willard C. Haselbush, city editor, Denver Post; Harry McCormick, reporter, Dallas Morning News; Ruth Mugglebee, women's page editor, Boston Record-America-Sunday Advertiser; Paul Tiblier, managing editor, State Times, Jackson, Miss., and Andrew J. Viglietta, Washington correspondent for the Newhouse chain. First award will probably be made later this month.

less than a dozen shows required for a full season, there are more production auspices available for Friday night than spots to accommodate them. Each camp could bring in three or four, with Coe circling around to other spec slots and possibly even Tuesday night for the upcoming Kaiser-Aluminum skip-week dramatics at 9:30.

RCA is also earmarked to back one-fourth of the political conventions this summer, as is Sunbeam, making 50%. But with Oldsmobile taking one-third, that makes one-sixth missing. As of last week, NBC was trying to persuade parent RCA, plus Sunbeam, to hike their participation to one-third each to fill out the sponsorship on the Chicago and Frisco powwows.

GOLDEN AGE FOR EDUC'L MUSIC

Loesser's 'Most Happy Partners'

Frank Loesser, who has another click in his current legit musical, "The Most Happy Fella," had advance insurance of plenty of disk jockey plugs for the show score. In an offbeat promotion for the venture, Loesser gave key jockeys around the country a chance to buy a piece of the show. And many of them did invest, thus giving them a personal stake in spinning the tunes.

Loesser also made the same offer to the artists & repertoire chiefs of the major disk companies. A couple of the a&r boys took advantage of the opportunity. Whether that was any influence in Loesser getting unusual wide disk coverage on the "Fella" tunes from companies other than Columbia, which snagged the cast album, is undetermined, but the Loesser offer is certainly regarded as slick public relations.

Labor Referee Recommends Expulsion Of Read, Anti-Petrillo Coast Leader

A recommendation to expel Cecil F. Read, leader of the anti-James C. Petrillo faction of Coast Local 47, has been made by Arthur J. Goldberg, labor attorney, who recently ac'ed as referee in investigating the unseating of John te Groen as 47's prexy by Read and his followers. Goldberg's findings, which may result in the exit of the Coast musicians from the American Federation of Musicians, has been transmitted to AFM prexy Petrillo and his nine-man exec board for review and action.

Goldberg held that Read and 10 other members of Local 47 "did conspire illegally" in "open revolt." He recommended that Read, who "was and is the leader and guiding spirit" of the violations, should be expelled for one year. At the end of that period, he would have the right of reinstatement "provided he has not violated any Federation laws." For two years after his reinstatement, he could not hold any office in Local 47.

Goldberg recommended that 10 other supporters of Read in Local 47 should also be expelled but should be eligible for reinstatement one day after expulsion. They too would be unable to hold office after such reinstatement. These members are Uan Rasey, Ray Toland, Warren D. Baker, John Clyman, William Atkinson, Jack Dumont, William Ulyate, Earl Evans, Marshall Cram and Martin Berman. The first six are 47 board members and the others are rank-

'Cat' as Pop

Title of Tennessee Williams' legit click, "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof," has been taken over by Abner Silver and Roy Alfred for a new pop tune. Song, which is published by TeePee Music, was cut by Dinah Washington for the Mercury label.

Tune has nothing at all to do with the legiter but Teddy Powell, who heads up TeePee, hopes to get Metro, which is planning a film version of the show, interested.

Rose Vs. Bourne Again Delayed In Fed'l Court

The court action against Bourne Music for return of the copyright, "The Old Gang of Mine," was again postponed in N. Y. Federal Court Monday (7). Move to delay stemmed from the estate of Mort Dixon, co-plaintiff in the suit along with Billy Rose and Ray Henderson, which requested that the trial await the naming of an executor. It's expected that an execution to the Dixon estate will be designated within a couple of weeks and the trial may still come to bat before the end of this month.

The case involves the important question for the music biz of whether the renewal assignment provision in the old publisher-writer contracts is valid. Rose, who is spearheading the suit, has contended that Bourne does not have the right to publish "The Old Gang of Mine" beyond the first copyright term which expired in

ASCAP's 'Small' 500G Dividend

A "small" dividend of around $500,000 will be distributed by ASCAP this month from foreign performances of its catalog. Coin is from Canada and England. The big foreign melon is generally split in December when the rest of the world, including England and Canada, make a remittance to ASCAP.

ASCAP's regular quarterly payoffs from domestic sources have been averaging around $4,500,000 recently.

Editing Is Loesser Of 2 Evils on 'Happy Fella'; 2 Dates for Long Score

Frank Loesser's "The Most Happy Fella" will be put into the groove without too much editing. Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records exec veepee, who will head up the original cast sessions, claims that most of the earthy phrases in the Broadway tuner are not part of the score. He adds: "And we never know what won't work on wax until we hear it in a recording studio."

Col has slotted two Sunday dates for the grooving of "Fella" because of the size of the score. Loesser cleffed close to 35 songs for the musical. "Fella" will be packaged on two 12-inch LPs and priced at $9.98. First session is set for Sunday (13). Album marks Col's second original cast album of the season. First was the best-selling "My Fair Lady."

VICTOR'S STET CAST ON 'NEW FACES' ALBUM

RCA Victor has wrapped up the original cast album rights to Leonard Sillman's upcoming "New Faces of 1956." Victor grooved Sillman's last "New Faces of 1952."

Musical revue is scheduled to preem on Broadway June 14. Songs for the score were contributed by Sandy Wilson, June Carroll, Arthur Siegel, Matt Dubey & Harold Karr, Murray Grand, Marshall Barer & Dean Fuller, Paul Nassau and John Rox.

Also on Victor's original cast album agenda this spring is "Shangri-La," the Jerome Lawrence-Robert E. Lee-Harry Warren musical currently trying out on the road. Victor's only other original cast package this season has been Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Pipe Dream."

Meyer Davis will preem his new song, "Divot Digger," at the anniversary ball climaxing annual Greenbrier Spring Festival at White Sulphur Springs, West Va., Saturday (12). Davis will baton the orch.

TYRO TOOTERS, ORCHS BOOMING

By HERM SCHOENFELD

America's musical educators see the country on the threshold of a new Golden Age in musical activity due mainly to the tremendous spread of amateur instrumentalists. According to the American Music Conference, an association of music educators, more than one person in every six in the U. S. regularly plays some kind of instrument. The total comes to 27,650,000, an increase of almost 100% over the 14,300,00 players 20 years ago.

The dollar volume of the instrument business has been climbing in pace with the foregoing figures. In 1939, AMC estimates that the retail music business in instruments had a gross of $81,000,000, while in 1955 it was $380,000,000. Since 1952, the volume has increased by some $75,000,000.

The piano leads all other instruments in popularity by far. A total of 20,000,000 persons play the piano. The guitar ranks second with 4,000,000 players and violins are third with 3,000,000. As an incidental note, there are about 400,000 harmonica players in this country. There were 178,000 pianos sold last year, an increase of 28,000 over 1954.

AMC estimates that 8,000,000 children are now playing instruments and are getting school instruction. Over 500,000 music teachers are active in the field either on a fulltime or parttime basis. In the U. S. school system, there are now about 20,000 orchestras and 40,000 bands, a total increase of over 75% since the end of the last war.

Community orchestras are also springing up all over the country, according to AMC. Last year there were 1,100 amateur symphony orchs operating in various communities and professional groupings, such as doctors' and businessmen symph outfits. One-third of all these community groups are in cities of under 50,000 population.

The upbeat in classical music is also spotlighted in the AMC rundown of music education. AMC estimates that classical disks are now doing a retail gross of about $90,000,000. That's about 30% of the estimated annual disk volume of $300,000,000 for this year.

DuMont Dickers Par Music Cos.

Part of an internal corporate reorganization, DuMont Broadcasting Corp. is likely to buy out the Paramount-Famous music catalogs from Paramount Pictures for a reported $1,700,000. Bernard Goodwin, who is president of the DuMont company and also heads the music operation for Paramount, would thus bring all his exec responsibilities under one roof.

Paramount Pictures, which owns 26% of DuMont's stock, has a controlling interest in the telecasting company. Thus, the switch in ownership in the music catalog would be, in effect, an intra-corporate bookkeeping operation.

Teri Josefovits wound up a year's run at New York's Windsor Hotel last week to switch to the Quaker Ridge Inn, New Rochelle, N.Y.

MOA Opens in Chi to 'Beat ASCAP' Theme on Jukebox Tap; Org Vows Battle Vs. Change in Copyrights

By GABE FAVOINO

Chicago May 8.

Opening to the battlecry of "Beat ASCAP," the sixth annual convention of the Music Operators of America got under way at the Morrison Hotel here yesterday (Mon.). The MOA's determination to oppose, without compromise, any attempt to change existing copyright laws was constantly reiterated by MOA prexy George A. Miller and MOA general counsel Sidney H. Levine in their reports to delegates.

Almost equal in importance to the MOA stand on the continuing legislative fight was the organization's growing concern with its public relations. Triggered by several unflattering national mag articles in the past year, the MOA scheduled two top public relations experts as featured convention speakers.

Reviewing MOA's activity in the six years since its birth, prexy Miller said "MOA has saved the operators millions of dollars in the last six years, if nothing else."

'Roll' Fades in Cleve.

According to a poll conducted by Cleveland's WDOK last week, rock 'n' roll is on its way out. Station asked listeners to phone in reaction to the current teenage disk fad. Final tally was 1,968 for and 568 against.

WDOK exec Norman Wain stated that the survey results will be reflected in station's future programming.

MOA Claims No Link To Young's Diskery Project

Chicago, May 8.

Closing session here today (Tues.) heard Barney Young, prexy of National Juke Box Music Inc. and Ferris records, reveal details of a stock-record sale tie-in to obtain MOA support for the fledgling diskery. According to the plan, juke ops would receive one share of stock in Ferris for each five records bought; 2,990,000 shares at a par value of 10c. per share will be offered. Single waxings would sell to ops at 55c. each.

MOA prexy George Miller hastened to add that NJBM and Ferris are both owned solely by Young, not MOA, and that MOA had no desire to compete with the major record companies.

Rep. George P. Miller, of California, touched on the opportunity MOA has to divorce itself from "shady elements on the line between good and evil." He urged the industry to police itself, stating: "You have got to do what the movies, baseball and the liquor industry have done."

COL DICKERING NEW PACT WITH DORIS DAY

Columbia Records is wrapping up a new longterm deal with Doris Day. Pact is expected to be finalized on the Coast this week.

Thrush, who has been on the Columbia roster for the past eight years, had been reported during the past couple of months to be mulling the formation of her own indie diskery or to be ankling Col for a tieup with Randy Wood's Dot label.

The Day signing will mark Col's second major renewal in the past week. Last week the diskery tapped Jo Stafford to another five-year term.

Whitfield Planing In

London, May 8.

Singer David Whitfield flies to New York on Monday (14) for two Ed Sullivan CBS-TV shows, May 20 and 27. He will be accompanied by his musical director, Reg Warburton, as well as Sidney Grace and Pater Lavoie, of the Lew & Leslie Grade office.

Whitfield's current Decca waxing, "My September Love," is seventh in the bestselling records list.

Vegas Veering To Name Bands?

Las Vegas, May 8.

Possibility that the Las Vegas strip hotels may start booking name bands is seen here as an answer to the current hassle with American Federation of Musicians, which is demanding a 20% boost in scales for house bands. Hotel operators have been discussing a variety of solutions, including the possible elimination of shows for the summer.

Name band bookings is regarded in some quarters as a solution to the problem since the bands themselves could serve as marquee lures. Feeling among the operators is that the difference between existing scales and the fees required for traveling bands represents a better investment, in terms of a budget boost.

Hill & Range Wins 106G Vs. British Publisher Of 'Happy Wanderer'

The case of "The Happy Wanderer" has finally been settled. Judgment for $105,980 in favor of Hill & Range vs. Bosworth Ltd., British publishing firm, was affirmed in New York County Clerk's office last week.

The judgment originally had been handed down in New York Supreme Court Jan. 16, but the British firm won a motion in early February to stay the decision on the grounds that pubbery's topper, A. F. Bosworth, could not attend the trial in New York because he was suffering from the after-effects of a case of shingles.

H&R had brought suit against Bosworth over "The Happy Wanderer," claiming it had negotiated with the British firm for the U.S. rights to the song. H&R claimed that after a firm deal was made, Bosworth turned the song over to U. S. music publisher Sam Fox.

Ram-Delaney Split

Buck Ram and Joe Delaney have split up their partnership in the Ram-Delaney management office.

Talent properties will be divided between Ram, a Coast cleffer who wrote the hit, "The Great Pretender," and Delaney, ex-Cadence Records sales manager who is managing several singers and combos.

Waiting For Goddard

Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records exec veepee, is considering an original Broadway cast album of the current legiter, "Waiting for Godot."

Samuel Beckett's whatsit is probably the most controversial play to hit New York since T. S. Eliot's "The Cocktail Party," which was put into the groove by Decca.

"Godot" producer Michael Myerberg is currently huddling with Lieberson on the album project. Show's cast includes Bert Lahr, E. G. Marshall, Kurt Kaszner, Alvin Epstein and Luchino Solito De Solis.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Elvis Presley: "I Want You, I Need You, I Love You"-"My Baby Left Me" (RCA Victor). The current phenom of the music biz, Elvis Presley probably could have a hit if his name were on a blank disk. This coupling is sure of a big ride even though the material is not up to the level of his "Heartbreak Hotel" smash. "I Want You" is a slow ballad with a strong beat and Presley belts it with his identifying vocalisthenics. Flip, in a traditional blues vein, also gets an energetic workout.

Carmen McRae: "Star Eyes"-"Tonight He's Out To Break Another Heart" (Decca). A solid commercial disk by a savvy songstress who's due to break out with a big one sooner or later. Her lightly swinging version of the lovely ballad, "Star Eyes," should cop plenty of jockey spins. Miss McRae is equally effective on the reverse deck, an excellent entry with a smart lyric and catching tune.

Mantovani: "Heart of Paris"-"Merry Go Round Waltz" (London). With the pop biz in a schizophrenic state between rock 'n' rollers and class instrumentals, Mantovani's "Heart of Paris" could make the grade in the latter category. Its impact builds with repeat spins. Flip is so-so.

Werner Muller Orch: "Simonetta"-"All My Love" (Decca). "Simonetta" keeps turning up on wax and this side by the German maestro, Werner Muller, is one of the brightest workovers of this standard. It's another side that could ride the current instrumental cycle all the way. Flip is a highly effective version of the pop bolero hit of several years ago.

Billy Eckstine: "The Tennessee Rock 'n' Roll"-"Condemned For Life" (RCA Victor). Everybody is rocking 'n' rolling, even when they oughtn't to be. Billy Eckstine, whose previous ballad releases failed to register, has been switched to a more "commercial" idiom. These sides may have steam, but they go nowhere. Victor, incidentally, is laying the r&r beat on thick. Eartha Kitt has "Honolulu Rock 'n' Roll" and Vaughn Monroe is on "The Rock 'n' Roll Express." These obvious takeoffs can, and do, get boring.

Ocie Smith: "Lost Horizon"-"Going, Going, Gone" (MGM). "Lost Horizon," from the legit musical, "Shangri-La," is an interesting, atmospheric ballad with a quasi-exotic quality. Ocie Smith, backed by the Joe Lipman orch, sells the lyric nicely. Ray Bloch batons the same number effectively, segueing into a choral version of the title tune from the show. On the MGM flip, "Going, Going, Gone" has a fair lyric set to a familiar tango melody.

Jo Stafford: "Warm All Over"-"Big D" (Columbia). Jo Stafford fails to put the necessary heat into "Warm All Over," one of the numerous tunes out of the Frank Loesser score to "The Most Happy Fella." Flip is another tune from the show, a rousing number about Dallas.

Denise Lor: "That's The Way I Feel"-"Hurt Me" (Liberty). Denise Lor has a good potential in "That's The Way That I Feel," a smart ballad which she delivers with a sense of humor. Excellent change-of-pace for jocks who want to get away from the simple, and simpleton, vocals now on the pop lists. "Hurt Me" is a pedestrian torch number.

Ralph Waldo Cummings: "The Black Weekend"-"Hold On" (ABC-Paramount). "The Black Weekend" is an offbeat piece of folk-styled material about any holiday weekend when the auto casualties mount to headline figures. This is a tune with a gruesome safe-driving message. Coincidentally, there's a similar message by Tommy Brewer in a catching rhythm & blues tune, "Drag, Brother, Drag," about hot-rod hazards, on the indie Crystalette label. On the ABC-Par flip, "Hold On" is a routine hillbilly fare.

The Phantom: "Whispering"-"Five Foot Two, Eyes of Blue" (Capitol). The Phantom, a nameless rider of the keyboard range, is a ragtime stylist very much in the groove of Crazy Otto or Capitol's other 88er, Joe (Fingers) Carr. The nickelodeon sound has a catching quality and maybe that nom de disk will catch a few extra spins from the jocks.

Nick Noble: "The Big, Big Ladder"-"She Loves Me, She Loves Me Not" (Mercury). "Big Ladder" is a catching religioso tune with a happy rhythm and a matching lyric. Nick Noble impresses with his pleasing, effortless vocal. "She Loves Me" is a neat ballad, also with good chances.

Joe Sherman Orch & Chorus: "The Song From 'The Searchers'"-"Portuguese Washerwomen" (Kapp). From the Warner Bros. film, "The Searchers," the title song is a big oatuner in a classic mold. Like the western pix where it doesnt' matter if the plots don't vary, the familiar lyric and melodic ideas in this number have been jelled anew into a very tasteful entry. Ed McGurdy contributes a fine solo vocal to this side. Tex Ritter also has a neat version of this tune on Capitol. "Portuguese Washerwoman" on the Kapp reverse is a rollicking tune colorfully projected by orch and chorus.

Album Reviews

Decca's attractive package series, "Your Musical Holiday," a global Cook's tour in music that was launched last year in cooperation with Holiday magazine, has now been extended with six more excellent albums. The Holiday mag motif has been retained via the cover photos while the repertory covers some additional territory. There is a fine New York set cut by the Werner Muller orch and a collection of southland songs lushly rendered by the Guy Luypaerts orch. The four other albums are Latin-based, one each devoted to Spain, Barcelona, Mexico and the Dominican Republic. The Barcelona set, by a Catalan band with assists from native folk dancers and a choir, has a particularly charming local flavor.

Al Nevins Orch: "Escapade In Sound" (RCA Victor). Al Nevins, former guitarist with the Three Suns, cuts a neat figure as a pop maestro in this package. He batons a big orch with plenty of fiddles and the result is a classy choral-instrumental wrap-up of some fine standards. Set is pegged to a "night of romance and adventure" and the tunes tell the story via "Top Hat, White Tie and Tails," "Moonlight Cocktail," "Old Devil Moon," "Love For Sale," "Escapade," "In The Still of the Night," "Anything Goes" and "Let's Put Out the Lights," among others.

Louis Armstrong: "European Concert Recordings by Ambassador Satch" (Columbia). Louis Armstrong's news-making tour of Europe last year, which caused the U.S. State Dept. to finally awaken to jazz as America's most desirable export (next to money), is the occasion for this latest Satchmo collection. The numbers are familiar and all of them have been performed better by Armstrong in the past, but this set is marked by a sock photo of Satchmo in tails and striped pants, verily America's best goodwill envoy. Dixieland faves as "Royal Garden Blues," "Tin Roof Blues," "12th Street Rag," "Tiger Rag," and others were taped in various cities of western Europe. As usual, Armstrong's vocals are among the best things on the platter.

Frances Wayne-Neal Hefti Orch: "Songs for My Man" (Epic). This Mr. & Mrs. team adds up to a sock musical combo. Frances Wayne, a fine stylist who knows how to sell a song without becoming crassly commercial, is showcased here in a superlative collection. Neal Hefti, her husband, batons the orch backdrops with perfect balance. Miss Wayne's workover of "Mood Indigo," "Let's Do It," "The Man I Love" and "I'm Beginning To See the Light" are tops in this passel of standouts.

Lionel Hampton-Art Tatum-Buddy Rich Trio (Clef). Three first-class jazzmen join in a swinging collection of standards. It's pleasing blend of vibes, piano and drums which, despite the "star" names, has an integrated quality with, however, plenty of room for freewheeling solos. Tunes include 'Perdido," "How High The Moon," "What Is This Thing Called Love," "More Than You Know," "Makin' Whoopee," "Hallelujah" and "I'll Never Be The Same." Each tune gets lots of time for the teamplay and solo flights.

In the jazz album pileup are Earl Hines' "Oh Father" (Epic), a sampling of Hines' diskings cut between 1933 and '38 . . . "The Teddy Charles Tentet" (Atlantic), some imaginative harmony experi-

Ted Heath Click at Carnegie Hall Reprises Int'l 'Power of the Platter'

The potential of disks to create a big b.o. demand nationally, and even internationally, has again been illustrated with the click of the Stan Kenton and Ted Heath bands on their recently concluded Anglo-U. S. reciprocal tours. Kenton, playing Britain for the first time, hit consistently high grosses on his 31 British dates due to his prior acceptance as a platter name in that country.

Similarly, Heath and his 17-piece organization scored strongly in the U. S. because of his London Records' "advance man" promotion. Heath, in fact, sells more records in the U. S. than he does in Britain. His standing with his U. S. fans was demonstrated at his SRO concert at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., last Tuesday night (1), the kissoff of his monthlong tour of the U. S. While Heath played all of his non-N. Y. dates with Nat (King) Cole as the top name on the bill, the British bandleader drew a capacity $9,950 at Carnegie playing without Cole, but accompanied by June Christie and the Four Freshmen. Judging from the accent of the crowd, a large part of the British colony in N. Y. turned out for the event, but so did the young jazz fans who generally frequent such concerts.

A leading British dance band for the last 10 years, Heath's unit impressed as a sharp organization which manages to swing although the arrangements are firmly set. In this respect, it's much like the old Glenn Miller band, even to the choreographic movements of the various sections as each takes the spotlight. It's still a savvy piece of showmanship when executed right, although few U. S. dance bands go in for this type of precision today.

Heath's combo, while chiefly a traditional swing band, indulges in some modern stuff also. At the Carnegie date, a couple of arrangements by Bill Russo had a definite Kentonesque quality, Russo also being arranger for Kenton.

Heath scored with his straight repertory, including such instrumentals as "Processional," "Stonehenge," "Lullaby In Rhythm," "Memories of You," "Autumn In New York," among some two dozen numbers. Peak impact, however, came with his "Rhapsody in Drums" and a comic takeoff on current rock 'n' roll fad via some exaggerated musical effects. Heath, incidentally, emceed the show in a polite, articulate, British manner.

Austrian Outfit Asks Native Music Accent

Vienna, May 8.

A new outfit, the Austrian Society of Lyricists, has been formed to get more plays for native songsmiths. It's prime target are musical programs on radio. The group, headed by prexy Rudolf Berdach, is completely independent of the Austrian licensing society, AKM, although the membership overlaps.

The lyricists contend that less than 50% of native tunes was programmed on radio last year. While conceding that foreign music should have a proper share, it's held that then present situation militates against the fostering of Austrian authors.

Victor's Pic-Plus 'Vagabond' Pkge.

Hollywood, May 8.

RCA Victor begins recording a "Vagabond King" album, starring Oreste, this week after having decided against making a soundtrack package out of the Paramount film. Oreste is starred with Kathryn Grayson in the newest film version of the Rudolf Friml musical.

Picture doesn't contain enough music to round out a full package.

Label hired Jean Fenn to handle the femme vocal chores opposite Oreste and will back the singers with a 45-piece orch and a 25-voice chorus. Package will include most of the old score plus three new tunes which Friml wrote for the picture. Henri Rene, label's Coast recording chief, is supervising.

Merrill, Set to Clef 'Anna Christie,' Raps B'way 'Caste System' on Popsters

Bob Merrill, latest Tin Pan Alley tunesmith to make the jump into Shubert Alley, still can't understand legit producers' reluctance to give pop writers a chance at show scores. Merrill gets his first crack at Broadway next season with the musical version of Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie," to be produced by Frederick Brisson, Robert Griffith and Harold Prince.

The aforementioned production team, incidentally, seem to lean towards pop tunesmiths for their tuner vehicles. They clicked with Dick Adler and the late Jerry Ross on the scores for their moneymaking "The Pajama Game" and "Damn Yankees." According to Merrill, however, the Adler-Ross breakthrough hasn't opened the gates for the young pop writers. Legit producers continue to place them in a separate category and look elsewhere for their show writers.

Merrill feels that the songwriter caste system established by the producers should be done away with and that more of the young tunesmiths should be given opportunities to handle a show score. "Given a chance," Merrill states, "the pop writers will outdo the established showtune writers around today."

In the heyday of the musical theatre in the '20s and '30s, Merrill points out, there was no differentiation between a pop writer and a show score writer. Tunes from legiters automatically became the pop hits of the day and the Gershwins, Irving Berlin, Jerome Kern, Cole Porter, and Rodgers & Hart were considered pop writers.

Merrill got his chance to move from the Brill Bldg. to Sardi's via Hollywood. He recently was pacted to a seven-year writer-producer deal at Metro with the musicalization of "Anna Christie" as his first assignment. When the Broadway boys heard the score, they worked out a deal with the studio to produce a stage version first. George Abbott is preparing the book.

On the publication of the score, Merrill is taking a cue from tunesmith Frank Loesser, who publishes his works via his own Frank Music firm. Merrill will publish the "Anna Christie" music via his Valyr Music operation.

Martha Lou's Col-to-Cap

Martha Lou Harp has been signed to a deal by Capitol Records. Singer was formerly on the Columbia label.

Miss Harp is the wife of Tim Gale, head of the Gale Agency, which inked the deal.

Dizzy in Europe After Middle East Goodwiller

Dizzy Gillespie wound up his tour of the Near and Middle East in Istanbul Sunday (6) and is heading for dates in Belgrade, Athens and London before returning to the U. S. during the last week in May.

Tour was under sponsorship of American National Theatre & Academy's International Exchange Program. Gigs set up by the U. S. State Dept. were in Abadan, Iran; Karachi, Pakistan; Bengal, Pakistan; Beirut, Lebanon; Damascus, Syria; Aleppo, Syria, and Ankara and Istanbul, Turkey. Gillespie's first U. S. stand after the tour will be at New York's Birdland May 23.

Cap Rolling 19 Pop Sets in Spree

Hollywood, May 8.

Total of 19 pop albums dominate Capitol's May-June release package of 28 albums which go out this week. Group includes six classical albums and three in the country and western fields.

Pop stuff includes heavy concentrations of individual artists with four by Ray Anthony and two by Stan Kenton. Others include selections under the label's International plan, including "Sunday in Spain," "Neapolitan Songs," "Paris Revisited," "Les Quatre de Paris," "Introduction to Flamenco," "Honeymoon in Rome," "In London, in Love," "Santiago" and "Germany Today."

Also included is the offbeat Jackie Gleason "Night Winds" album featuring 21 flutes.

Classical entries range from Tchaikovsky's Concerto Number One in B-Flat Minor by Ventsislav Yankoff with the new Symphony Orchestra of London to "Fiesta" with Carmen Dragon coducting the Hollywood Bowl Symphony.

MGM Adds Threesome

MGM Records bolstered its roster last week with a trio of pactings. Added to the label were pianist Luther Henderson and crooners Andy Starr and Fred Wamble.

Henderson will cut a special jazz album for the label, while Starr and Wamble will groove for singles fields. Wamble, incidentally, is a deejay in Montgomery, Ala.

VARIETY Scoreboard OF TOP TALENT AND TUNES

Map U. S. Concerts For Melachrino

George Melachrino, British orch. leader who arrived in New York Monday (7), is aiming to set up a concert tour of the U. S. along the lines of Mantovani's swing across the country last year. It's expected that Melachrino will use U. S. musicians just as Mantovani did, and thus preclude any hassle with the American Federation of Musicians which generally frowns upon British orchs playing in this country unless there's a man-for-man exchange. Music Corp. of America is handling the batonist.

Melachrino, who disks for HMV (His Master's Voice) in Britain, is one of RCA Victor's leading album sellers. He's sold over 1,000,000 sets in this country.

WELK'S 24G SRO 1-NITER ADVANCE

Portland, Ore., May 8.

Advance for the Lawrence Welk one-nighter at the Auditorium here June 6 has hit a sellout $24,000. SRO sign was posted nearly a month before the scheduled date. Auditorium capacity is 4,250. Scaled from $3.50 to $10.

John Schile, general manager of the ABC-TV affiliate, KLOR-TV, and prexy of the Central Catholic High School Dad's Club, signed the date for the benefit of the school fund.

Morton Gould will conduct the N.Y. Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at Ebbets Field June 6 at the Annual "Music Under the Stars" concert to be presented by the American Fund for Israel Institutions.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Inside Stuff—Music

The article by Lloyd Dunn, Capitol Records vice-prexy, in the special Capitol section of the April 25 issue of VARIETY, had its punchline snafued by one of those typographical gremlins. The concluding paragraph of the article should have read: "So this is merely to suggest that when you find the music business frustrating to the point that you wish you were selling pickled herring or anything except music, stop and think for awhile. This is the most exciting business in the world. It can be the most profitable, and frequently is. And now it is time for my coffee break, Sanka that is. The old ulcer is acting up. It's the music business." (Sanka was part of the author's running gag in his serio-comic treatise).

Mrs. Shimpei Nakayama, wife of the late Japanese pop songwriter who had a reputation of being Nippon's Irving Berlin, presented a doll raccoon for Eartha Kitt last week in New York for her disk of "The Hungry Raccoon." Number, written by Nakayama, has sold over 200,000 copies in Japan. In Japan, Nakayama wrote exclusively for the Japanese Victor label, which used to be affiliated with the U. S. company. George R. Marek, Victor's album chief, gave Mrs. Nakayama the red carpet treatment last week while visiting the New York studios. She was escorted on the tour by John Sommerer, Victor recording quality manager who worked in Japan for eight years and knows the lingo.

Billy Eckstein, oldtime composer-pianist who for two decades in the '20s and '30s was "cinema interpreter" at the Montreal Strand, Montreal, revived that skill May 1. He and Armand Meerte, who was drummer with him there, "interpreted" the old Douglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hood" at a Montreal Men's Press Club showing. Eckstein, at 67, still 88s nightly at Jack Horn's Clover Cafe.

Teresa Brewer has copped the annual Catholic Youth Organization 'Diocesan Crown Award" for 1956. Award will be presented to the thrush Friday (11) by the CYO Diocese of Brooklyn at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Past winners have been Ted Mack, 1953; Ed Herlihy, 1954, and Ed Sullivan, 1955.

For the Record

Concord, N.H., May 8.

The State Planning and Development Commission here has turned up with a claim that the original lyrics of "The Yellow Rose of Texas" were written by a New Hampshire man, Josiah Moody Fletcher of Nashua, and were included in a volume published by C. C. Parker of Nashua in 1890.

The commission said, "We felt duty-bound to call this fact to national attention." Don George is credited with the lyric on the recent Mitch Miller disk click.

BILLY WARD TO DECCA FOR POP, R&B SLICES

Billy Ward & His Dominoes, a rhythm & blues combo formerly with King Records, has been pacted by Decca. Ward will be featured with his combo in r&b material and as a straight pop singer with full orch accompaniment. Milt Gabler, Decca artists & repertoire chief, cut Ward's initial sides for the label on the Coast last week.

Gabler also signed Kay Brown, a Coast canary, for the pop roster. Johnny Caroll, meantime, has been added to the company's country & western lineup.

Diskers Shooting for Summer Biz Via Deferred Payments, Special Buys

Decca Unveils Another Push for 'Holiday' Sets

Decca Records is launching another major promotion for its "Holiday Series" of packaged merchandise. While this series was originally issued in cooperation with Holiday mag, the diskery has now extended the number of platter releases without a direct mag tieup although the album format remains the same.

In addition to the initial nine "Holiday" sets, Decca has issued six more and is running a window display contest for dealers with a travel theme. Winning dealer gets a cuffo vacation in Rio with the Varig Airlines picking up the transportation tab.

Decca is supplying dealers with extensive exploitation material and a motorized rack to display the album series. In addition the diskery has issued a special disk jockey "sampler," with excerpts from the various sets.

Following the calendar, the top diskeries are continuing to work out plans to overcome the anticipated summer doldrums with special seasonal promotions.

RCA Victor, for example, is instituting a special deferred payment program for its distributors while the Victor distribs are making their own deals with the retailers in their areas. Some distribs are offering dealers an additional 5% discount on everything but the current pops while others are pitching their own deferred payment plans. Other companies are offering similar programs to help stimulate summer sales.

Columbia's summer sales pitch, "Buy of the Month," which was launched last week, got off to a winging start with initial distributor orders on the two albums in the plan pushing close to the 200,000 mark. The "Buy of the Month" program features two 12-inch LPs a month (one pop and one longhair) priced at $2.98 at the retailer level.

The pop and the classical LPs are practically running neck and neck in sales with the Rosemary Clooney-Duke Ellington "Blue Rose" package pulling in 108,000 orders and David Oistrakh's Mozart-Mendelssohn coupling racking up 91,000 sales. The LP "buys" for June will be announced May 15.

'Calendar of ASCAP' Trots Out 'Rosie O'Grady,' Etc., In D.C.; Brownell on Dais

Washington, May 8.

Sixth annual ASCAP luncheon show for the National Press Club last week turned out to be one of the best of the popular series. Called a "Calendar of ASCAP," it loosely brought pop music up from the '90s to the present to the usual over-capacity crowd for the affair.

With ASCAP's new prexy, Paul Cunningham, emceeing, entertainment got off to a nostalgic start when Maude Nugent Jerome was introduced. She sang "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," which she wrote more than 60 years ago, and brought down the house with a clog step to the tune, from old, old vaude days.

In order, others who played their compositions and sang some of them were Ernie Burnett, J. Fred Coots, Dana Suesse, Burton Lane and George Weiss. Aiding with the vocalizing were Fran Russell, Dick Noel and Bobby White.

And to crown the affair, ASCAP finally succeeded in getting a U. S. Attorney General, Herbert Brownell, at the head table for its annual affair.

Day before the luncheon, Senator William Langer (R., N. D.), read into the Congressional Record a tribute to Cunningham who, among other things, is the author of the official state song of North Dakota.

VIK AUGMENTS ROSTER WITH COMBOS, SINGERS

Vik Records, RCA's disk subsid, augmented its artists roster with a flock of signings recently. Among the additions are the Treniers, instrumental-vocal rhythm group formerly with Epic Records, and the Coronados, formerly the Trio Ortiz on the Victor International label. Latter is a Mexican group which does a Latin-accented rock 'n' roll.

Vik also pacted the Bob-O-Links, another rhythm combo; Danny Thomas; a ballad singer, and Joe Clay, a 17-year-old rock 'n' roll singer from the south.

Allied's Neely Easting

Hal Neely, sales exec for Allied Records, indie Coast label, heading east for a six-week stay in New York.

He stopped off in Chicago last weekend for the Music Operators of America conclave.

Jan Garber orch plays a one-nighter today (Wed.) at Sevenoaks Country Club, San Antonio.

Bally Hi; Sales Low as Boston's Stop & Shop Springs 99c Album

Boston, May 8.

Stop & Shop kicked off the sale of jazz disks here Thursday (3) with large display ads in Boston newspapers. The supermarket is selling a new album each week for 12 weeks at 99c per album.

Album No. 1 went on sale after a press party held at George Wein's Storyville nitery in which the theme of "jazz comes to the supermarket" was portrayed. To bally the jazz sets, the super is running a drawing, to be held Saturday (12), in which a hi-fi system will be given away. First reports on the super's disk merchandising kick indicated sales were slow. The deal involves the RCA Victor custom records division and J. J. Little & Ives, promotion house for supermarkets.

The jazz records are being played on hi-fi systems at each of the Stop & Shop supers while customers shop. The test is to indicate whether the market for jazz can be broadened through the 99c disks and whether jazz can pull additional traffic.

At the Memorial Drive Stop & Shop in Cambridge, one of the super's largest, a booth was set up in the lobby for the jazz disks and the hi-fi set. While interest was high, sales were low in the initial few days of the test. Stop & Shop officials withheld comment pending study of reports of sales from all units for the first week.

So Who Needs It?

A Czechoslovakian radio station has added a new wrinkle to the musical request program. Radio Free Europe's monitoring service recently picked up this announcement from Radio Bratislava, a leading Czech station.

"First of all, we shall announce the names of listeners to whom the music is played. Furthermore, we shall play only to good workers whose letter of request is accompanied by a certificate from the shop committee of his trade union organization. Certificates obtained from the farm-collective administrator or the municipal council will also be acceptable. In the case of youth or children, a certificate must be issued by the local youth organization or school administration."

Moppet Trend in Again; Victor Inks 5-Year-Old

The moppets are getting back into the disk act. While eight-year-old Barry Gordon is turning 'em out at MGM Records, RCA Victor has signed up a five-year old, Patty Austin, a Negro lassie from New York. She's cutting straight pop material.

The kid cycles come and go. The last big one was started by Jimmy Boyd several years ago. His pipes have since changed.

New England Ballroom Finds a Click Formula For Biz: Dance Music

Weymouth, Mass., May 8.

Gary Aluisy, operator of Coral Gables, ballroom with 1,000 capacity, three cocktail bars with 300 capacity and a snack bar, has come up with a successful ballroom format which is bringing in capacity Saturday night biz at $1.50 per head. It's no-fad danceable music in sweet style, played as written by a six-piece houseband, Ray Hill, which has the longest ballroom run in the territory, seven years.

This ballroom, with its plush settings, is a throwback to 20 years ago—couples come there to dance. Aluisy, a foe of rock 'n' roll and faddist dancing, says he's proved that the youngsters of today will go for ballroom dancing just as their parents did if it's presented right.

While other ballrooms in the territory are vying with each other in booking name bands, hot record chirps and rock 'n' roll exponents, Aluisy says he's sticking to the "danceable music format." "The dance crowd today," he said, "averages between 19 to 21 on the distaff side, 21-24 on the male side."

Of the 1,000 capacity crowd at the ballroom Saturday nights, the bar take is an average of two drinks each from half the crowd, 500. The other 500 average no drinks at all. The snack bar, cokes, coffee and sandwiches averages 100% with each of the 1,000 making at least one purchase. He points with pride to the fact that only one officer is needed. A fight has yet to occur in his ballroom.

Cavanaugh's Cap Dates

Hollywood, May 8.

Dave Cavanaugh headed east over the weekend for a four-week trek to New York and Chicago to cut albums for Capital. He'll produce a session with Woody Herman in New York and one with Pee Wee Hunt in Chi.

Cavanaugh also will visit distribs and branch managers in various eastern cities.

Tiny Hill to Operate Colo. Radio Station

Vet orch leader Tiny Hill is moving into the radio business. He's building a new station between Brighton and Fort Lupton, Colo. Call letters will be KHIL.

Hill will hit the road with his band this summer in a string of one-nighters kicking off July 1. Trek is being handled by the Associated Booking Corp.

Name Orchs' 'If Gov't Wants Us O'seas, Up Scale'

Name bands are shying away from U. S. State Dept. bids to go abroad on goodwill tours. It's just a matter of economics.

The bandleaders claim that they can't afford to play musical ambassadors under State Dept. auspices. For the most part the State Dept. is offering the bands scale for the overseas trek and even if the leaders want to go for publicity purposes, they can't hope to get their sidemen to go along at the scale rates.

One top band, which turned down a State Dept. bid a few weeks ago, was offered $1,700 below its weekly operating cost. Few bands can afford to go out on a three to four weeks' hop at that rate.

One band manager put it this way: "Why does the Government give away millions of dollars for aid to foreign countries and then, when it suddenly finds out that bands have become important goodwill ambassadors, does it ask us to go overseas on scrimp-and-save salaries."

As result, name bands have been scheduling tours through private promoters who can scale tickets at prices that will get them a profitable return. Such bands as Louis Armstrong's and Lionel Hampton's have gone overseas under regular commercial auspices and have done a sock public relations job for the U. S.

WHITMAN GOLD-DISKED IN BRIT.; SOCKO TOUR

London, May 8.

With a Sunday concert last weekend at Dublin, country & western singer Slim Whitman ended his first British tour in a click. Whitman is scheduled to fly back to New York from London Airport tomorrow (Wed.).

A socko variety tour which broke records all over the provinces was climaxed Sunday (April 29) when Whitman was presented with a gold disk in recognition of topping the 2,000,000 mark in sales of his records in Britain. Ceremony, which took place at the Cote D'Azur Club, was performed by W. Townsley, head of London Records in Britain. Club was crowded with fans who came from all over the country to attend the ceremony.

Kahl to Prowl Europe For Pub Affiliations

Latest publisher to get in on the global kick is Phil Kahl, who heads overseas May 25 to eye possibilities for setting up pubbery affiliates abroad. He'll o.o. the situation in England, France, Italy, Belgium and the Scandinavian countries.

Meantime, his pard in Patricia Music and Kahl Music, Morris Levy, is on his way back from a European trek where he lined up dates for the first Birdland Jazz Concert tour there. Package, which will kick off in November, has already set the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Also in the global vein, Kahl Music has set its tune, "I Want You to Be My Girl," with Boosey & Hawkes for publication in England and the Continent.

Polish Maestro's Album

Ted Maksymowicz, Polish orch leader, has been tagged by ABC-Paramount to cut an album of Polish-American music.

Maestro heads up the Monday night Polish dances at New York's Roseland Ballroom.

MOA on 'Starving Songwriters'

Chicago, May 8.

Reporting on efforts to defeat any proposed changes in existing copyright legislation, Music Operators of America general counsel Sidney H. Levine told delegates to the MOA convention here yesterday (Mon.) that "so far we have been 100% successful, but that is no guarantee that we will continue to be successful. It is my considered opinion that, without MOA's efforts over the last six years, this legislation would have been passed a long time ago, as sure as day follows night."

Levine read from the minutes of recent Congressional hearings on the copyright law to underscore the MOA's stand against any "compromise with ASCAP." Levine said: "On behalf of the nation's music operators, I would like to state that the automatic phonograph industry does not intend to make any concessions to the performance rights societies, and it need not. The law as it stands is fair to all segments of the industry."

Levine attacked the ASCAP argument that juke operators were "robbing poor starving songwriters." He said that the cleffers already get a royalty from the record companies and that "those who stand to benefit most from a revised copyright law are the multi-million dollar motion picture music publishing interests represented in ASCAP."

MOA Opens in Chicago

He was referring to the proposed $52 per machine copyright fee which would become law if one of the proposed copyright bills were enacted by Congress. Several times during Miller's and Levine's reports, the hint was implicit that, eventually, some revision of existing performance right laws would be made. Until such time, of course, the MOA, originally organized to fight ASCAP attempts to obtain performance rights payments from jukebox operators, would continue to fight any change in the copyright laws tooth and nail.

Pledges AFM Fight

Miller also made reference to and pledged a fight against a threat looming from a new quarter, the musicians' union. Miller said his organization would also resist any attempts by the tooters to get their fingers into the juke pie, as pledged by the insurgent president of American Federation of Musicians' Local 47, Cecil F. Read, in his campaign for the local's presidency.

Relegating the MOA-sponsored third performance rights society, National Jukebox Music Inc. and the oft-touted MOA record company to a back seat, in contrast to the spotlight they occupied last year, Miller said that they were organized only so that "we would be ready in case any new copyright legislation is passed." Making a low bow in the direction of the record companies, he continued: "MOA will never go into the record business in competition with our good friends. We have to have an organization to put out one or two records a month, but not in competition with the record companies."

Form Tax Council

Miller also revealed formation of a National Tax Council by the operators' association, with four regional subdivisions to lead local operators in the fight against local taxation or licensing.

The MOA head told delegates that a proposed plan to include paid advertising disks on the nation's jukeboxes had divided MOA members right down the middle, with 50% for and 50% against, and therefore had been abandoned. The plan was a highlight of last year's convention.

Miller called for renewed support from MOA members to defeat attempts to pass any one of the "four bills in the House and two in the Senate" aimed at revising the copyright laws. Miller also disclosed that the MOA's bylaws would be amended at this convention to increase the number of directors on the MOA board and that he had just signed a new five-year contract as MOA president at a salary of $12,000 per year. A new group disability and accident insurance plan was also ready for MOA members, he said.

'A Night at the Apollo' As 'Typical Bill' Etching In Vanguard's Showcase

The Apollo Theatre, Harlem (N.Y.) vaude flagship, has been immortalized on wax by Vanguard Records. Diskery has put together a typical Apollo bill for a 12-inch LP set in its Theatre Showcase series. Package is tagged "A Night At The Apollo."

Put into the groove were dancers Coles & Atkins, impersonator George Kirby, comedienne Jackie (Moms) Mabley, vocal combo the Keynoters, the Apollo Band of the Year, and an amateur night program, which the house runs every Wednesday. The Apollo Band of the Year, incidentally, is Count Basie, who goes unbilled because of a contractual commitment to Norman Granz's Norgran label.

Package was produced at the theatre by John Hammond. Langston Hughes wrote the liner notes.

ist who toured the U. S. with the Cole-Heath package, is a savvy jazz vocalist in a progressive groove. Her vocal mannerisms are sometimes tricky, but she always manages to swing and she hit with renditions of such numbers as "Something Cool" and "Get Happy."

The Four Freshmen closed the show with a strong upbeat. The vocal-instrumental combo cut fancy capers through a flock of rhythm numbers and had the joint jumping with a rollicking rock 'n' roll number.

Cole came on stage at the close for a bow while Heath made an appropriate curtsy to the U. S., saying that the Carnegie Hall date was the climax of his career.

Labor Referee

and-filers. Another board member, Vincent DeRosa, was found guilty of violating only one AFM regulation, and due to mitigating circumstances, Goldberg recommended no disciplinary action. Another member, George Wald, was found not guilty.

Goldberg found that there was a "deliberate and willful conspiracy to suspend te Groen, not for any neglect of duty or other proper charge, but because he would not agree in advance to lead the Local in defiance of the lawful regulations of the Federation. . . . The membership of 16,000 was not notified of the action which was planned at a secret caucus."

Another serious charge was that Read and his supporters "advocated dual unionism" by seeking to win from the AFM its bargaining rights for musicians in all fields of recorded and filmed music. Goldberg criticized Read's faction for not appealing their complaints to the AFM convention which meets in June.

Read has been spearheading a fight against the AFM policy of channeling coin into the Music Performance Trust Fund, which is designed to mitigate tooter unemployment by subsidizing cuffo concerts, rather than getting higher wages for individual musicians working the dates.

It's expected that the AFM board will meet later this month to act on the referee's report.

Rose Vs. Bourne

1951. Conceding that he and his two collaborators on the tune assigned the copyright renewal in the original contract, Rose now claims that that renewal was "unconscionable" since it was made before the advent of films and tv and since Bourne failed to exploit the tune adequately.

Rose's side suffered a big setback two weeks ago when Federal Judge Thomas F. Murphy denied his petition to examine Bourne's books. The judge said the plaintiffs failed to show "good cause" for such an examination and also criticized the songwriters for making such a request on the eve of the trial.

The Rose vs. Bourne suit is being closely watched by all music execs since the point in dispute involves numerous important copyrights of the 1920s. At that time, it was customary for writers to assign their renewal rights to publishers. Since the formation of the Songwriters Protective Assn. in 1932, the basic contract provides for the renewal to revert automatically back to the writers.

Travis' Victor Sets

Hollywood, May 8.

After 18 months with the label, Tony Travis is being pushed into the album field by RCA Victor. Heretofore, he's been heard only on single releases.

Package now being prepared under the supervision of Dennis Farnon, Coast album producer, will concentrate on standards and some "polite swing."

SPA Slows Down Pubs On Sale Of Foreign Rights

Rush of some publishers to sell the foreign rights to tunes before working on them in the U. S. is being slowed down by the Songwriters Protective Assn. SPA has informed publishers that before selling the foreign rights, they must first comply with the basic contract provision which calls for sheet music publication, plus a record release or a printed orchestration or a $250 advance. If there's no compliance, the songwriter can get back his copyright from the publisher.

At the present time, SPA execs are still powwowing about a new basic pact to be presented to publishers. Current contract expires at the end of this year and, judging from the last negotiations, it's expected that the bargaining procedure will extend over many months.

One provision that's due to be dropped from the next contract is the clause calling for the printing of orchestrations. Since the last deal was made in 1946, orchestrations on pop tunes have virtually disappeared and the clause no longer means anything in writer-publisher relations.

AGVA Threatens 'Opposition Circus' For Boston If North Holds Out

Boston, May 8.

Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, in to confer with Hub labor leaders, and Smiley Hart, local AGVA rep, set plans to picket Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus at its Boston stand of six days opening at Boston Garden Tuesday (15). They said if John Ringling North, head of the show, doesn't sign, AGVA will bring in an all-union circus to open on the same day with a $1.50 admission charge for adults and all kids cuffo.

"If it is found impossible for AGVA to come to terms with the Ringling management, we will bring an all-union circus to Boston to open on the same day," he said. He declared that the show will be faced with the same labor problems in Boston and will meet "stiff competition."

Pickets will be on hand Tuesday afternoon for opening matinee unless North signs, the AGVA officials said. Bright conferred with Stephen E. McCloskey, business agent of the Central Labor Union, and Harold Cardarett of the Car-

Kitt, Dandridge Dates

London, May 8.

Variety projects for Eartha Kitt and Dorothy Dandridge, both currently in cabaret here at the Cafe de Paris and Savoy Hotel, respectively, include a date for Miss Kitt at Glasgow Empire in June and a week at the Liverpool Empire for Miss Dandridge from May 14.

Further bookings for both artists are now being negotiated.

YOUNGSTOWN ARENA FATE UP TO CITY

Youngstown, May 8.

An offer to sell the privately-owned Youngstown Arena to the city of Youngstown "at a very reasonable price" has been made by the owners, headed by Joseph Sheban, president. "We feel the city should have the first chance to buy the Arena before we sell, lease, or change the use of it to a bowling alley," he said.

The building has been used for sporting events, home shows, sales, bingo games, and a variety of other events.

Ill. Drive-In's Stageshow Foldo

Chicago, May 8.

The Starlite Drive-In in suburban Oak Lawn folded its stageshow policy after two weekends. The acts hadn't yet been paid off and operator Stanford Kohlberg was said to be out of the city. The American Guild of Variety Artists has a bond for the show, but amount is $2,000 under the required amount. Matter has been placed in the hands of the union's attorney.

Failure of the vaude policy was blamed on bad weather, buying of acts with virtually no b.o. pull, and bad pix that couldn't compete with other drive-ins.

RENTALS BOOMIN' ON MIXED FARE

Growth of the exposition field has contributed to one of the biggest seasons in years for most arenas in the U.S. The number of events which the large showshops have been able to grab has been expanding tremendously: In recent seasons, everything from home shows, do-it-yourself shows, flower, automobile, stamp, boat, spots, livestock exhibs and other types of shows have given the auds a tremendously larger list of rentals, and with it an increased amount of revenue which is still growing.

The arenas today are no longer dependent upon the standby types of attractions such as sports and ice shows. These still remain the backbone of the arena business in most areas. Bulk of arenas, this season, did considerably better in basketball and hockey. The device of shifting home games from one city to another is continuing to pay off. For example, in the Eastern Basketball League, the Baltimore team, burned out of its homebase, shifted its own games to Charlotte, N. C., and did considerably more business. In some situations, the hockey teams have done better when playing home games in other cities.

The pickup in sports and various kinds of exhibitions has come on top of an excellent season with touring shows. The various icers particularly, "Ice Capades," "Holiday on Ice" and "Ice Follies," along with the multitude of rock 'n' rollers, have frequently given the arena operators an added measure of prosperity because of the percentage deals.

Vegas Tooters Toss Back 5% Hike At Inns, Demand 20%; See Walkout

Las Vegas, May 8.

Negotiations between resort hotels and the local American Federation of Musicians is still bogged down as musicians rejected a 5% wage hike, remaining adament in their demand for a 20% boost. Four of the eight Vegas Strip hotels—Sahara, El Rancho, Thunderbird and Riviera—have placed their orch on notice which, if a contract settlement isn't reached, will see the tooters blowing their last notes Thursday evening (10).

Hotel ops have underscored their stand with the threat that they will boycott entertainment completely if the musicians don't drop their holdout for a 20% increase. This boost would see Double "A" sidemen bettering their stipends by $25, giving them a total $150 weekly paycheck. Hotelmen fear that if they grant the 20% to the AFMers, other unions —whose memberships are stronger—would climb on the bandwagon and, as one op predicted, "overload our already steep overhead to a point where there just wouldn't be any practical reason to stay in business."

Another rialto spokesman said, "I would turn my hotel into a bingo parlor before I would give

Eartha 1st Negro For N.Y. Persian

Eartha Kitt will be the first Negro performer to headline the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel, N. Y. She goes in Oct. 11 on a deal set last week by the William Morris Agency. In this respect, the Plaza's companion inn, the Waldorf-Astoria, has for some time booked Negro acts. Among them are Dorothy Dandridge, Harry Belafonte and Pearl Bailey, latter being current and drawing healthy crowds. Miss Kitt's previous major tour of employment in New York was at the Copacabana.

Persian Room will open the fall season Sept. 13 with Lisa Kirk.

N. Y.'s Versailles Goes Haut Couture; Parlaying Lingerie and Cocktails

By JOE COHEN

Fashion shows have long been one of the fringe activities of show biz. Even before Ziegfeld glorified the girls by dress and undress, the world of haut couture has sought the aid of the theatre in exploiting its creations. There have been fashion shows, generally staged at hotels for the benefit of various charities. But "Fashions In Rhythm," current at the Versailles during the cocktail period, has gone further in demonstrating the commercial possibilities of the fashion shows as an aid to nitery business.

Fashions in Rhythm

"Fashions in Rhythm," produced by Jan Brewster, staged by Sid Shaw; music, Jane Douglas White; lyrics, Tom O'Malley, Miss Brewster, Shaw; choreography, Don Farnworth. Cast: Harry Harris, Julie Cousins, Tony Rella, Carole Bennett, Buzz Sternfeld, Bill Heyer, Belle Robin, Bob Trevis, Grace Genteel, Bob Miller, Susan Brooks, Judy Siegel, Michell Gregg, Candy Montgomery, Jean Gammon, Joe Hornsby, Bud White, Nat Paris Orch; At Versailles, N. Y.; no cover or minimum.

Sponsors: Ansonia Shoes, Whitehouse & Hardy, Alex & Robert, Coro Jewelry, Sulka, De Jur Amsco, Carole Stuppell, Barrie's Restaurant, Aster Flower Co., White Star Luggage, Rose Saphire Hats, Larry Mathews, Ceil Chapman, After Six Formals, Coronet Creations, Sport & Travel, David Crystal, Countess Alexander, Georg Jensen, Eye-Ful Lingerie, Tress, Petrocelli Clothes, Esther Dorothy Furs, Bali Brassiere Co., Beau Monde Lingerie, Maternity Fashions, Cye-Martin, Robert Fashion Craft.

The revue as presented at the Nick Prounis & Arnold Rossfield eastside emporium, offers a lot of entertainment with virtually no spoken commercials. The demonstrations of female and male couture is accomplished in terms of theatre. All credits, except one, are on printed programs, and the exception is due to an error in the makeup of the book. And speaking of book, there are some outside ads carried on there, so it seems that that phase is self-amortizing.

However, this fashion show seems a natural in getting a lot of biz not ordinarily obtainable. It's a situation where the manufacturers can take clients and show them their product in surroundings that are a bit more suited to buying and selling than the showrooms. It's also logical to assume that the mood created by the music and performers is more conducive to landing that order. Another good facet of this new try at show biz lies in the fact that the nitery not only sells a sizable amount of cocktails but is also in a position to get a few holdovers for the dinner trade. There's activity at the bar, and withal, the staff has sufficient time to make new setups for the dinner trade.

Another facet of this proposition lies in the ability of the sponsors to transfer this show to other cities with ease. Since most of the manufacturers operate on a national scale, the show can be moved from town to town, most of the sponsors can stay on. Perhaps department stores and specialty shops can take over the bankrolling where necessary.

"Fashions in Rhythm" carries a lot of weight in the tune department. Jane Douglas White has provided a batch of melodies that are easy to absorb, create a mood for the presentation of the modes and provides a pacing and variety that results in a smooth flow of the hour's running time.

With assistance from lyricist Tom O'Malley, producer Jan Brewster and director Sid Shaw who also contributed lyrics, the song department is excellently taken care of. Tunes are fortunately not in the nature of singing commercials. They have the format of a pop number, and some could be exploited in that direction. Both music and lyrics carry a lot of charm.

The tuneful musical revue has a wide assortment of backers which include items for the complete woman from Larry Mathews, hairdressers, to Ansonia Shoes, along with some highrated manufacturing and several firstline retailing houses. There are sundry other items such as a movie camera (De Jur-Amsco) a jewelry house, mens' specialty shops such as Whitehouse & Hardy, Cye-Martin, Sulka, and After Six Formals, along with sports, luggage, fur houses, lingerie and maternity clothes.

Work of assembling this show, which was left to Miss Brewster, is virtually like getting financing for a musical. First comes the score and story, then the money from the sponsors, casting and theatre, in this instance a topline nitery. The net result is like a musical, except that the sponsorship brings the price below that of a theatre display and there's wine to go along with the women and song.

Performancewise, the entire unit turns in a job in a manner that seemingly makes the presentation of the styles a matter secondary to that of providing entertainment. However, the couture gets a full inning before the viewers.

There's a skechy plot throughout the proceedings. Most of the performers are paired with groups such as the wedded couple, a bickering duo, a boy and girl, and Harry Harris playing a storyteller who provides some narration that ties the various components of the show together.

Good performances are turned in by Julie Cousins and Tony Rella as the boy and girl; Mitchell Gregg and Candy Montgomery as the bride and groom; Grace Genteel and Bob Trevis as juvenile interests; Bill Heyer and Belle Robin as the quarreling couple; and others including Carole Bennett, Buzz Sternfeld, Bob Miller, Susan Brooks, Jean Gammon, Joe Hornsby, Bud White and Judy Siegel.

The show takes in many facets from men's garb to women's outer garments, lingerie, furs, and finally maternity dresses.

This kind of show biz offers a lot of inducement from a lot of quarters. It's a sales aid, a help to the cafe op in livening up the unused time, and the sponsors in getting their product publicized. There's one hitch that will probably be ironed out. As presently constituted, it seems a show for professional buyers. For the squares who buy retail, there should be legends noting where the items are available.

Feld Bros.' 'Roll' Rocks 'Em 7 Days For Sock $129,000

The Feld Bros.' "Biggest Rock 'n' Roll Show of 1956" hit $129,000 for the seven days which wound up Friday (4). This form of show biz is continuing to hit the hottest b.o. that has been around in the travelling units for some time.

Top dates was Toronto on Monday (30), which produced a sizzling $23,650 for one show. Another big session was obtained at Montreal, where $25,250 was lured in two shows the previous day. This figure was held down by rains of flood proportions and resulted in virtually no window sale. Admissions were result of advance sale.

Other strong dates were at Syracuse which scored a sellout $17,000. There were several snafus on that date, inasmuch as a huge block of tickets were sold at half price, and 500 seats were given away for free. Net result was an estimated 6,500 milling about trying to gain admission on night of show. Had arrangements been made in advance it would have been possible to set another session on that evening (Saturday).

Last Tuesday (1) Rochester produced a strong $14,500 in one show. On Wednesday (2), Buffalo drew $18,000 in an all-day rain. As a result of the strong showing made in Pittsburgh Thursday (3), with $18,500 in the till, the layout has been rebooked for the Syria Mosque there on June 4. On Friday (4) Columbus scored $12,100.

The Feld Bros. layout, bulk of whose dates were booked by the Gale Agency, had been scheduled to play 45 dates in all, but addition of a rematch in Pittsburgh delayed the closing by one day for a total of 46 dates.

Unit comprises Bill Haley & Comets, Clyde McPhatter, LaVern Baker, Big Joe Turner, Teenagers, Teen Queens, Bo Diddley, Drifters, Colts, and Red Prysock Orch.

R 'n' R Rowdyism Brings Dance Ban in N.H. Town

Portsmouth, N. H., May 8.

Alarmed at the tendency toward rowdyism at rock 'n' functions in this area, City Recreation Director Alvin T. Mason has put a ban on all dancing at the Community Center here, except for organized record hops help under strict supervision.

Mason said a 15-year-old girl recently told a dance crowd she intended to commit suicide and then stepped outside the center and slashed her wrists. On another occasion, he reported, a gang of youths were found to be carrying a "frightening collection" of switch knives and other weapons.

AERIALISTS INJURED

Davidson and Triska In Shrine Circus Mishaps

Hartford, May 8.

Two aerialists performing at the Shrine Circus here received injuries during practice sessions that sent them to the hospital.

Most seriously hurt was Clarence Davidson, 16, of Kansas City. He received head, shoulder and back injuries when he fell 21 feet to a wooden floor of the State Armory as net gave way.

Less seriously injured was Martha Triska, 34, head of the Triska high wire act. He suffered rib injuries when he twisted himself during a practice period.

Lile inked for the Baker Hotel, Dallas, for week starting May 21. She'll be accomped by the Pralines, a mixed quartet.

Inside Stuff—Vaudeville

Maurice Greenwald, the agent who died the other day (thought to be 67, though age unreported), began in Chicago and moved later to the N. Y. Keith franchise. At both ends and throughout his time he probably knew and handled more Negro turns than any other agent. He's mentioned in Ethel Waters' memoirs, "His Eye Is on the Sparrow." As confidante and pater familias to many a colored performer he also had a number of droll experiences along the way. He once got an irate telegram from a chorus girl in a sepia tab saying that the leading man's wife had burst in the hotel door and fired a shot at the chorus girl, the shot hitting the wall. "Was never so insulted in my life," complained the chorine.

Maxfield's, a posh ice cream parlor operated by a corporation headed by Max Gordon, who also pilots the Village Vanguard and is partnered in the Blue Angel with Herbert Jacoby, has filed a petition for reorganization under Chapter XI of the Federal bankruptcy laws in the Federal Court in N. Y. Assets are listed at $94,484 and liabilities at $55,653. Petition, which seeks to pay off creditors at the rate of 2% monthly, stems from four suits for payment of sums due by suppliers. Spot was opened less than a year ago, with several show bizites in on the corporative setup. Neither the Village Vanguard nor the Blue Angel is involved in this action.

Georgie Price, the actor-stockbroker, has been plagued by an impersonator who has been passing phony checks in his name. In N. Y. Criminal Court last week, the collared check-passer stated that whenever he blacked out, he imagined he was Price. Comedian saw the logic of this statement saying, "Whenever I blacked up, I always thought I was Al Jolson."

Tin Pan Alley Cafe's Nightly Names Sans Liquor; N.Y. AFM Space-Divvy

In a novel space-sharing arrangement, a nitery is to double up with N.Y. Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. New cafe, labeled Tin Pan Alley, plans an "opening every night" with a policy that calls for a nightly change of headliner. Spot will open May 25 with Pat Boone, then follows with Joni James, Tony Bennett, Johnny Desmond, Mills Bros. and Alan Dale; with others still to be set. Orchs are the Jimmy Sedlar and Bob Walters crews.

Under present plans, Tin Pan Alley for three days weekly will strike the spot so that the tooters can use the room as a hiring hall. Special foldaway chairs and tables have been bought so that the dismantling can take place with minimum difficulty. Spot will be closed Mondays.

Tin Pan Alley, in addition, has booked a disk jockey to broadcast from WAAT, Newark, nightly at midnight for one hour. Guy Lebow, who has been a sportscaster, will make his bow as a platter pilot. Spot ops figure that he may bring a fresh note into the wax commentaries.

Operator will be Jack Steiner, who has been associated with Milton Blackstone in the operation of an advertising agency. Larry Kammet, who managed the now defunct La Vie en Rose, N. Y., will be the cafe's general manager. Admission charge will be $1.50 and with a 2,500 capacity, potential nightly gate is $3,750. Food will be in the low-priced category, with sales confined to five items, including hot dogs, and highest-priced food article will be a shrimp roll at 75c. No hard liquors will be served.

Waiters will be dressed as candy butchers in striped blazers; bus boys togged out as whitewings, and captains and ushers in Keystone Kop outfits.

The spot has a 14-week lease with a five-year renewal clause to be exercised by the tenant.

Rubin Enters Petition In Bankruptcy Re Vegas

Louis Rubin, described as an employee of Chandler's Restaurant, N. Y., has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in N. Y. Federal Court as a result of his operation of the Moulin Rouge Hotel, Las Vegas, which folded some months ago. Chandler's is not involved in this action, although 70 shares of the eatery owned by Rubin are described as having been put up as a security for a loan. Other stocks owned by Rubin were also posted to secure various sums of money lent.

Petition lists more than six pages of individual creditors including a lien of $88,687 by the Federal Government. Amounts owed to individuals weren't filed.

MCA Back in Action In Coast Fair Shows

Sacramento, May 8.

After losing out for three consecutive years, Music Corp. of America got back into the West Coast fair biz by snagging the contract to produce the shows for the California State Fair, to be held in Sacramento Aug. 29-Sept. 9. Agency will present three layouts, each running four days.

First to be set is the Bob Crosby Show, which will wind up the operation, appearing Sept. 6-7-8-9.

Dinah Sez There's Nothing Finer For TV Specs Than 'Rehearsals' in Cafes

Hollywood, May. 8.

Dinah Shore will experiment with niteries as a proving ground for material for tv spectaculars this year. Singer already has been set for a fortnight at the Riviera, Las Vegas, opening June 8, and is near a deal for another two-week stand at the Chez Paree, Chicago, in the fall.

Cafe dates are tied to NBC-TV's scheduling, since the web must approve any dates that take her away from this home base. But the network is considerably interested in the plan to showcase material and has made arrangements for the telecasting of her twice-weekly Chevy show from Las Vegas. Similarly, arrangements will be made for her to beam from Chicago.

Prompting the experiment is the fact that some of the material in her first, sock hour-long show originally stemmed from her last nitery date, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York in January, 1955. Singer is convinced that personals give her a better chance to test audience reaction to material and while no long-range pattern has been set up, it's likely she will henceforth essay a couple of nitery dates annually.

It's doubtful, however, that any of these dates will be here in the Hollywood-Los Angeles area.

"You get too much of a trade audience," she points out. "There isn't the broad cross-section of general public opinion that you can get elsewhere. Consequently, unless I have extra time in which to do a night club show merely because I want to—and not because I have some material to test—I probably won't work locally."

Savo to Ruban Bleu

Jimmy Savo will play his first N.Y. cafe date in several years starting Monday (14) at Le Ruban Bleu. It's his first try at an intimerie.

Savo's previous stands in recent years were at the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel.

Leonard Romm Returns To GAC; in Fla. Office

Leonard Romm, who had been operating as an indie agent and booker for several years, has joined General Artists Corp. and assigned to their Miami Beach office, which was recently opened. Vic Sands is the other GAC agent to work out of that office.

Romm, a vet in the business, had been at GAC several years ago and also worked in the William Morris Agency. Florida office was established by Art Weems, GAC veepee, a few months ago.

Mpls. Burlesque Ops Up for Sentencing In 'Exotic' Terping Rap

Minneapolis, May 8.

Municipal Court Judge Luther Sletten found Edward Ross of Kansas City and Alfred Krikorian, producer-lessee and house manager, respectively, of the Alvin, local burlesque house, guilty of disorderly conduct in connection with the police morals' squad raid of the establishment after witnessing a performance.

Pair will be sentenced this week with maximum penalty a $100 fine or 90 days in the workhouse. Ross and Krikorian were charged with permitting "exotic" dancers to engage in "lewd, indecent, immoral and insulting conduct and behavior." Previously, in March, three of the six arrested exotic dancers were found guilty of lewd and indecent behavior and fined $100 each.

Theatre is subject to suspension or revocation of its license, but it's indicated the city council will not take any action in that direction. Immediately after the raid, performances were resumed and have continued since without further police interference.

Borge's Hartford Repeat

Hartford, May 8.

Bushnell Memorial has rebooked Victor Borge to appear June 2.

Pianist-comedian was originally dated for the house early in February. SRO in a one-day appearance, he was rebooked for later in the month. Sold out again and was repacted for June.

Louisville Cafes In Talent Spree For Derby Didoes

Louisville, May 8.

Night spots splurged over Derby weekend, with enlarged floorshows and orchs putting their best foot forward to give visitors to the 82d running of the Kentucky Derby before-and-after-hours diversion. Among the leaders were Dick Asher's Merry-Go-Round, with show comprising Dick Haviland, La Savona, Linda Powers, Patti Lyons, Kathy Harris and Bunny Ware. John Gatewood, recently returned from Chicago stand, is doing his keyboard and vocal stuff in the spot's Circus Lounge.

Other niteries which made a special effort to entertain turf visitors are Club Rialto, with a Derby Eve Revue. Featured is Lee Smith and his Show Band; Iroquois Gardens had Four Coins, Miriam Sage Dancers, Jimmie Costello, and Larry Ward orch. Chaz Chase started yesterday (Mon.).

Cocktail lounges likewise made a bid for the racing coin. Julep Lounge had comedian Rocky King and singing pianist Kay Hughes. Cross Roads Club made a splurge with Carl Dennis, comic; Jimmy Ward, singer; Betty Lee & Lonni, and Bob Warren orch. Zodiac Room making a bid with the Land Trio.

McGuire Sisters have been booked for a one-nighter at the Rhodes Ballroom, Cranston, R.I., May 19, by Abe Feinberg Agency.

'Bridey' Reincarnation on B'way; Loew's State to 'Live It Up' After 2-Year Void Via 'Hypo with Hypno'

The Bridey Murphy influence has come to Broadway. In the first live presentation in two years, Loew's State Theatre will play a one-man stageshow — hypnotist Ralph Slater, starting May 18. He is expected to concentrate on the consequences of the Morey Bernstein book, and give a lecture that will be virtually a do-it-yourself kit on reincarnation.

Since the advent of "Bridey," hypnotists have been besieging talent agencies predicting that they suddenly would become the hottest attraction in show biz, now that the book is a leading seller throughout the nation. Even on the basis of the controversy surrounding the claims made in the tome the people discussing the implications and possibilities of reliving a former life through the medium of hypnosis would be sufficient to fill several houses. Some even predicted that hypnotists would replace rock 'n' roll.

That there is a degree of box-office in hypnosis is fairly well established. Slater, for example, has had one-man shows at Carnegie Hall and played a brief stand in a Broadway legit house several years ago.

Club date bookers also report that hypnotists have picked up some additional employment because of the "Bridey" craze. It's true especially in afternoon affairs, and women's organizations.

Joan Brandon, who has a magic as well as a hypnosis turn, has been doing excellent business at various exhibitions, particularly home shows and displays under the auspices of department stores. Others have been hitting more dates at bigger coin since the housewife in the southwestern part of the country became a national figure as the result of a hypnotic session.

Although medics have taken a strong position against the use of hypnosis under non-medical auspices, there has been no indication that the warning has been taken seriously. The medicos think that the hypnotists have made the trance too long.

40-ish Roberta Sherwood Up From Fla. Obscurity To Top Copa, N.Y., Bill

Singer Roberta Sherwood will get headline booking in her first New York date which comes off June 7 at the Copacabana. It's the first time that Jules Podell, Copa op, has put a virtual unknown in New York on headline status since the Johnnie Ray booking several years ago. Ray was better known at that time.

Miss Sherwood has been around Florida niteries for a number of years. She sprung to attention about a year ago at Murray Franklin's Lounge, Miami Beach, and recently played the Eden Roc in that town in a manner that indicated she would do well in the important N. Y. niteries. Miss Sherwood is in her 40s, mother of three boys and the wife of Don Lanning, who was a musical comedy juvenile a couple of decades ago.

In addition, Miss Sherwood is booked for a quartet of appearances on the Ed Sullivan Show, and also has a deal for the New Frontier, Las Vegas, Aug. 13. Lenny Kent is paired with her on the Copa bill. (Meanwhile, Miss Sherwood this week was rushed in to replace Elvis Presley at his Vegas stand.)

New Acts

PAUL HARTMAN
With Undine Forrest and Betty Luster
Comedy, Songs, Dance
40 Mins.
Hotel Plaza, N. Y.

The new Paul Hartman act went over with a resounding bang, in spades, at the Persian Room's opening night. But regardless of the captiousness of one patron who was feeling no pain other than openly expressing himself painfully that Hartman's was "the same old stuff," which caused him to be conked on the noggin, he was as wrong in his customer opinion as in getting entangled with a lil woman with a mighty punch. (Details elsewhere in this journal of information.)

Hartman has picked himself a couple of honeys in Undine Forrest and Betty Luster. The redhead reminds strongly of the late Grace (Mrs. Paul) Hartman, longtime partner until their marital strain also severed their professional teaming, and the blonde is a breathtaker who is an excellent foil when not doing a little legit thrushing on the side.

The routine is a pleasant potpourri of nonsense, some of it reminiscent of Hartman's standard work as a lampooning ballroomologist, interlarded with hokum magico, a satire on "awards," pleasant buffoonery with Ted Straeter's six "gypsy" violinists—in a Romany bit, with the blonde looker—plus other effective bits of oldfashioned song & danceology. Not to mention Hartman's ever-effective rubberfaced satire, of which he is a master, so much so that it's still a wonderment why he hasn't found himself in a video vehicle and the like.

Hartman has long been recognized as a comedian of stature, separate and apart from the broad ballroomology hokum. He has been effective in legit musicals, and also one try in a tv series. It's a matter of the proper vehicle, of course, as regards his click in that direction.

Hartman is a cinch for any class and mass room. He has plenty to offer for both elements. Per usual the Straeterites give him tiptop backeruppering, alternating with Mark Monte's Continentals.
Abel.

PHAROS & MARINA
Mental Telepathy
15 Mins.
Empire, Edinburgh

Male and femme partnership work a baffling telepathy-style act that keeps the customers interested and wondering.

She's blindfolded on stage, while partner goes round the stubholders in both orch stalls and dress circles, asks 'em to hold up a small belonging. Articles identified include keys, purses, wallets, powder compacts, business cards, auto licenses, pound notes, watches and rings.

Male then gets members of audience to whisper single numbers to him, and he has partner add, subtract and multiply figures without a glimpse at blackboard. Also gets her to name each number as and when he points to it.

Act has strong puzzle qualities, and is strong bet for vaude and tv markets. Gord.

RENEE LAMY
Songs
25 Mins.
Ritz Carlton, Montreal

A native of Paris, Renee Lamy's current appearance in the Ritz Cafe marks her first time in Montreal and there is little doubt she will be a cinch for a repeat in the fall season. In a bilingual city such as Montreal a great many chantootsies come and go, particularly of the Gallic variety. Some are gowned in the height of fashion, others get by on their obvious physical attributes but it has been a long time since someone like Miss Lamy has appeared. Here is a performer who is just a straightforward performer; her clothes, although in good taste, are not spectacular, her figure far from Monroe's but her general piping and personality make up for any of the gimmicks stressed by rival chirpers.

On night caught, Miss Lamy took a few minutes to establish herself with the Ritz Cafe patrons but once they realized what was happening she had the room sold throughout songalong. All her songs are in French with the odd English intro but her phrasing, accent and arrangements make it a cinch for anyone to follow her. Best of her singles is an interp of Gilbert Becaud's "My Hands" followed by a reprise of "La Seine" which she introduced first in Paris several years ago. A group of French faves avoided, for the most part, the hack material offered by this type singer and begoff was one of the most enthusiastic ever given in this room. Miss Lamy should be good for the small, bilingual intimeries in the bigger cities and with an English number or two eventually should be okay for any of the better class boites.

PAMELA DENNIS
Songs
9 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Pamela Dennis has apparently been around, but hasn't yet been cataloged in the New Acts files. Miss Dennis is a looker and a capable singer who should fit into the cafe orbits, perhaps even better than vaude situations. Miss Dennis shows classical training, has a fresh quality and puts a lot of color into her offerings.

The tune trio she selects for her Palace debut comprises "Autumn Leaves," "Over The Rainbow" and a wordless of trills to "Holiday for Strings." Latter serves as a showcase for her colorature but it seems that there are other songs in that category that would be better for her requirements. Jose.

FLORENCE ZAMORA
Violin
11 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Florence Zamora, nice looking violinist like most other fiddlers appearing at the Palace has a simple routine in order to provide few complications for the audience.

Miss Zamora, however, has taken these tunes and given them a lot of digital embellishments. One of her pieces, the hackyneyed "Gypsy Makes Violin Cry," however, is given a lot of trills, runs and cadenzas not ordinarilly written into the music. Also in the tzigane vein, Miss Zamora does "Gypsy Airs" and "La Vie en Rose." She gets a good tone and has a showmanly execution which should fit her into whatever pop outlets are available for fiddlers.
Jose.

SCOTT'S SEA LIONS (2)
Animal Comedy
12 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

This is a fairly conventional sealion entry, but aided by above-average skill of the two seals, reflecting much patience in training. They are worked onstage by male owner garbed in sailor uniform, with further help from femme partner.

First seal's balance stuff is followed by the second seal balancing respectively a walking stick and top hat. Both mammals then engage in a bout of tennis with head-batting of ball.

Lotus, one of the twosome, shows agility by balancing ball atop stick balanced on its mouth, and then dropping stick and catching ball. Gains hand-to-hand music for this trick. Comedy, already introduced by quaint grunts of the performers, is developed by announcement that one seal will give impression of Johnnie Ray singing while t'other plays a makeshift organ. Walking of a tightrope by one of the pair winds act that has strong entertainment quota. Okay for vauderies and circus. Gord.

KIRK STEVENS
Songs
15 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Young Scot singer, recently recovered from serious throat operation that put him out of vocalizing for four months, offers pleasing songalog that shows him in excellent voice again. Is refreshingly different in that he doesn't aim to pander to teenage element and, on this score, should have growing following among more mature stubholders.

Formerly known as Tommy Blair, singer registers well from opening number "Lady of Spain." Segues with "September Love" and "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing," both of which he puts over to hushed auditorium with good effect. For oldsters, revives "When I Leave the World Behind," and winds with the jaunty Auld Lang Syne tune "Here's to the Gordons."

Already established in recording field (he waxes for the Philips label), Stevens is sound entry for the vaude and radio markets.
Gord.

BURT BROOKS
Magic Novelty
9 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Young magician is a performer who, given proper direction, might yet become something of a name act on tv and vaude. As is, he's too slow in pace and lacks clarity in diction, but has the makings of a worthwhile new act.

Main gimmick is a large cocktail - cabinet - styled contraption which carries his props and is constructed for use of surprise novelties, such as a rabbit which keeps popping out and doing tricks better than Brooks himself. F'rinstance, it ejects different objects, blows up balloons while Brooks is still blowing up his, and generally takes the punch out of the performer.

At another point in act, a hand fires a gun from the cabinet. At yet another, it throws out glistening soap bubbles after Brooks has dropped a supply of soap-washing powder inside. Winds by showing a white flag. During act, a small white dog walks in a straight line across stage, wearing a rabbit's head and ears atop its own and raising solid yocks. Gord.

Old British Vaudery Badly Damaged by Fire

Wigan, Eng., May 1.

Fire caused extensive damage to the Wigan Hippodrome, longtime vaudery, where leading stars once played. Stage curtains and drapes, and the props and costumes of the "We Never Clothed" revue were saved by the safety curtain. Roof caved in on to the upper circle, which was badly damaged.

Theatre, a 1200 - seater, controlled by James Brennan (Hulme Hippodrome Ltd.) circuit, is 56 years old.

Hazel's Double Flamingo

Las Vegas, May 8.

Hazel Scott, who opens at the Flamingo here Thursday (10), will become the first headliner in the history of Las Vegas to double between the main dining room and the lounge.

Bicycle job is at request of hotelier Al Parvin, longtime friend of the pianist. They agreed upon a schedule of three shows in the lounge each night, at conclusion of the regular two shows in the main room. Stint has her making her final appearance at 3:30 a. m.

Vegas Tooters

them (the AFMers) a 20% wage increase." Recently, the hotels granted 5% increases to teamster and culinary unions' employees. It appears then that the figure $25 isn't the rub. Rather, it seems to be the mind's eye picture of 20% as a symbol that might lead the other unions to new demands if it were granted to the musicians.

The Sands, New Frontier, Flamingo and Desert Inn have uncancellable contracts with the AFMers, underlined by terms evidently satisfactory to both parties. However, Sands producer Jack Entratter backed up the hotelmen in down-thumbing the musicians' demand for a pay boost. He guessed, though, that the hotels will hardly resort to anything as rash as junking show policies.

A Desert Inn spokesman dittoed Entratter's remark, indicating that the Riviera, Sahara, El Rancho and Thunderbird, whose bosses have been more closely identified with the idea of doing away with entertainment, would be alone if they should take that stand.

Gambling Vs. Talent

A Saraha spokesman pointed out, however, that Vegas "wasn't built on entertainment. That, like sex, is secondary to the town's biggest marquee billing—gambling, and plenty of it." This op said that if the shows were axed, a new policy would be put into effect, a policy aimed at luring Mr. and Mrs. Average Vacationer. Meantime, he said, the regular gambler—the guy who prefers a hot dice game to a hot show—would come anyway in search of his greenfelt action.

It was also hinted in several quarters that the prospect of having to give in to the musicians has led to a new consideration of Vegas' Damocles Sword—those inflated starline salaries. It was reported that the hotels are setting up a collective effort to renegotiate contracts in an effort to prune those fancy five-figure paychecks to within reason. This, however, has been tried in the past and, because of the stiff competition for names that exists here, has folded before getting past the talking stage.

AGVA Prowling 'Actioner' Acts Vs. Hub Big Top

Jackie Bright, AGVA's national administrative secretary, has started looking for headline availabilities for the circus which AGVA and the teamsters will underwrite at the Boston Arena, aimed at day-and-dating with the Ringling big top at the Boston Garden next week. Those being sought are the Lone Ranger, Space Cadets, Buster Crabbe, Capt. Midnight, among others. Bright says that admission will be $1.50 for adults with children free when accomped by elders.

Bright said the show will be played for the benefit of underprivileged children in the Hub. No money will go out of Boston, and any profits will be left to local children's charities. It will be a one-ring affair.

Bright further explained that he doesn't want the children of Boston to be deprived of the pleasure of seeing a circus, and at the same time, doesn't want them to grow up hating unions. Therefore they're going to stage a rival circus, as an alternative to the kids going through union picket lines.

AGVA and the teamsters have been on strike against the circus since its opening at New York's Madison Square Garden early last month. Picketing has been going on since the preem with the exception of a temporary respite by use of a court order.

AGVA Circus

penters. He also consulted with Matthew L. McGrath Jr. of the Building Service Employees and others. Officials of the Boston CLU, representing the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the Building Service Employees, the Carpenters Union, and several others, all AFL-CIO, have voted unanimous support of AGVA's attempt to organize the circus performers.

Some differences in picketing are foreseen in Boston as the Garden, unlike N. Y.'s Madison Square Garden, which is a building by itself, is housed in North Station, Boston & Maine Railroad property. Spokesmen of the B&M declared it will not be possible for the union to picket the railroad area, which includes the section of yards used for unloading circus trains.

Bright said there had been "continuous opposition of circus officials to unionization of its workers and acts." He said AGVA members who have refused to cross the picket lines and have left the show include: Emmett Kelly, Otto Griebling, Felix Adler, all of clown alley; Preston Lambert, ringmaster; Billie Mahoney, baton twirler; Marion Seifert, equestrienne; Hilda Brent, aerialist; and the five-member troupe of Fredonias, along with a couple of other acts.

Eartha Kitt (with Sandford Gold); Arthur Coppersmith and Winston Lee Orchs; $10.50 minimum opening night; thereafter $6.50.

Eartha Kitt has come a long way since she provided one of the new faces on the London nitery scene about five years ago. Her return is a triumph in every sense of the word. Her opening at this swagger night spot attracted a capacity celebrity audience, although the minimum had been inflated to $10.50—even higher than charged in previous years for artists of the calibre of Noel Coward, Marlene Dietrich, et al.

Everything that had been done to make this a great occasion was justified by the result. Miss Kitt is a consummate artist who knows how to win and hold her audience. Her personality is a dominating influence, and her sense of mood and appreciation of sophistication are beyon reproach. She never makes a mistake throughout her 40-minute show, and even had she gone on longer, there would have been no complaints from the customers. In every way she gave a model performance.

Credit for the outcome must be equally divided between Miss Kitt and her songwriters. Between them they've fashioned an act which is a hep blend of sophistication with the romantic. Her own sultry style, accentuated by long and deliberate pauses in delivery, gives added meaning to her best lyrics.

Obviously by design, there is a consistent train of thought running through several of her special numbers, suggesting that she's the type of gal who can be encouraged to do most things in return for diamonds, minks and other riches. This is the theme of songs like "I Wanna Be Evil," "If I Can't Take It With Me, I Ain't Gonna Go" and "An Old-Fashioned House," among others. Then, to provide the effective balance, she has sweeter songs like "Looking for a Little Boy," "Lilac Wine" and a more dramatic offering, "Close Enough to Touch." And, for good measure, she offers a provocative rendition of "Let's Do It" and an amusing variation of "C'est Si Bon."

In a show which cannot be faulted, Miss Kitt emerges as one of the top nitery performers of the day.

Sandford Gold's precision accompaniment on the ivories, with the backing of the Arthur Coppersmith orch, which has just moved into residence at the cafe, gives the final polish to the act. Winston Lee's combo alternates for the lively dance sessions. Myro.

Lucerne, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, May 2.

Larry Best, Luke Salem, The Tip-Toppers (2), Jacques Donnet Orch; $2.50 minimum.

The Club Chalet in this new oceanfront has been trying to hit click formula ever since preeming last December, with in-and-out-results. Low ceilinged intimery is a long, two-levelled layout, with small stage designed for singles and duos. A long list of comics who've become standard acts in the area comprised the major portion of talent utilized, but, where in other hotel-cafes they managed to draw in goodly numbers, their values were never fully realized in this spot. Now vet restaurateur Art Schaeffer has been installed as new host and co-booker; his policy is inclined toward hunt for acts not used often on the circuit here, as evidenced in current layout.

Larry Best is virtually a newcomer to the area—he appeared at the Olympia several years ago—although he's another of the long list of graduates from the borscht belt in New York's Catskills who've made Beach hotels a frequent point of return in recent years. Going on his reception in the Club Chalet he can be added to that group.

Warm-up stages of his act are a compound of sometimes new—sometimes familiar one-liners. However he soon hits his strongest route, a series of dialect-character concepts that wind him into a satisfying session of giggles and laughs. A personable guy with a winning warmth in manner and approach, Best applies his knack for the zany to sight and sound bits with high spot a Britisher trying to find his way in the wilds of Brooklyn, zinger being involvement with an applechewing garment-center type. The character trail Best follows contains a thread of continuity to add to the laugh build and resultant arrival on high plaudit plateau.

Young Luke Salem is just starting out on a career as a song salesman. A tall, nice looking lad, he is equipped with a full, warm set of pipes that remind strangely of Tony Martin. The Martin leanings are obvious also in his tune selection. He has an appealing quality that should stand him in good stead while he garners the experience and development of style of his own.

The Tip-Toppers work over the platter-panto stuff to okay reception, while Jacques Donnet and his musickers make an adept crew on showbacks and for dansapation. Lary.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, May 4.

Connee Boswell, Rowan & Martin, Frances Clark, Russ Carlyle Orch (12); $2.50 minimum.

With Connee Boswell's following gathered here over the years, there should be a showing in large numbers of her rooting section for the next four weeks. And there'll be some mighty pleased customers if she stays with the entertainment pace demonstrated opening night in the Blue Room.

The New Orleans-born thrush cradled the audience close to her with her showmanly blandishments and stylish deep-throated singing. She impresses as a poised, graceful songstress whose artful handling of rhythm, ballads and torchants win palm - pounding quickly.

She works with obvious enjoyment to spread an infectious touch to numbers that range from "If I Give My Heart to You" to the sultry, rollicking "When the Saints Go Marchin' In." Highlight of opening was her bellringing "Some of These Days." Sophie Tucker was at ringside and was seen to wipe a tear from her eye during Miss Boswell's tribute to her. Miss Boswell has showmanship and sell-a-song savvy.

Rowan & Martin, new faces hereabouts, add a fresh approach to the male comedy pattern. Rowan plays it straight; Martin is alternately brash, looney and rubbery-faced. Together they combine to launch themselves uninhibitedly on the eager audience. Their comedy wares bring continuous mounting laughs and a big mitt at finale.

Bandleader Russ Carlyle tees off bill with some carbonings of the song stylings of Perry Como, Bing Crosby and others to earn a nice score. His band registers as a solid show group, utilizing well arranged smooth rhythms plus a cleverly mixed assortment of pops, old faves and Latinos. He has little trouble keeping the dance area well populated. Liuz.

Biltmore Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 3.

Pepper Davis & Tony Reese, Dolores Hawkins, Barry Ashton & Bebe Allan, Hal Derwin Orch (10); $1-$1.50 cover.

A bright new comedy team makes its Coast debut in this layout for a showcaser that should serve as a solid springboard. Team of Pepper Davis & Tony Reese has some good material and an energetic delivery that adds up to a walloping last half of the hour-long show floored by Joe Faber to catch the rising tide of tourism. With Davis & Reese, the fine singing of Dolores Hawkins and the bright footwork of Barry Ashton & Bebe Allan, the Biltmore is dispensing a fine entertainment buy.

Davis & Reese score solidly with a running fire of laughs stemming from a couple of routines and some hilarious bits. They've got a wonderful spoof on the "$64,000 Question" and they keep the laughs flowing from a takeoff on the vocal style of the Four Aces and a "Cavalcade of Sports" interview with a punchy pug. They close off with some frenetic drum work, including a black light bit, and some fancy hoofing. Team has a fine potential.

Miss Hawkins has grown in disk stature since last in town a few years ago and gained assurance with it. Result is an easy-on-the-ears songalog. It's a little heavy on standards and could stand more concentration on Hit Parade material, but she's fine in what she does. Such standards as "Nearness of You," for example, get a caressing treatment that pleases and she uses "There'll Be Some Changes Made" as a promenading windup that gets her off strongly.

Opener is the reunited dance team of Ashton & Allan and they're as good as ever. Dancing is lithe and graceful and they have some imaginative routines, including "inner thoughts of a pair of ballroom dancers" and a new satire on "Rose Tattoo" a la their "Streetcar" spoof of a few years ago.

Hal Derwin's orch is still on hand doing a solid job of showbacking and providing an easy dance beat. Kap.

Cafe Society, D't'n, N.Y.

Christine Jorgensen, Jimmy Mosby, Princess Yasmina, Anthony Roberts & Vinnie Strong Orchs; $4.50 minimum.

Cafe Society Downtown with its many switches in policy has now gone in for a bill topped by Christine Jorgensen, who popularized Denmark for a reason that the tourist bureaus are unwilling to talk about.

Miss Jorgensen, now having gotten over the first stages of the freakish part of her theatrical career, has taken on a virtually new act that indicates she's trying to make it as a performer exclusively. She has apparently worked hard on the new turn and with a few more trips around the circuits should be in a position to get more serious attention as a performer.

She's gotten a line of impressions that are utilitarian. She does a few pop singers and one of Marlene Dietrich and Sophie Tucker, handles a spot of ballet en point, and with it a lot of lightning changes of gab that would be more effective applausewise if the screen wherein the transformations take place were on the stage. Gowns are dazzlers. Her major opus is a recitative on vicissitudes of the theatre, a rather lengthy piece which should be cut. It's a new act that will take more development; the basic items are good, but more practice and work will give this turn a bright gloss. Miss Jorgensen also utilizes an offstage narration during the quick-change points of her act. She seemingly is pulling in business at this downtown boite.

It is unfortunate that Miss Jorgensen follows an effective Negro mimic such as Jimmy Mosby, who hits it off excellently with mimes of some of the great singers, both male and female, and captures a lot of authentic qualities. His own singing voice and his explanations are on the plus side. Completing the layout is Princess Yasmina, who moved over recently from the Latin Quarter. The belly ballerina makes an interesting display even in this audience in which femmes predominated at show caught.

The Anthony Roberts orch and the Vinnie Strong Trio supply the musical needs of this spot. Jose.

El Morocco, Montreal

Montreal, May 2.

Few singers playing Montreal are as popular as Ella Fitzgerald and very few are in the same league. And judging from biz during her brief stay at El Morocco, she has the drawing power; her two nightly appearances meant capacity in this attractive room.

Backed by a fine trio made up of Gus Johnson on drums, Benny Moten on bass and Don Abney on piano, Miss Fitzgerald whams over a hefty session that ranges from "Mr. Wonderful" to "A-Tisket, A-Tasket." Manner is easygoing and during encore session she obliges with requests from patrons rather than sticking to a formal listing. A fair gathering of juves were noticeable during show but overage customer was well out of the rock 'n' roll stage.

Jack Ladelle takes the spot before Miss Fitzgerald and impresses with his ability on various musical instruments and general songfest which includes an okay impresh set. The pert Bonita Sisters scorch the Latin rhythms in a brace of dances that are enhanced by revealing costumes and trim figures.

Maury Kaye's orch does a good job with the show music and gives way to the Clayton Trio for customer hoofing between productions. Newt.

Lake Club, Spgfld., Ill.

Springfield, Ill., May 3.

Deep River Boys (starring Harry Douglass), Harry Jarke, Miriam Sage Dancers (6), Buddy Kirk Orch (8); $1.25 admission.

It's quartet time again at the Lake Club where at least six double-tandem units have headlined within the past eight months. The Deep River Boys, making their first stop in Lincoln land, are pulling hefty business in the early portion of their seven day stint (May 2-8). They look like a natural to add an optional four days to the run—in which case they would also represent the Lake Club in a local charity telethon (May 12) to be femceed by June Havoc, and other imported talent.

At show caught, the Deeps relayed their harmonic repertoire with ease before a capacity crowd. Their only difficulties came in getting on and off the floor. Featured comic Harry Jarke's zany magic tricks and Tennessee-twanged patter drew encore mitting to keep him working overtime.

The Deeps, after illustrating their vocal versatility on five generously arranged standards and pop tunes, tried a begoff with a farewell trip around ringside with handmike chanting "Apple Blossom Time." It didn't work. They were called back three more times and finally succeeded in beating the applause with some noise of their own—an item in rock 'n' roll tempo called "Rock-A-Beating Boogie."

Miriam Sage Dancers, waiting in the wings to close the show, stepped up their entrance and got on amidst the rhythm and blues din. After stepping into their "Dixie Melody" finale the sextet garnered acclaim of their own.

Buddy Kirk unit acquit itself well in showbacking all acts with expert aid from pianist-arranger Ray Durant during quartet's songalong. The 88er was best noticed during Harry Douglass' solo of "Old Man River" which the lead baritone sold quietly for thunderous response. Wayn.

London House, Chi

Chicago, May 2.

Marian McPartland Trio (with Bill Britto and Joe Morello); no cover or minimum.

Introed by local deejay Wed Howard of WMAQ (as is the custom here), Marian McPartland and her two male sidemen bowed at the London House for the second time since the spot switched to music last September. And first-nighters gave them a warm welcome, auguring well for remainder of four-week run.

Not so modern that it's unintelligible, yet not bereft of imagination either, the McPartland brand of music combines a high degree of musicianship with inventive freedom. Dressed in sequined black, Miss McPortland often switches the spotlight back and forth between herself and her two helpers, giving each a chance to display the technique that sounds so well together.

The book includes "Love You Madly," "Strutting With Some Barbecue," "All the Things You Are," "Royal Garden Blues," etc.; it's varied and well-paced fare, and the customers give it a strong plus.

Between Miss McPartland's almost-virtuoso pianistics and drummer Joe Morello's deft and rhythmic touch on the skins, bass player Bill Britto adds the final fillip with the strong, rich backing of the bass viol. A little cold at the start, the group soon swings in response to hefty mitting. Gabe.

Seven Seas, Omaha

Omaha, May 4.

Dick Smith, Lou Monte, Al Lamm Trio; no cover or minimum.

One of the better comics to hit this area, Dick Smith proves as socko with the customers of this lone downtown nitery as predecessors such as Paul Gilbert, Jackie Kannon, Shecky Greene and Mickey Shaughnessy.

Smith offers a sock set of impressions, and his playing of two trumpets at the same time is a fine closer. In addition, Smith's throwaways and ad libs are of top calibre. Has fine knack of sensing what the aud wants.

Lou Monte rounds out the bill and the Italian singer offers a routine songalog. Al Lamm's Trio again does an excellent job showbacking. Biz, after a slow start, perked up tremendously, undoubtedly due to Smith's expert work. Trump.

Clouds, Honolulu

Honolulu, April 30.

Betty Reilly, Eddie and Betty Cole, Clouds Orch (4); $2 minimum.

This is the most entertaining show unwrapped in any Honolulu nitery in a long time.

Songstress Betty Reilly belts out a socko repertoire. She sings in Spanish, French, Yiddish and English and occasionally accompanies herself on the guitar. The accent is on novelty. She gets strong mitting at every show and on night caught had to add about 20 minutes of encores before customers would let her get away. And this at the early show yet.

The gal's a businesswoman too. She's just bought a quarter interest in this intimate penthouse room and plans to spend about three months in the room each year.

In between shows, Eddie & Betty Cole (he's Nat (King) Cole's brother) pound the ivories engagingly, with a bit of vocalizing. Husband and wife team also headline in the downstairs Little Dipper Room. Walt.

Birdland, N. Y.

Bud Powell Trio, Terry Gibbs Quartet, Mitchell-Rough Duo; $2.50 minimum.

Although there are no powerhouse jazz names on this bill, it's a good sampling of the class fare for this genre that this Broadway jive inn consistently presents. It's one of the reasons that this spot keeps right on swinging along, since the jazz buffs have learned by now that they can just drop in and get a menu of topflight jazz at any time.

Bud Powell, the erratic prodigy of the keyboard, has taken over the topline spot for the current bill and is back to his best form. Whatever may be turning over in his mind while he's performing, he manages to come up with an unending of inventive and intricate musical ideas. Powell, of course, is ultra-cool and his appeal is for the cognoscenti who dig this approach.

In a more generally understood idiom, the Terry Gibbs Quartet is a sock combo who combine the modern with the traditional. Gibbs is standout on the vibes and gets crackerjack support from femme pianist Terry Pollard, who doubles on the vibes for a real knockdown session with Gibbs.

The Mitchell-Rough duo, which has been bailiwicking in the Greenwich Village Cafe Bohemia for the past few months, make an auspicious uptown debut. The piano-bass combo has had obvious classical training and they integrate much of the longhair stuff into their jazz mechanics. Combo has a rich, tasteful sound that's fresh without being way out on a limb. Herm.

Chaudiere, Ottawa

Ottawa, May 2.

Diamonds (4), Wally Dean, Hall Twins, Harry Pozy Orch (8); $1 admission.

Toronto chant foursome, the Diamonds, pipes with a barbershop tinge and gets a result similar to the Ames Bros., sans the Ames savvy. Group billtops the Rose Room of the Chaudiere Club this week and gets clicko reception, particularly on their "Church Bells May Ring" disclick and slick arrangement of "Anniversary Waltz." Diamonds' routining of tunes is solid, with nice balance, but gabbing and staging need considerable strengthening.

Wally Dean emcees and does a solo stint. Comic's gags are timeworn but his pair of gimmick bits—a drunk, and a rube with a musical overcoat—get off to good impact. Dean would find it profitable to up the quality of his straight gag material to match the character items.

Hall Twins, attractive pair of femme terpers, are on twice with so-so tap routines. Twins could make advantageous use of identicalness by some unison terping. Their current stanza is a long way from unison, although it gets them nice mitting in both appearances. Harry Pozy band showbacks and plays for dancing. Gorm.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, May 2.

Teddi King, Elkins Sisters (2), Rudenko Bros. (2), Bob DeVoye Trio, Two Luvas, Michael Gaylord Orch (10), Lou Weir; $2.50 minimum.

Teddi King, hometown product becoming w.k. through her RCA Victor disking of "Mr. Wonderful" and in for the week, nabs heavy returns opening night with set of pops in straightaway fashion. Thrush, singing about the town for some 10 years and gaining recognition in the jazz set, unveils a big voice to fill the 1,700-seater. Opening with "It's All Right With Me," diminutive brunet gets over a sock "Autumn Leaves" for good mitting and takes "Bidin' My Time" for a nice ride.

Miss King's voice has plenty of body and substance and soars through the big boite without losing any of its subtlety. She gets off "Lady Is a Tramp" in nice style and segues to her click "Mr. Wonderful," which brings clouting round of palms. She's caressing and tender in "It Never Entered My Mind" and bowoff "Lover" and leaves aud hungry deleting encore.

Having been the darling of the jazz sets hereabouts and at Newport, chirp retains much of the jazz stance, although singing straightaway, and could do with more patter and walkarounds for nitery circuits. However, Miss King is overcoming the old "prophet without honor" adage in the hometown and certainly rates with finest femme warblers around.

Elkins Sisters, acro contortionists, open the show with a fast-

Fight Pix Ruling

old motion pictures now played on video.

Supreme Court refused yesterday (Mon.) to rule on an appeal from the decision favoring boxer Al Ettore in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals (Philadelphia), and this refusal now means that the case will be returned to a Federal trial court for a financial judgment for Ettore. Ex-boxer brought the case in connection with a Chesebrough Mfg.-sponsored "Greatest Fights of the Century" telecast over NBC-TV in 1950, with Philco named because it was carried over its then-WPTZ outlet in Philadelphia. Telecast was that of Ettore's bout against Joe Louis in 1936, for which Ettore was paid for theatrical rights but not for television, since the latter medium was never dreamed of at the time.

Ettore claimed that the television use of the film constituted both an invasion of privacy and a use of a "performance" without his permission. Defense in the case claimed the bout was a public event, thus enabling its use without payment to the principals.

In so deciding that the film did constitute a performance, the courts opened wide possibilities into similar actions covering other sporting events, old movies and other commercial or quasi-public events which were captured on film and subsequently shown on television.

Satchmo Returns

the 13-day tour of the provinces is about $500,000. Possibility of Continental bookings after the UK tour is still not definite.

First house on opening night was only fair, with about 4,500 customers. Second show was solid with 7,500 watching the proceedings.

Peg Leg Bates in the opener exhibited some neat foot and cue work with much mitting by the crowds. Bates' patter was also good, producing laughs and good response.

Choice of Ella Logan in the No. 2 slot was unfortunate. Songstress was out of her element in a hall that size and her routine failed to register.

Miss Logan belted several songs across with no bad reaction from the audience; however, her act was too long and the impatient fans began to slow-clap her and catcall during her later numbers. Although handling herself well in the later stints, songstress was visibly shaken when she left the stage amidst a mixture of applause, cheers and yells.

Star of the show, of course, was Armstrong, who entered the hall to a tremendous ovation. All Stars work from a raised, revolving platform in the centre of the arena, giving the crowd a chance to catch a glimpse of Satchmo in action, although adding nothing to the acoustical quality of the performance. First number was "Sleepy Time Down South," with w.k. gravel-voiced vocal by Armstrong. Nice change of pace was provided by "Indiana," which featured the driving two-beat style of New Orleans dixie for which the group is famous. Following numbers continued in like manner, alternating between vocals and straight jazz. Outstanding support was rendered by the All Stars, with each turning in some neat solo work. Edmund Hall on clarinet did an outstanding job and received much palm work for his rendition of "High Society."

Trummy Young blew a good trombone. He was very fast with the horn and alternated between the tailgate style and the more quiet supporting tones. Best job was on "The Bucket's Got a Hole In It," where tailgate horn was at its best. Crowd demanded three extra choruses before letting the group go to the next number.

Jack Lesberg on bass turned in a socko solo on "Lullaby of the Leaves," with nice support from rest of group. Billy Kyle at piano and Barrett Deems on drums provided good rhythm for the group.

Sparkplug of the group was Armstrong, who sings and plays his horn hot or cool with equal facility. Velma Middleton chirped several songs with the maestro and was well received. Best of her duets was "That's My Desire," which she has also recorded with Armstrong.

Show runs 90 minutes, with the All Stars on stage for an hour. The crowd wanted Armstrong on longer, but the 56-year-old trumpeter was not pushing it. The two-a-day schedule has kept him health-conscious as he travels with his doctor at all times.

Middlebrow Shift

muter market for legit attractions include this somewhat startling fact: the cost of tickets is less than the other costs involved in stepping out. Assuming an outlay of $16 for a pair of ducats, the typical middlebrow couple spend $5 for a babysitter, $4 for railroad transportation (few come in by auto, surveys indicate), $2 for taxis, and $20 for dinner and liquor.

It's been pretty well fixed that the biggest corps of legit-goers bivouacs in Greenwich, Stamford, White Plains, Rye, Montclair and the Oranges. Dull areas are Long Island's Suffolk, Connecticut's Middlesex and New York's Rockland Counties.

That reflects relative rail commuting conditions in the different areas. Where railroads offer poor service, people generally find it too much trouble to make the theatregoing trip to town.

To sell the train-rides on legit attractions there's been a $300,000 refurbishing of two-and three-sheet stands as far east as Boston and New England by Transportation Displays Inc. which has this type of theatre advertising pretty well sewed up. [Two advertising agencies, Blaine Thompson (60%) and Lawrence Wiener Associates (30%) service most of the placement.]

Stepped-up use of posters in suburbia and exurbia involves some 21 major terminals and 260 local railroad depots, plus the important airports. With modern population drift increasingly evident some managements contract display space way ahead. Interestingly, the new musical smash, "My Fair Lady", though sold out for months ahead is building further backlog in the commuter areas. This action contrasts with "South Pacific" some years ago, which did not hit the transportation circuit until the show had been on the Broadway boards a full 18 months.

Current legiters on the right-of-way posters include "Damn Yankees", "Fanny", "Hatful of Rain", "Matchmaker", "Time Limit", "Middle of the Night", "No Time For Sergeants", "Pipe Dream", "Desk Set", "The Lark", "Pajama Game" and "Ponder Heart". All in all it adds up to a far cry from George M. Cohan's discovery of New Rochelle at the turn of the century. The phrase, "45 Minutes From Broadway" has now been drastically updated.

season. He may even bypass those. Miss Raye, who was beaten consistently the past season by the Phil Silvers competition on CBS, doesn't show up at all on the projected NBC Tuesday night schedule (or any other schedule) for next season. The Wm. Morris boys have had some preliminary talks with CBS about her future services but nothing's come of them. Instead, the Tuesday 8 to 9 slotting reverts more to a musical, variety round-robin of entertainment (with Bob Hope and occasionally Martin & Lewis holding down the comedy assignment). Otherwise the accent will be on the Dinah Shore series for Chevy and the Ray Bolger musical-variety "Washington Square" layout, which gets a 16-week alternate ride.

Danny Thomas has lost both his ABC-TV sponsors, Dodge and American Tobacco, and whether he returns to the web in his "Make Room for Daddy" series depends on future sponsor reaction to the series. Major stumbling block—and always a hazard where longrunning situation comedies are concerned—is the fact that, with Jean Hagen leaving the cast as his wife, the viewer is compelled to accept a whole new premise for the series.

Texaco's failure to pick up its option on Durante creates a situation where the Schnoz may wind up doing a couple of specs for NBC next season and resting on those exclusively.

Not since George Gobel's emergence three seasons back has a "new face" hit the tv comedy jackpot. Phil Silvers, of course, did it the past season with his Sgt. Bilko characterization but Silvers' status as a show biz vet of the comedy wars hardly needs reprising here. CBS-TV went out on a limb with Johnny Carson on behalf of General Foods as a nighttime entry but he wound up as a 26-week casualty. The network is now pitching him for the daytime sweepstakes.

NBC-TV came a cropper in its attempt to build the Sunday night 8 to 9 "Comedy Hour" as a showcase for new and undeveloped talent. Nothing happened. Steve Allen is taking it over and it reverts back to a variety hour.

NBC is pinning its hopes on Buddy Hackett making the grade with his "Stanley" situation comedy, which moves into the 8:30 to 9 Monday night slot when Sid Caesar shifts to Saturday nights next season, but here, too, NBC is settling for half a dose of comedy, with the 8 to 8:30 period turned over to the "Launcelot" kid-accented adventure series.

Even the so-called Broadway and Hollywood & Vine-type of comedic personality is finding it rough going, as witness CBS' cancellation of both Robert Q. Lewis and Jack Paar.

banned for years for fear it might be considered derogatory by Negroes, but other webs still okay it. NBC and CBS have both changed words in other Foster songs but ABC hasn't on the grounds that Foster wrote of an "era which factually existed."

NBC's continuity acceptance manager, Bob Wood, says the network is guided by "common sense on public relations basis. We don't want to say slavery never existed, but we don't want to play it up." Thus, the word "darky" is out of "Old Kentucky Home," and "darkies" changed to "children" in "Swanee River." "Mammy" is deleted from "Shortin' Bread" because, "associated with the Negro servant down south, we feel it might be offensive to Negroes."

CBS changed "darkies" to "brothers." NBC also has banned blackface routines or stereotyped Negro characters, has nixed Italian gangster characters for three years, and heavies are now more evenly distributed as far as nationalist background is concerned. CBS has banned "Sam You Made the Pants Too Long" as offensive to Jews and "Chink" has been eliminated from "Chinatown, My Chinatown." Similar changes have also been made by ABC, which also banned "K-K-K-Katy" and "Cross-Eyed Cowboy on Cross-Eyed Horse" because they might offend people with those infirmities.

Palladium, London

London, May 1.

Billy Daniels (with Benny Payne), Tommy Trinder, The Nitwits, Eve Boswell (with Ron Lockhead), Lita Roza; Cinq Peres (5), Channing Pollock; Tedy Johnson & Pearl Carr; Denis Lotis, Three Kaye Sisters, Howard Jones & Reggie Arnold, Eddie Ash (and Partner), George Carden Dancers (16), Eric Rogers' Palladium Orch.

In his final vaude bill of the current Palladium season, Val Parnell repeats the formula which had such a surprise success earlier in the year. On that occasion the talent lineup comprised almost exclusively an array of recording vocalists, and the socko b.o. results encouraged him to try his luck a second time. But somehow the overall result is not so effective, and there is clearly an overplus of pop songs and singers to throw the bill off balance.

One reason may be that there is just too much talent in the bill. On opening night, headliner Billy Daniels had to wait until just five minutes before 11 (the normal curtain hour) before he was due on-stage, resulting in restriction of his stint to a mere 15 minutes or so. That he was able to stamp his personality in so short a time is something of a tribute to the colored star, but before he has an opportunity really to get into stride he is already winding with the inimitable "Black Magic." "Embraceable You," "Blackbirds" and "Your Eyes" are among the hep entries in his brief but polished songalog. Benny Payne's socko backgrounding on the ivories is an integral part of the routine.

Tommy Trinder's ingratiating style as emcee still wins an appreciative audience reaction, but it is as well for him that there is only a limited vaude season as his gags show signs of strain and his ad libbing is not as free and easy and spontaneous as when he first embarked on this chore. Nonetheless, he is quite an asset on any bill and never fails to keep the action rolling at a lively tempo.

The Nitwits comedy band routine is unfailingly a standout success. After several months in the Hippodrome revue, their zany antics still evoke a nonstop laugh flow. This is uninhibited knockabout stuff, notable for its exemplary timing and its relaxed sense of presentation. Sid Milward as the batoner and Wally Stewart as the principal comedian lead a well-trained team. Eve Boswell has been a top-ranking disk and tv chirp for some time, but this is her first Palladium engagement and she acquits herself very favorably. Gal has a lively style and happy knack of getting audience participation, even when uninvited. But she asks for it particularly for her closer, "Sugar Bush," with which she's closely identified, and gets it in full measure. Lita Roza, another top pop chirp, also impresses with her vigorous vocalization; clicking with "Papa Loves Mambo" and "My Jimmy Unknown."

As a switch from succession of disk singers, Parnell has imported the Cinq Peres, a French quintet with an unsual brand of entertainment. Without any backing from the pit aggregation they provide their own "vocal orchestra" and their offbeat effects are superbly demonstrated with a speciman of Mozart, an item from "The Barber of Seville," a highly impressive dance macabre and a variation of the popular "Pigalle." A smash diversion, worthy of prominent billing in any program.

Channing Pollock has made quite an impact since he first came to Britain in latter part of last year. With a Royal Command performance, a string of top nitery dates, a feature spot in a revue and previous Palladium billing to his credit, he's made quite a name for himself. Deservedly, too, because his magico act, in which he produces doves and decks of cards seemingly from nowhere, is one of the suavest turns of its kind seen on the West End stage.

Teddy Johnson & Pearl Carr, also Palladium first-timers, have a moderately entertaining routine, but there is an over-emphasis of coyness in their songalog. This is particularly noticeable in their arch interpretation of "No, Not Much." Denis Lotis, another prominent disk name, gets only a so-so reaction; he has an exaggerated delivery technique, which doesn't enhance such numbers as "Cuddle Me" and "A Time and a Place." The Three Kaye Sisters, a youthful vocal trio, impress with their freshness, but there is an inherent naivete, which is out of place in a sophisticated program. Howard Jones & Reggie Arnold are in a lower bracket and their vocal musical dueting gets only a mild reaction. Eddie Ash indulges in unusual acrobatics, the main part of his turn involving stunts while doing a headstand on a suspended crossbar. Solid opening act which registers to good returns.

Well-drilled resident George Carden line has two spots which they fill with attractive terping. Myro.

Apollo, N. Y.

Dinah Washington, Herbie Fields Orch (13), Jay Smythe, Charms (4), Slappy White, Fouchee Dancers (4), "Smoke Signal" (U).

This is Dinah Washington's show and she walks away with it hands down and pipes up. Songstress takes over in the closing niche and holds the house in her grip for more than 20 minutes as she rambles through a solidly routined medley of her past click associations.

Preceding Miss Washington's stint is one of the most pleasant layouts to hit the Harlem flagship in some time. What makes it especially novel is that the rock 'n' roll beat which has been dominating here is held to a minimum. With Herbie Fields' orch (four rhythm, four brass, five reed) laying down a swinging beat, the only time the r&b bounce comes through is in a segment of The Charms' turn. The four-boy combo tackles "Two Hearts" and "Heart of A Rose" in the rockin' groove but is at its best with a straight ballad workover of "Who Knows" and "Memories Are Made of This."

Layout opens nicely with Jay Smythe on roller skates. He rollterps through such dance patterns as the rhumba, soft-shoe, mambo and boogie and then winds flashily atop a table. The Fouchee Dancers, in the next-to-closing, create an exotic West Indian atmosphere with some colorful choreographic designs. Two boys and a femme do the stepping while another guy sits in the background banging a bongo.

Slappy White handles the bill's comedics in a sure manner. He's got a slick standup delivery and whips across the yocks for a big score. He comes in for a long patter turn in the trey and then is in and out introing acts.

Miss Washington opens briskly with "Our Love Is Here To Stay" then moves over to the keyboard for a self-accomping bit through the medley. There are close to 14 numbers in this potpourri and she gives the crowd an adequate taste of each. Gros.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, May 4.

Vic Oliver (with Vanda Vale, Barbara Vick, Frank Hickey, Lilian Brent; Harry Green, musical director), Tony Fayne & David Evans, Arthur Worsley, Peggy Thompson, Burt Brooks, La Rochelle Trio, Bobby Dowds House Orch.

Vic Oliver, English stage, radio and tv comedian, offers new and old material, including a comedy sketch, and scores with dry humor in which he pokes much fun at himself, his baldness and his ambition to be a serious musician. Comedian can be faulted on score of old gags, but he puts 'em all over with such mock humor that they raise yocks. He also shows aptitude for serious piano playing, tinkling the ivories as well as tickling the risibilities.

Opening trick is to show slides of himself as a baby, with his present face superimposed on naked babe's body. He includes this in screening of his alleged family album, with offstage commentary by himself.

Segues into playing piano blindfolded, then introducing ballerina Barbara Vick and his singer, Peggy Thompson, in offstage rendition of "Ave Maria." In second part of layout, Oliver takes part in comedy sketch with stooges, this being in the if-only-it-hand't-been-censored style, with audience asked to call for tag it wishes. As a French lover-husband, Oliver enters in this wearing a Davy Crockett cap. Winds program with some neat byplay with his attractive young stooge, Vanda Vale, and violin playing.

In support, La Rochelle Trio, in fourth week of vaude, are adequate dancing openers, offering a "Can-Can" to start the second segment. Peggy Thompson's songalog includes "Jimmy Unknown," the duel song from Gounod's "Faust," and "Love Is Many-Splendored Thing."

Arthur Wersley's ventriloquism with dummy Charlie Brown shows nifty voice manipulation in overlong act. Burt Brooks offers a novelty magico turn. Tony Fayne & David Evans give impressions of sporting personalities associated with English radio and tv. Bobby Dowds batons resident orch when Vic Oliver's own director, Harry Green, isn't on the rostrum for the comedian's own turn. Gord.

Palace, N. Y.

Karpis Trio, Florence Zamora, Cook & Brown, Pamela Dennis, Florida Trio, Alphonse Berge (3), Lenny Colyer, Les Cardinals (3), Myron Roman Orch; "Wetbacks" (Realart), reviewed in VARIETY March 7, '56.

Good enterntainment values are built into this Palace bill. Most of the acts have been in this house previously and newcomers Florence Zamora and Pamela Dannis (both New Acts) blend into the scenery handsomely.

One of the liveliest acts to play here are Les Cardinals, a musical and acro trio on the order of a fellow Gallic group, Les Charlivels. Cardinals comprise two boys and a girl with the lads performing on the vibes and saxes and some fast acro work thrown in. The lass provides dance and acro interludes for a totally good effect.

The bill is so constituted that there is only one turn with any degree of talk. Coming at the next-to-closing slot, it seems that anyone able to utter more than gutturals would be hailed as a tremendous wit. Lenny Colyer's impressions do better than they would ordinarily because of the fortuitous slotting. His material is okay and his impressions work out well.

Alphonse Berge, with three highly impressive models to work on, does his draping turn to its usually good responses. His lightning coutourier creations bring admiration from male as well as distaffers, and he bows off impressively.

The Florida Trio has always been one of the surefire acts here and can perform with equal effectivness in niteries. The golliwog bit is excellently executed and a rewarding mitt follows.

Cook & Brown, the Negro hoofing pair, similarly perform effectively. There are some good comedy movements and they walk off to a good palm. The Karpis Trio, openers, comprising two men and a femme, do risley and unsupported ladder work for good results.

Myron Roman Orch handles the musical chores excellently. Jose.

Empire, Edinburgh

Edinburgh, May 2.

Don Cornell (Jerry Carretta at piano), Pharos & Marina, Billy Baxter, Bobby Wright & Marion, Harry Allen & Albee Sisters (2), Lizzet & Eddie, Shipway Twins, Marie de Vere's Six Blue Orchids, Gordon L. Rolfe orch.

Don Cornell is the current headliner here and clicks strongly with stubholders, impressing with pleasing vocals and entertaining patter linking his tunes. U.S. singer has an original way with him. On this showing he deserves far larger houses than the one at performance caught, and is more allround entertaining act that many U.S. star singers. Is ably backed at ivories by his pianist-arranger, Jerry Carretta, who gets spot to himself in middle of Cornell's act.

Songalog ranges from "Hold My Hand" to "Rock Island Line," "Love Is Many-Splendored Thing," "When Autumn Leaves Start to Fall" and attractive "Size Twelve," sung with roving mike in front orch stalls.

"Size Twelve" is warbled after Cornell has singled out a pretty gal from front-stall customers, queried her on her job, boyfriend, etc., and he serenades her with the tune, to audience satisfaction. He presents the distaffer with his disk of tune as reward.

Act is performed with good lighting effects. Singer is without aid of any strong disclick, and would pull in stronger biz with such a gimmick. As is, he's very pleasant offering and would be entertaining bet for a London Palladium stint.

Support bill is lightweight. Marie de Vere's Six Blue Orchids are attractive dance openers. The two male Shipway Twins, Australians, swing skillfully on a framework of bars, showing much athletic prowess. Both are garbed in white shirts and trousers. One of the twosome wins palming for two-and-a-half somersaults from bar to ground.

Bobby Wright & Marion, in slap-happy comedy and crosstalk, won minimum reaction from small house at show caught but battled on gallantly. Act has familiar wife-arguing-with-husband fodder. Lizzet & Eddie are an attractive brother-sister acro-cum-musical team from Denmark, and score with comedy touches. Male's acro work is a standout.

Pharos & Marina baffle with thought-reading act, she being blindfolded and identifying objects. Harry Allen & Albee Sisters link novel comey of assumed amateurism with juggling dexterity. Billy Baxter (he's a brother of Jeannie Carson, English actress now on U.S. tv) shows himself one of the most promising of new crop of British comedians. Sound backing by Gordon L. Rolfe house orch. Gord.

Unit Review

Ak-Sar-Ben Revue

Omaha, May 2.

Floyd Shaw production of "Ak-Sar-Ben Revue," with Dorothy Collins, Leo de Lyon, The Albins (2), Ralph Marterie Orch (17). At Ak-Sar-Ben Coliseum, Omaha, May 1-2, '56.

Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha civic org, kicked off its show season with an exceptionally fine revue topped by Dorothy Collins. Every year Ak offers five free shows to its members, in addition to other benefits, for the annual $10 stipend—and many of 'em got their money's worth out of this show alone. Attendance numbered around 16,000 for the two nights and there are only 22,000 Ak members.

Miss Collins, fetchingly gowned in a flowing blue creation, overcame a handicap when her accompanist-director, Dick Marks, was called to Chicago because of the death of his mother on opening night. With only a short rehearsal with Ralph Marterie's orch, she went on cold and drew a huge score for her 20-minute stint.

Blonde introed with "Great Day," then bounced into "Mr. Wonderful," "When My Baby Smiles at Me," "Jubilee," "Mountain High and Bali Low," and closed with zingy "Sky Is Blue."

However, biggest ovation was accorded comic Leo de Lyon, fresh in this territory. Youth's mugging, impressions, pianistics and voice changing were socko throughout. His feat of whistling and humming at the same time was an outstanding closer.

The Albins, vet knockabout dancers, featured first half of bill and scored, although their patter could be improved. After offering their "Ballroom Dancer's Nightmare," they used a ventro bit for getaway.

Marterie, in addition to cutting a fine show, led his 17-member orch through a dozen well-selected numbers. Leader was guilty of reciting which album of his each number came from, though, which got to be old stuff. Trump.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, May 8.

A record to be very proud of—advanced cases that came here who were very ill and fully regained their health to resume work with a definite all-clear. This was accomplished by Joe McCoy, Loew manager; Sam Senseney, owner Minor Theatre, Moran, Kan.; Delphin Streder, Colonial (RKO) Theatre, New York; Roy McSwain, manager Rogers Theatre, Shelby, N.C.; Tony Chok, United Artists, Singapore, Malaya; Clifton (IATSE) Byrd, projectionist, Nashville, and David Woodard, operator Broadway Theatre Dillon, S.C.

Murray Weiss of Boston and Ned Shugrue, N.Y., Will Rogers fund executives, in for an inspection tour and to set the Foundation for the yearly powwow and meeting of the Variety Clubs-Will Rogers Hospital board of Directors, skedded early in June.

New appointments by Dr. George E. Wilson to our main office as parttime switchboard operators: Muriel (Eddy Sisters) Danzi, Bob (Mello-Larks) Smith, and Ray McCarthy, radio technician.

Harold Rudman and family motored in from New Britain, Conn., for a bedside chat with his father, Edward Rudman, formerly of Strand theatre of that city, and found him progressing well.

Louise Zolner, whose husband, Julius, returned to Gotham after a quickie visit. He helped celebrate her first real good medical clinic. She sports mild privileges and okay for biweekly pictures.

Fal (IATSE) Jones, projectionist State Theatre, Lexington, Va., in to celebrate his wife, Mildred's birthday. She is a certainty to regain her health.

paced act with one working on a table and the other on the floor carboning each other to stout mitting. Rudenko Bros., two slick jugglers, use clubs and balloons to nice effect; get great mitting with ball thrown from the aud and caught on stick and wind up with dazzling flash juggling flaming torches.

Bob DeVoye Trio, two lads and redhead femme, are bright with modern and interpretive terping, scoring with spins and twirls, ballet bits and a "Shangri-La" number. Clincher is acro femme whirling from one lad to the other in series of stands culminating in a one-foot spin by distaffer followed by rousing jive routine. Two Luvas, caught here earlier in season, amaze with ceiling-high aerial stunts in which the two femmes dangle from rigging precariously in upside-down routines. Mike Gaylord cuts a slick show and Lou Weir pleases in the organ interludes. Guy.

Eden Roc, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, May 5.

Lilo & Co., Al Bernie, Mal Malkin Orch; $3.50-$5 minimum.

This is Lilo's second cafe date, first away from New York environs. On basis of aud impact in the Cafe Pompeii of this poshery, her carefully devised act shows need for tightening and dressing down of the arrangements to point where demands on her vocalistic powers call for toning down of the range. Visually, the accent is on the obvious, of which she has plenty, with a zoom-down cleavage the eye catcher from walk-on.

As staged, the act is a fluid one with use of the excellent Pralin quartet buttressing the occasional weakness in song projection. The attractive blonde Parisienne has been handed a group of American-French concepts that call for full use of a husky fullness with the rough aspects of tonal quality revealed in the straining for the big voice plateau; when the backgroundings of the accompanying Pralins come on from backstage, the harmonics only serve to illustrate the striving for the big finish on Lilo's part. Withal, the intelligent devisings of the stager brings out a volatile charm in personality to accent American material such as "I'm the Girl," a ballad theme, a sans-mike takeoff on street scene in Paree and a mixup with male tablers utilizing handmike, pointing for laughs via the balding types she chooses in "People Are People." With aid of the Pralins, she works out an effective change to gamine outfit and the Montmartre atmosphere. Winder is medley of French pops, with quartet on for the climaxer, her "Paris In the Springtime."

Al Bernie, on cold to open proceedings, works his way into favor quickly with a series of funny one-liners, then keeps the warmth rising with quickie impreshes freshened by new wordage that raises risibilities. Always a smooth working technician, Bernie, in this big room, keeps the build mounting throughout his stint with inserts of topical overtones to routines on marriage. He has a sock sequence in which he "casts" supporting gals in a pic to steady series of laughs. Encore bringer is his fast-moving lampooning of screen, video and stage personalities, to wind into the big palm payoff.

Mal Malkin emcees creditably and, per usual, batons the showbacks adeptly. On the dansapation side, his crew is equipped with a superb array of toe-ticklers that keep the floor filled. Lary.

showshops is spread around to many more cities than in previous years because of the larger number of arenas and auditoriums.

Latest to come in with expositions is the huge N.Y. Coliseum which opened April 28 with stamp, photography and automobile shows. The overall b.o. is likely to be a tremendous $500,000.

Another area of inome for the arena ops that is on the upbeat is the touring evangelists, which are on the increase. Gospeleers such as Billy Graham, Oral Roberts and some of the lesser known figures are making continued demands upon arena time. The strength of the evangelistic boxoffice is extremely hard to gauge because collections and free-will offerings are an important consideration. However, that area of arena operation

Musical numbers: "Ooh, My Feet," "I Know How It Is," "I Don't Know Nothing About You," "The Most Happy Fella," "Standing on the Corner," "Joey, Joey, Joey," "Soon You Gonna Leave Me, Joe," "Rosabella," "Abbondanza," "Bambini," "Soposalizio," "Special Delivery," "Benvenuta," "I Don't You Cry," "Fresno Beauties," "Cold and Dead," "Love and Kindness," "Happy to Make Your Acquaintance," "I Don't Like This Dame," "Big D," "How Beautiful the Days," "Young People," "Warm All Over," "I Like Everybody," "Like a Woman Loves a Man," "My Heart Is So Ful of You," "Mama, Mama," "Song of a Summer Night," "Please Let Me Tell You," "Trio at the Station," "I Made a Fist."

Opera is practically a dirty word on Broadway. In the tradition of Shubert Alley, it means boxoffice poison. They've avoided the lethal designation for "The Most Happy Fella," billing it simply as Frank Loesser's new musical, with the subhead credit line, based on Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted."

Regardless of billing, however, "Fella" is an opera—a powerful, beautiful and stirring opera, comparable to "Porgy and Bess" in quality and impact. It is the work of a fine musician, an artist with dimension and stature far beyond the brilliant musical comedy, "Guys and Dolls," or anything else he's previously written. With "Fella," Loesser has added a distinguished item to the repertory of American opera.

But whether this Kermit Bloomgarden-Lynn (Mrs.) Loesser production will be a commercial success may be something else again. True, it had a smash opening and subsequent window trade and broker call have been heavy, on top of the large advance sale. But, up to now, no American opera has ever been a financial success in its initial presentation for a continuous run.

Even the fabulous "Porgy and Bess" was a boxoffice flop in its original production by the Theatre Guild, becoming a hit in revival only after about 10 years of radio plugging of the music. Also, Gian-Carlo Menotti's two full-length operas, "The Consul" and "Saint of Bleecker Street," were both financial failures in their first presentations on Broadway, despite superlative critical praise.

As it demonstrated during its tryout tour, "Fella" won't please everyone. In fact, a few people will probably hate it, and more moderate patrons are likely to find it slow, heavy, overly sentimental and perhaps deficient in comedy and popular romantic appeal. In a way, they'll be right. It's a matter of viewpoint.

Many will certainly relish it. They will be moved and even entertained by it, not minding its serious tone, slightly overloaded quality, deliberate pace and sentimentality. Whether there'll be enough satisfied people will ultimately depend on word-of-mouth comment, on how much operating profit the show can earn and on such secondary factors as film and television and stock rights.

Loesser, who worked on "Fella" for five years, took on a staggering challenge with the assignment. For this is not the usual drama with music, merely a serious story with songs, but a fullscale operatic treatment of the 1924-25 Pulitzer Prize play.

There is little straight dialog. Nearly all the yarn is presented in musical form, not only with song numbers, but with operatic duets, trios, quartets and choral passages, as well as recitatives in melodic form and several plot-developing ballets. Moreover, the musical form and tone run the gamut, varying according to mood and even the characters in focus.

The show is undeniably long and heavy, giving almost an overstuffed impression, as if Loesser were deliberately displaying his versatility. There are, for example, 33 musical numbers (although there are relatively few set songs and no titles are listed in the Playbill). Some of the material could seemingly be cut, and doubtless will be in revivals and stock, when the adaptor-composer-lyricist is not present or in position to insist on it all being included.

But despite its unquestioned flaws, and the fact that it's not everyone's dish, "Fella" is going to have a large and intense audience, will draw many repeat patrons and will almost certainly become a standard work in musical stock. It's also a natural for television spectacularization and is probably film material.

It's in three acts, which is almost unknown for a Broadway musical, and has 11 scenes. The original plot line has been narrowed, and the central characters and story hold interest admirably. There are a number of excellent musical passages in the operatic medium, notably "Benvenuta," "How Beautiful the Days," "My Heart Is So Full of You" and "Song of a Summer Night."

There are several sure hit parade and disk jockey pops, including "Standing on the Corner," "Love and Kindness," "Big D" (which can't miss getting Loesser named honorary mayor of Dallas and maybe governor of Texas) and "I Like Everybody." Not only the pop numbers, but also several of the operatic pieces get a big audience reception.

Vocally, the show is tremendous. As the slow, generous, lovable vineyard owner who wins a mail-order bride by sending a photo of his handsome young foreman, Robert Weede is magnificent. The part is terrifyingly long and arduous, probably one of the most taxing in all opera or musical drama, and how the former Met star is going to be able to continue in it seems a question. As of the premiere, however, he is superb.

As the hash-slinger bride, Jo Sullivan has vocal color and warmth, and looks and plays the role plausibly. Art Lund is properly big and virile as the foreman who can't resist a girl, and he sings agreeably in the blues idiom Loesser has composed for the character.

Other standout singing and acting performances are given by Susan Johnson as the heroine's waitress friend, Shorty Long as an amusingly amiable vineyard worker, Mona Paulee as the bridegroom's jealous sister, Arthur Rubin, Rico Froehlich and John Henson as infectiously melodic chefs, and such supporting singer-players as Keith Kaltenberg and Lee Cass.

More than in most shows, the ensemble singers and dancers contribute vitally to the general impact. Much more than normally, too, it's genuinely satisfying to hear singers who can really sing—who have excellent voices and the training to use them properly. Perhaps it wasn't mere coincidence, therefore, that the premiere performance went particularly well, and the first-night audience was especially cordial.

Subject to a tendency toward slowness and deliberateness, which may be inherent in the type of serious music drama, Joseph Anthony's direction seems expressive, giving the impression of dimension, and his handling of groups is skillful.

Jo Mielziner's scenery and lighting are positively eloquent, with properly atmospheric settings on the forestage and picturesque backdrops to suggest depth (and changing seasons), all flexible in terms of performance. Dania Krupska's choreography is suitably vigorous and varied, and the costumes by Motley are appropriately colorful. Hobe.

REVIVAL

Revival of the play by John Golden, at the Music Box, N. Y., Feb. 16, '49, ran 61 performances, with a cast including Paul Muni as Tony, Carol Stone as Amy, Edward Andrews as Joe and Charles Kennedy in his original role as the Priest.

Wake Up, Darling

Gordon W. Pollock (in association with Lee Segall and Richard Cook) production of comedy in two acts (five scenes), by Alex Gottlieb. Stars Barry Nelson, Barbara Britton, Russell Nype; features Kay Medford, Paula Truman, Grace Raynor. Stager by Ezra Stone; setting Ballou; costume,s, Guy Kent. At Ethel Barrymore Theatre, N.Y., May 2, '56; $4.60 top weeknights, $5.75 Friday-Saturday nights ($6.90 opening).

Martha ..... Kay Medford
Juliet ..... Paula Truman
Polly Emerson ..... Barbara Britton
Deerfield Prescott ..... Russell Nype
Don Emerson ..... Barry Nelson
Gloria ..... Grace Raynor
Policemen ..... Robert Downing, Richard B. Shull
Granville Prescott ..... Raymond Bramley
Penelope ..... Ann Whiteside
Mrs. Johnson ..... Jean Arley

A standard item in the play market is the one-set comedy about a gay and charming young couple living in a handsome east side Manhattan apartment. Such scripts go the rounds of producers' offices by the dozen, and two or three generally turn up hopefully on the stage during a Broadway season.

Alex Gottlieb has apparently written several hundred such plays (between film, radio and television scripts) and he obviously has the routine down pat. In fact, "Wake Up, Darling," which arrived at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre last week, may even be the several hundred. At least it seems like several hundred such exercises that have somehow gotten as far as a Broadway opening night.

It's likely to last about as long as most of the others. On the basis of its simple production requirements and its wealth of little quips, the play may have possibilities for stock, but offers nothing for films or tele because of its stereotype plot and characters.

"Wake Up, Darling," is a hapless triangle antic about a young ad writer and would-be dramatist, his would-be actress-wife and the incredibly innocent and possibly talented young Yale crew-cutter who's written a prospective Broadway musical. Secondary characters include the gal-about-saloons who retypes the adman's playwriting outpourings, the inevitable imprudent maid and an adhesive multiple divorcee. There are also about a half-dozen bit roles.

This assembly-line product is laced with incessant small jokes (they tend to be the sort of variation-of-the-obvious that are the professional gagman's stock-in-trade), averaging perhaps one mild laugh per gross. What starts out as seeming slightly labored presently becomes unbelievable and ultimately just uncomfortable. A progressive number of first-nighters appeared to find it too uncomfortable.

As the exasperated husband, Barry Nelson gives the same plausible, nettled and proficiently deadpan farce performance he did as the young architect in "Moon Is Blue." It's good enough, but familiar. Russell Nype has welcome animation and a helpful wide-eyed quality as the jittery would-be home-wrecker, and Barbara Britton is decorative and lively as the giddy wife.

Kay Medford offers another of her effective throwaway comedy portrayals as the typist-souse who has spent years and years getting around, Paula Truman turns in a competent job as the maid and Grace Raynor is suitably obnoxious as the ever-on-the-make divorcee.

As director, Ezra Stone has made a worthy attempt to hide the script's banality and emptiness with brisk pace and inventive business, while Ballou has designed another of those smartly distinctive apartment settings and Guy Kent has provided the customary in-the-mode clothes. Hobe.

(Closed last Saturday night (5) after five performances).

A full-length version of "Fashions in Rhythm," the abbreviated musical current at the Versailles nitery, N.Y., is planned for Broadway production next fall by Jan Brewster, who wrote the book for the cafe offering. She'll also do the libretto for the expanded edition, while Jane Douglas and Tom O'Malley will supply the music and lyrics, respectively.

Origination of 'Musical Comedy'

From Vienna's Marcel Prawy, producer of the Volksoper (People's Opera), via composer Robert Stolz, comes answer to a query on the etymology of the term "musical comedy."

Historian Prawy, himself an expert on the international musicomedy and light operetta production scene, states that the term "was first used in connection with 'The Black Crook' which opened at Niblo's Garden, N. Y. City, Sept. 12, 1866. It was produced by William Wheatley and was a combination of a play by Charles M. Barras and acts of a French Ballet Troupe. However, it was not until the period of World War I that this term was used in America to indicate the new theatrical form, differing from the operetta and the revue."

Wild Grows the Heather

London, May 4.

Jack Waller's presentation of new musical in two acts (11 scenes), adapted by Hugh Ross Willliamson from J. M. Barrie's "The Little Minister." Music, Robert Lindon; lyrics, William Henry; decor, Michael Eve; costumes, Philip Gough; choreography, Gilbert Vernon. Stars Bill O'Connor, Valerie Miller, Paul Curran, Peter Sinclair, Madeleine Christie. Staged by Ralph Reader. At the Hippodrome, London, May 3, '56; $2.35 top.

A thoroughly wholesome musical, dressed in gay tartan costumes and with lively tunes, "Wild Grows the Heather" is British in style and Scotch in subject matter. It makes no attempt to emulate the slick Broadway imports and will inevitably draw a different type patronage.

Even if sophisticated West-Enders give it the go-by, as well they might, it should attract a healthy volume of out-of-town trade to keep it running for quite a time. It is, indeed, a cinch for the charabanc trade—the organised theatre parties which are brought in by coach from the provinces.

"Heather" is an adaptation of J. M. Barrie's "Little Minister" and although Hugh Ross Williamson keeps close to the original, it has lost a deal of its whimsy in its transition. That inevitably robs the tuner of much of its inherent charm and gives the main story outline a staid appearance. Ralph Reader's vigorous staging largely corrects this fault, although it permits too much chorus work in song presentation, which tends to date the style of the production.

Jack Waller, who prior to World War II, was associated with some of the top West End musicals, is apparently too shy to take the credit due to him for the songs. The program credit "music by Robert Lindon" has deceived no one. Waller has cleffed a number of appealing ballads, although there's admittedly an overplus of such numbers, but he has a smash show tune in "Walking to the Kirk," which is given the full treatment in presentation.

Gilbert Vernon has not tried to be unduly artistic or fancy in his choreography, but instead has concentrated on making a workmanlike contribution to the production. He achieves a degree of gaiety, notably in a Highland dance, and a measure of comedy in a routine featuring the three Elders of the kirk. The dances are consistently bold and determined.

In its story line, the show develops the basic Barrie theme of the romance between the minister and the Earl's daughter who pretends to be a gipsy girl, alongside a romantic comedy diversion involving a scheming nanny and a dour, unwilling Highlander. The conventional love passages reflect the pedestrian style of writing in evidence through much of the book; not much wit and an abundance of obvious humor. Nonetheless, the overall effect of story, songs and dancing is more than adequate.

Bill O'Connor, in the male lead as the minister, stepped into the part on the pre-London tour, succeeding William Clauson (specially brought over from America). He plays the part acceptably and handles the romantic ballads with confidence.

Valerie Miller, recruited from the Glasgow stage, may have the authentic Scottish accent, but is unnecessarily arch. The lass has potentialities, but needs stern directorial control over her mannerisms.

Gerald Lawson, Richard Golding and David Keir, as the three church elders, provide the best of the comedy; and Madeleine Christie with Paul Curran also raise a few laughs with their comedy love affair. Peter Sinclair commands attention as a shy suitor.

Michael Eve admirably captures the sweep and color of the Scottish highlands with his decor. By the adroit use of subdued tones, he's made an effective job of both exteriors and interiors. Myro.

Hotel Paradiso

London, May 3.

H. M. Tennent Ltd. & Peter Glenville presentation of farce in three acts, by Georges Feydeau and Maurice Desvallieres, translated by Glenville. Stars Alec Guinness; decor by Osbert Lancaster; staged by Glenville. At Winter Garden Theatre London May 2, '56; $2.35 top.

Boniface ..... Alec Guinness
Angelica Boniface ..... Martita Hunt
Cot ..... Frank Pettingell
Marcelle Cot ..... Irene Worth
Maxime ..... Kenneth Williams
Victoire ..... Billie Whitelaw
Martin ..... Douglas Byng

Georges ..... Michael Bates
Police Inspector ..... John Salew
Marguerite ..... Ann Warren
Violette ..... Jale Davaz
Paquerette ..... Alanna Royce
Pervenche ..... Virginia Holt
Prof. Tabu ..... Michael Malnick

Most French farces are descended from the pen, or copied from the style, of Georges Feydeau, part author of this one. Setting the date forward a bit doesn't disguise the outmoded form of entertainment in its heyday 60 years ago. It has been skilfully adapted by Peter Glenville, but as generally happens, the airy Gallic indelicacy is lost somewhere in bridging the English channel and the result is in the slapstick tradition reminiscent of the early Chaplin.

It is the versatility of Alec Guinness and exuberance of his supporting company that make this acceptable to modern standards and a potential winner for the coming season. Its chance in the U.S. would put an unbalanced load on the shoulders of the actor chosen for the lead.

Guinness appears as a downtrodden little Parisian architect who conceives a sudden passion for his friend's neglected wife. During the temporary absence of their mates, they plan a night in a backstreet hotel, only to find most of the characters already introduced sheltering in the same haunt. From then on the comedy emerges through chases from door to door, disguised identities and a frustrated ending to the plans of the guilty couple.

Guinness plays the role like a mischievous schoolboy bursting the parental bonds and determined to plunge into sin with a capital S. His dragon of a wife is superbly portrayed by Martita Hunt.

Irene Worth prattles coyly as the would-be erring wife and Frank Pettingell makes a suitably pompous bore of her husband. Douglas Byng, best known for his revue and cabaret appearances, makes the most of his limited opportunities as a stuttering friend. Piece is well directed by Glenville. The play was titled "Free Exchange" during its recent tryout tour.

Mark Marvin Productions Ltd. presentation (in association with Anthony Brady Farrell & Gabriel Katzka) a comedy in three acts, by Robert McEnroe. Stars Peter Cushing; decor, Reece Pemberton; staged by Martin Landau. At Duchess Theatre, London, May 1, '56; $2.35 top.

There's a simple, gentle philosophy running through this latest American import, but it lacks the stamina to meet current competitive conditions. Its West End life will be limited, but it could probably make an eventual profit by going on a provincial tour, where the name value of Peter Cushing has more draw.

Robert McEnroe's comedy is a shrewd development of the theme that one is as old as one feels, told

See 9 Summer Spanners on B'way; 3 Others as Maybes; 15 Last Year

Only nine current Broadway shows are figured likely to continue on the boards through the summer. Last year 15 entries spanned the hot months.

The probable warm-weather survivors this season stack up as "Most Happy Fella," "Mr. Wonderful," "My Fair Lady," "Damn Yankees" and "Pajama Game," in the musical category, and "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "Diary of Anne Frank," "Matchmaker" and "No Time for Sergeants," in the straight-play field.

Shows considered as having an outside chance of making it through the hot spell are "Hatful of Rain," "Janus" and "Desk Set." The more doubtful of prospects are "Fallen Angels," "Fanny," "Lark," "Pipe Dream," "Ponder Heart," "Waiting for Godot" and "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter."

Due to layoff during the summer are "Great Sebastians" and "Inherit the Wind," while the status of "Middle of the Night" hinges on a replacement for the play's star, Edward G. Robinson. "Time Limit" closes next Saturday (12), while "Witness for the Prosecution" closes June 30, to tour.

There are still four shows listed to come in during the next few weeks, any of which could be summer run-through candidates. They include "Lovers," which preems tomorrow (Thurs.), "Shangri-La," "New Faces of 1956" and "Ziegfeld Follies."

However, "Follies" has posted a provisional closing notice for next Saturday (12) in Philly.

Stratford (Ont.) Troupe Gets Bid From On-Avon; Mulls Winter Touring

Stratford, Ont., May 8.

The Stratford Shakespeare Festival company may become a year-around operation and go on tour during the winter months. That's revealed by Michael Langham, new artistic director of the organization.

The company, which goes to the Edinburgh Festival for a guest engagement following its fourth summer season here June 18-Aug. 18, has already been invited for an appearance next winter at the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon, England. Tentative plans are to Canadian and U. S. winter tours for the group's productions done here during the summer.

Members of last summer's Festival productions of "Oedipus" are currently appearing in the Kipnis-Guthrie film version of the Greek tragedy being shot here.

TAPE BELAFONTE TALK FOR JESUITS' HALL

Detroit, May 8.

Harry Belafonte's talk to U. of Detroit students so impressed the Rev. Patrick A. Madgett, S. J., that he received permission to play tape recordings of the talk in the Jesuit institution's community dining room where it is the custom to listen to either "live" or recorded talks on religion, etc., at dinner.

Father Madgett observed that Belafonte's "remarkable and simply phrased approach to philosophy, religion and art is the sort of thing I have tried to pass on to my students for years."

Said Belafonte: "I had to decide, at an extremely early age, my purpose in life. I resolved to try for achievement instead of success. I want to express the truth in all things through the medium of my art. Even the great purpose of my life, achieving better human relations, cannot relegate my art to the role of propaganda. I seek to attain this betterment of human relations indirectly, and more effectively, as it turns out, by expressing the truth as well as I can in my art."

The University's human relations club presented Belafonte with a special citation for "his outstanding efforts in the field of human relations." Belafonte appeared at the university while his "Sing, Man Sing" show was playing the Shubert here.

Sherek Players Launch Summer Sked, Glasgow

Glasgow, May 3.

The Henry Sherek Players, formed by the British producer for a 12-week legit season here, got off to a commendable start last week. The group is offering "Harvey," Mary Chase's hit U.S. comedy, at the King's Theatre here. The production marks vet performer Stanley Baxter's return to legit. He's starring in the offering with Mairhi Russell and Jessica James.

Supporting cast includes Michael O'Halloran, Helena Gloag, Marilyn Gray, Roddy McMillan and Norman Fraser, with direction by Edward Burnham.

'Follies' Wavers; TV Deal Hinges

Philadelphia, May 8.

"Ziegfeld Follies" is on the verge of folding here. Unless additional coin is raised, the revue will terminate its tryout tour next Saturday (15) at the Shubert Theatre. A provisional closing notice has been posted backstage.

It's understood producers Richard Kollmar and James W. Gardiner need another $30,000 to get the production to Broadway for its scheduled May 26 preem at the Winter Garden Theatre. The Tallulah Bankhead starrer is capitalized at $396,000, including 10% overcall. The Shuberts have been approached to put up the extra coin, as has tv producer Max Liebman. In the latter case, Liebman would get the television rights to the property, plus the physical setup.

Major hitch to the Liebman deal is that he wouldn't be able to give the production a condensed spec treatment until about six weeks after its scheduled Broadway bow. It's figured questionable whether the show could run that long on the basis of its out-of-town reception. The weekly break-even cost on the projected New York run is expected to be over $55,000, an unprecedented high, on a capacity gross of $70,000.

"Shangri-La" will interrupt its pre-Broadway tryout run with a one-week layoff following next Saturday (12) night's performance at the Shubert Theatre, Boston. The Robert Fryer-Lawrence Carr production is scheduled to resume its out-of-town break-in May 22 at the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia. It's slated for a June 6 Broadway bow, at an unspecified theatre.

'ADELE' LOST $251,739 ON 228G INVESTMENT

"Amazing Adele," a tryout flop of last winter, represented a $251,729 loss. That was $23,739 over its $228,000 capitalization, which included 20% overcall. The deficit was paid by the producer-general partners, Albert Selden and Morton Gottlieb.

The musical cost $194,450 to produce, plus a $58,926 loss on its tryout which folded in Boston. Closing expenses and incidental costs added $3,722, bringing the total expenditure to $257,099, less $5,360 in miscellaneous income.

The book for "Adele" was adapted by Anita Loos from the French play by Pierre Barrillet and Jean-Pierre Gredy. Selden supplied the music and lyrics.

Marilyn Ross Set For 'Kismet,' 'Guys' in Barns

Cafe and television singer Marilyn Ross is another from outside legit to hit the summer spots. She's contracted for the Kansas City Starlight operation, opening June 25 in "Kismet."

Thereafter she appears in "Guys and Dolls" for Lee Guber and Shelley Ford, the musical tent showmen, at Valley Forge, Pa., July 16 for one week and at Westbury, L. I., July 30 for two weeks. Agented for the legiters by Nat Dehin and Ray Smith.

DALLAS PRODUCING 3 AND GETS 3 TOURERS

Dallas, May 8.

State Fair Musicals' 15th summer season, opening June 11, will feature Shirley Jones in "Show Boat" as the closing bill, Aug. 20-Sept. 2. Charles R. Meeker Jr., managing director-producer, has three touring shows to fill the first six weeks, but he will produce "Can-Can," "Great Waltz" and Show Boat" here.

Donald Saddler will be back as dance director after four years' absence, and returning staffers are George Schaefer, stage director; Franz Allers, musical director; Gino Smart, assistant musical director; Peter Wolf, scenic designer, and Mason Johnson, stage manager.

Schedule includes "No Time for Sergeants," with James Holden, June 11-24; "Boy Friend," with JoAnn Bayless and John Hewer, June 25-July 8; "Silk Stockings," with Gretchen Wyler, July 9-22; "Can-Can," starring Hildegarde, July 23-Aug. 5; "Great Waltz," with Liberace, George Liberace and Jean Fenn, Aug. 6-19 and "Show Boat" as the finale.

5 Shows Shutter; 'Bus', 'Fancy' Hits, 2 Flops, 1 Moot

Broadway and the road had five show closings last week. Two were in New York and three on the road.

The Broadway closers, "Mister Johnson" and "Wake Up Darling," were both flops, while the hinterland lineup included two moneymakers, "Plain and Fancy" and the touring company of "Bus Stop." It's figured the remaining entry, George Brandt's low-budget touring edition of "Tea and Sympathy," broke about even on its run.

"Johnson," produced by Cheryl Crawford and Robert Lewis, and "Darling," presented by Gordon W. Pollock (in association with Lee Segall and Richard Cook), represented a combined loss of approxi-

May Seek U.S. Law to Ban Reprisal By Legit Theatres Against Critics

Washington, May 8.

Federal legislation to prohibit theatre owners and producers from reprisals against newspapers for unfavorable reviews may be recommended to Congress. That was indicated at a Capitol Hill hearing last week of alleged attempts of J. J. Shubert to muzzle Boston critic Elliot Norton for panning "Ponder Heart."

Members of a House Judiciary Subcommittee heard witnesses testify to "flagrant, brazen, outright" attempts by a rep of the legit tycoon to bottle up tough critics. Although a motion to turn over records of the hearings to the Justice Dept. were shelved until both sides have been heard, indications are that the Congressmen might recommend legislation similar to that recently approved by the Massachusetts State Senate.

Hearings were a result of charges of Rep. Thomas O'Neill Jr. (D., Mass.), that Shubert assaulted freedom of the press in virtually eliminating advertising in the Boston Post because of Norton's unfavorable review. Three witnesses, including Rep. O'Neill, Post editor-in-chief John McManus, and Norton himself, detailed efforts of Shubert rep Michael Kavanagh to stifle the critic and subsequently to punish the Post for not censoring their reviewer.

An amazed committee listened sympathetically to reports of threats, complaints, and outright demands that Norton "report plays," not criticize them, all made in the name of the Shubert boss. At one point, McManus testified that Kavanagh flatly stated, "This is the end of Norton," and withdrew the critic's press privileges from all seven Shubert houses in Boston.

'Variety' Gets Into the Act

VARIETY's name came into the hearings frequently, both as a fellow-victim of the Shubert ire, and as an authority on show biz. Each witness pointed out that VARIETY has clashed with the Shuberts on the same issues, and been subjected to reprisals.

Norton put into the official record VARIETY's report that "Ponder Heart" will probably run in the red, to back up his review as one receiving public acceptance, and not merely an "eccentric" opinion. He also made it clear that both Playwrights' Co., producers of the comedy, and authors Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov called to assure him that they had no part in the Shubert boycott of him.

McManus traced in detail the stormy scene in his office last January when Kavanagh called to complain about the Norton re-

Localites Fight Eatery Plan at Stratford, Conn.

Stratford, Conn., May 8.

American Shakespeare Festival Theatre's plan to set up a tent-restaurant on its property this season has run into resistance from local restaurant owners. Latter have retained a lawyer to buck the Festival pitch to operate an eatery-lounge for theatre patron.

Restaurant operators argue that the Shakespeare project is tax-free, therefore unfair competition.

'Sgts' Tops 200% Profit (So Far)

"No Time for Sergeants" has passed the 200% profit mark. That's figured on the net as of an April 7 accounting, plus estimated profit for the ensuing four weeks.

The take on the Maurice Evans-Emmett Rodgers production includes operating profit and miscellaneous income. The latter consists principally of revenue from Warner Bros. on the film studio's purchase of Ira Levin-Mac Hyman comedy for a down-payment of $100,000, plus weekly payments equal to 10% of the gross on profitable stanzas, up to a $250,000 ceiling.

The Maurice Evans-Emmett Rodgers production is currently in its 30th week of standee-limit attendance at the Alvin Theatre, N. Y. A national company is scheduled for mounting soon, with $65,000 of the Broadway company's funds thus far set aside for its financing.

Highlights of the Charles H. Renthal audit included the following:

Original capital (repaid), $100,000.

Net profit, $168,165.

Film income to date, $52,558.

Average weekly profit, $11,500.

Distributed profit, $120,000.

Equity Politics—Current Chapter

(Telegram)

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Sime always said, "no sides, the facts." How do you explain the VARIETY article and pitch obviously attacking the regular slate of Equity? I am deeply shocked. Is VARIETY now in politics?

Curt Conway

VARIETY is not in politics, now or ever. But VARIETY does regularly try to explain the meaning behind rebel, rump or unusual developments involving who controls theatrical organizations. An example in point is the considerable space given of late to the anti-Petrillo maneuvers within the American Federation of Musicians.

As to the Equity elections of June 1, this paper is taking no editorial position and Curt Conway is gratuitous in his interpretation that last issue's quotation of a statement by Ralph Bellamy, Margola Gillmore and Raymond Massey constituted, by its publication, an "obvious attack" on the "regular" ticket, by VARIETY itself. This periodical quotes lots of people on lots of issues all the time.

It can hardly be denied that the present election at Equity is somewhat befogged in that the appearance of an "independent" ticket by the so-called moderates is itself an oddity after these same moderates had earlier captured the nominating machinery but failed to manipulate it.

Still Curt Conway raises a nice point.

Just how does a trade paper go about reporting such an election? To ask the question is not to beg it, but it is worth pointing out that in the interest of tact and careful statement VARIETY has itself added to the over-abundance of euphemisms employed in reporting this particular contest.

All persons of consciously disposed good will hesitate a long time nowadays from hasty use of sticky political labels, but it's surely no news to anybody that Equity, like many another union, is still wobbly from the postwar binge of charge and countercharge, some bigotry on the one side and some Fifth Amendment evasion on the other. It is hard to see how more of the same is good for Equity.

VARIETY is in the business of reporting facts, but facts are frequently meaningless without some explanation of their meaning. In any event this Equity election does not have rival tickets for no reason. Honest conflict, at the least, is present and emotions are stirred—admittedly along possibly over-rutted lines.

VARIETY's own conscience would be troubled not for the reasons Curt Conway attempts to suggest, but rather because we have not gone deeper and dug more news. For example, we might have investigated reports of one man's strange power and the rigorous discipline it's said his followers demonstrate whenever he passes the word. VARIETY has refrained from doing so because its long-time policy, and Conway is correct in citing it, has been to go straight down the middle in reporting controversies. Save only when it has deemed that the good name of show business was at stake, in which circumstances, ours being the discretion, we reserve the right to take an editorial position.

But when VARIETY takes an editorial position it is clearly stamped as just that and is, typically, stated in sufficiently blunt and precise language.

Good Old Summertime Means Another Splurge For Immortal (P.D.) Bard

Shakespeare is in for another hefty workout this summer. There'll be at least five festivals devoted to the Bard. They'll be spread from Ashland, Ore., to Stratford, Ont.

The two major operations are the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespeare Festival, opening June 18 and running through Aug. 18, and the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre & Academy, at Stratford, Conn., bowing June 26 and continuing through Sept. 9. It will be the fourth season for the former and the second for the latter.

Two of the festivals will be presented in the Ohio territory by the Antioch (College) Area Theatre. The twin venture will have companies functioning at its home base in Yellow Springs and in the Toledo Zoo Amphitheatre.

The Yellow Springs festival has been given for several years, but this is the inaugural semester for the Toledo event. Both operations will get underway June 27 for 11-week seasons.

The Oregon Shakespearean Festival, an annual offering for the past 21 years, will run from Aug. 1-Sept. 1 in Ashland. Additional Bard outbursts will presumably be announced.

Off-Broadway Shows

Four Premieres

Phoenix Theatre (T. Edward Hambleton & Norris Houghton), in association with Lucia Chase and Oliver Smith, "Sideshow" presentation of the Ballet Theatre Workshop in four new ballets and one revival. Produced by Randall Brooks; musical director, Daniel Saidenberg; production supervision, Edward Parone. At Phoenix Theatre, N.Y., May 7, '56; $3.45 top.

"Continuum": Choreography, Harry Asmus; music, W. A. Mozart.

"The Enchanted": Choreography, Katherine Litz; music, Richard Banks; adapted from play by Jean Giraudoux; staged by Miss Litz and James Mitchell.

"Streetcorner Royalty": Choreography, Job Saunders; music, Jack Montrose.

"Pas de Deesses": Choreography, Robert Joffrey; music, John Field; adaptation, John Wilson.

"Workout": Choreography, Robert Joffrey; music, Robert McBride.

It's only fair to remark about the Ballet Theatre Workshop production at the Phoenix Theatre that when four featured members of the regular company do a revival of Robert Joffrey's "Pas de Deesses," the occasion becomes completely theirs. The airy evocation, to John Field's music, of a god's lovelife has the precise shade of twitting necessary. Lupe Serrano, Ruth Ann Koesun, Sonia Arova and Erik Bruhn dance it with graciously supple wit.

Since the balance of the program, "Four Premieres," is the annual Workshop showcase, comparison may be unfair. Job Sanders' brutally arresting "Streetcorner Royalty," however, to the accompaniment of Jack Montrose's tense percussion, is work of promise by any standard, this study of hoodlum rivalry and debauch being staged with frightening authenticity. Showing to particular advantage are Ernest Parham, as a victimized saxiphonist, and Jerry Ruffner, as a deposed gang leader.

"The Enchanted" is a truncated treatment by Katherine Litz, of the Jean Giraudoux play, with music by Richard Banks. It suffers from defects indigenous to the spoken ballet, and does very little for Giraudoux. Choreographically, Miss Litz has been witty, and guester Gemze de Lappe, as the girl under the spell, dances with fragile grace, managing to convey the material's essence much better than do the stilted narration and dialog.

"Workout" is a lively nightcap devised by Joffrey to Robert McBride's music. It pretends to be no more than a colorful exercise and as such is done energetically and well. The opener, Harry Asmus' attempt to use the Mozart serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," suffers from its September-mornish toe-dipping style, a misfortune that Nana Prudents escapes to advantage.

From classic to jazz, the program has something for everybody, enough talent abounding to give the Ballet Theatre comfort about its fledglings and to bring the Phoenix Sideshow season to an amiable conclusion. Geor.

The Autumn Garden

Equity Library Theatre revival of drama in three acts, by Lillian Hellman. Staged by Robert W. Goldsby; settings and castumes, Richard Mason; lighting, Carol Hoover. At Lenox Hill, N.Y., May 3, '56.

Cast: Sylvia Davis, Marjorie Eaton, Ned Cary, Wyley Hancock, Marland Messner, Isabel Price, Angela Paton, Melvin Miner, Josephine Nichols, Henderson Forsythe, Genevieve Griffin, Carol Thompson.

Someday directors at Equity Library Theatre may learn how to pace their plays. Despite the competence of the current revival of "The Autumn Garden," there seems no need for its 8:40-11:40 running time. If the play had kept this schedule during its main stem run, it would have been rugged on commuter trade.

Stager Robert W. Goldsby has brought understanding to Lillian Hellman's study of a group arrived at the point-of-no-return in their lives. He has cast well, and it's a plus that the three-hour running time actually seems less. Working in his and the company's favor is the hardy perennial quality "Garden" shows at age five.

With the good distribution of parts, the company can showcase itself to advantage. As the flutter and ailing General's wife, Sylvia Davis plays with properly anxious humor, while Ned Cary is constantly sure as her troubled husband. The play's other married couple, the back-slapped pseudo-artist and his monied wife, are handled by Henderson Forsythe and Genevieve Griffin. While Forsythe's energy is occasionally overdone, his drunk scene is valid, while Miss Griffin's restrained comprehension provides a good foil.

As a salty grandmother, Marjorie Eaton finds all her laughs and Josephine Nichols has an engaging directness as mistress of the summer resort home. Angela Paton has difficulty as the French girl whose continental precocity occasionally verges on the incredible.

Richard Mason has provided a tasteful interior, although it lacks the play's specifically regional quality. Geor.

The Silver Whistle

with a nice sense of whimsical characterization. It doesn't add up to very much as a serious contribution to the subject, but makes pleasant, relaxing entertainment.

The plot makes an attractive vehicle for Peter Cushing as the hobo who cheats his way into an old people's home to make sure of three square meals a day and a bed at night. Pretending to be 77, but actually some 30 years younger, he suggests that his youthful appearance is due to his wide experience of life.

His influence transforms the outlook of the other inmates. The thin story is given a veneer of substance by the philosophical exchanges between Cushing and a fellow hobo, as well as with his fellow guests.

Martin Landau has captured the mood of the play with his sensitive staging and is well served by the skillful cast. Apart from Cushing's engaging portrayal, there's a neat cameo by Alfie Bass as the other hobo, and a balanced performance by Robin Bailey as the vicar in charge of the home. The old people are contrastingly played by Ernest Thesiger, Olga Lindo, Joyce Barbour and Mary Merrall, among others. Jennifer Wright strikes a provocative note as the vicar's fiancee who falls for Cushing's exuberant charm. Myro.

("Silver Whistle" was produced on Broadway in 1948-49 by the Theatre Guild, with Jose Ferrer as star, continuing for 219 performances.)

Late Interlude

London, May 2.

Honoria Pleisch presentation (in association with Joyce Jackson and William Wordsworth) of intimate revue in 20 scenes. Sketches, Peter Jones, Vernon Harris, Margery Baker; words and music, Pierre Dudan, Joyce Jackson, Michael Trefford, Clarrie Ashton, Gerry Gryant, Laurence James, Jack Strachey; choreography, Brigitte Kelly, Nina Tarakanova. Features Bryan Coleman, Rosalind Knight, Peter Jones, Jack Farr, Lisa Lee, Donald Scott, Terence Theobald, Bernadette O'Farrell, Richard Hart, Wendy McLure, Helen Gillmer, Angela Van Breda. Staged by Peter Jones and Jack Farr. At Arts Theatre Club, London, May 1, '56; $1.45 top.

An experimental show for late night audiences follows the regular legit production at this private club, for a four-week engagement. It runs only about 75 minutes, but manages to include first rate material, neatly projected from the pocket-sized stage, and put over by talented artists.

Best of the 20 numbers are rendered by Peter Jones, Lisa Lee, Bryan Coleman, Jack Farr, ranging from comedy skits and slick sketches, while Terence Theobald, Helene Gillmer and Angela Van Breda lead the miniature ballet. Within its limited scope the offering is on the usual high level of this type of entertainment, and with the addition of the requisite extra players and sketches might possibly be extended profitably into a full length production. Clem.

In the review of the Equity Library Theatre revival of "Once in a Lifetime" in last week's issue, the name of actress Daphne Mayo was erroneously given as Susan Walker. Latter is the name of the character.

IS THIS STILL NEWS? 'PORGY' WALLOPS OSLO

Washington, May 8.

Norwegian Embassy here reports that "Porgy and Bess" has been smash hit from beginning to end in Oslo. The run in the Norwegian capital has been extended from seven to 15 performances, with some people traveling from all parts of Norway to attend the Gershwin-Heyward folk opera.

Opening night, Embassy officials said, the audience, headed by Crown Prince Olav and Princess Astrid, gave the show an ovation and Oslo music critics were equally impressed.

Inside Stuff Legit

Regarding a recent VARIETY story on the financial status of the flop Broadway musical, "The Vamp," co-producer Martin Cohen explains several of the expense items as follows: The $2,200 attributed to production assistants "represents salaries paid to assistant choreographers while rehearsing in New York. These assistants continued out-of-town with the show and received weekly salaries, plus out-of-town expenses as per contract with Robert Alton, our choreographer."

The $5,686 attributed to staff and producers' travel expense "represents the travel expenses of the choreographer, his assistants and several members of the cast coming from California. The remainder represents travel expenses by the producers during the pre-production period. Although the latter is recoupable by the producers, they have not been taken."

Regarding the office expense, which was listed as $2,800 on production costs and $350 weekly during the out-of-town and Broadway run, Cohen states, "It is usual for the producer of a musical to charge the production $350 per week for office expenses and this is clearly spelled out in the limited partnership agreement. There is still owing to the producers $4,550 for this item."

Concerning the weekly staff expense of $495 to $620 listed under salaries, he notes, "This item was grouped under salaries because it refers to additional compensation to employees for out-of-town expenses." Relating to the staff and producers' expenses of $925-$1,495 listed under other expenses, Cohen explains, "The staff portion refers to the per diems paid to authors, composer, lyricist, director, choreographer, etc., while out-of-town. The total producers' portion was $210 or $70 for each of the producers."

Cohen also states, "In addition to the office expenses mentioned earlier, $9,000 is still owed to the producers for pre-production expenses. Due to our effort to keep the show open, we incurred liabilities over and above the original capitalization. These became our personal liability.

Shuberts-Boston Post Hearings

view. In the presence of the critic, and of Post advertising manager Eugene McSweeney, the Shubert rep threatened and shouted, according to the testimony, and warned, "You are going to do something about Norton—or else. J. J. Shubert is not going to stand for this any longer. You are not going to get away with it."

The editor emphasizes the paper's confidence in Norton, pointing out that the critic is "held in high esteem generally," and that Richard Rodgers had stated, in a tv interview, that he preferred to open his shows in Boston because of the constructive criticism of Norton.

McManus' Blow-by-Blow

Summing up the four-cornered interview, McManus said he was told flatly that Norton was not going to get away with criticising plays in the Shubert theatres, and that the critic was not to be allowed to write a Sunday piece on any play which he had found reason to rap.

The editor reported Kavanagh as stating that he was taking his orders from Shubert, and that was that. It remained only to find out what was going to be done about curtailing Norton's writings, and especially to putting an end to his followup columns in the Sunday Post, the Shubert manager allegedly asserted.

An audit of the Shubert lineage in the Post, put into the record, showed that it had dropped from 26,899 lines in '55, to 108 lines as of April, 1956. The controversial interview took place Jan. 30.

Norton, expanding on McManus' account, traced the history of the Shubert protests against his reviews over the last 20 years, describing them as "frequent." He stated that they stepped up considerably in the last 10 years, after Kavanagh took over the Boston office.

On two occasions, prior to the last one, he said, the Shuberts had withdrawn advertising in retaliation for an unfavorable notice, but only for a single day. In the past, complaints were made to the business section of the daily. Critic described how he had, on occasion, "tempered with kindness" certain reviews, because he got the impression that Kavanagh might be axed by his bosses if notices were too tough.

Congressman O'Neill, in the longest witness stint of the day, called the Shubert action "a bold and flagrant attempt to violate one of the basic and fundamental rights guaranteed under our Constitution—the right of freedom of the press." He said he had become interested in the case as result of a series of editorials in the Post, printed only after the story had appeared in other publications.

The legislator made it clear that the question of whether Norton was right or wrong about the play was not the issue. He urged the committee to issue a report "censuring and condemning in the strongest possible terms the action of the Shubert theatrical interests."

Committee reaction was, at times almost violent. Chairman Frank Chelf (D., Ky.), described the situation as "horrible, unpardonable, and unconscionable." The Shubert business was referred to as a "dynasty." Reaction was generally favorable to the witnesses.

Both McManus and Norton confined their charges to Shubert's high-handed methods with critics, despite committee efforts to bring in such other issues as the company's ticket practices, charges of filth in Shubert plays, and even allegations of Communism in some of them.

Norton, staunchly defending the legit theatre, pointed out that the Shuberts are no longer producers, and do not control the content of shows that play their theatres. He added that they have often insisted on the removal of objectionable material, and firmly declared that the Communist line was virtually non-existent in legit today.

New York attorney John Saltonstall was the sole Shubert observer at the hearings. He had no comment, stating that he was present merely as a spectator.

Under Congressional practice, Shubert will be given an opportunity to reply to charges made against him. However, since he is currently reported to be in Europe, the date of his appearance is uncertain.

Expect Shubert to Duck

Opinion in legit managerial circles in New York is that Shubert will probably try to avoid appearing in person before a Congressional committee. It's figured the theatre owner, believed to be somewhere around 80 years old, may ask to be excused for reasons of health. In that case he would presumably be represented by his son, John Shubert, an exec of the firm.

Meanwhile, managers and pressagents of several shows that have played Boston since the Shubert row with the Post report that although Norton was returned to the press list as publicized, the Shuberts are still discriminating against the paper in the matter of advertising. Some show managements are going along in the policy of curtailing space in the Post, but others are taking the usual lineage in the paper.

In the latter case, the management pays the entire cost of the ad, since the Shuberts are refusing to pay the normal theatre share on more than minimum lineage. In addition, Kavanagh has reportedly attempted to persuade managements to withhold full space from the Post and, on failing in such attempts, has refused to cooperate in forwarding ad copy to the sheet.

Chi Spotty; 'Seed' $18,100 for 1st, 'Lovers' $21,300, 'Inherit' $27,400

Chicago, May 8.

Loop legit biz was erratic last week, with all but the newly-arrived "Bad Seed" in the announced final laps.

Harry Belafonte's "Sing, Man, Sing" lands at the Shubert next Monday (14) for two weeks. "Joy Ride" is due June 5 from the Coast, with the house still to be negotiated. "Silk Stockings" arrives July 25 at the Shubert for an expected stay.

Estimates for Last Week

Bad Seed, Harris (1st wk)) ($5; 1,000; $29,837) (Nancy Kelly). Topped $18,100 for first eight performances on subscription; opened April 30 to three affirmative notices (Kogan, Sun-Times; Raven, Tribune; Tucker, American) and one pan (Harris, News).

Inherit the Wind, Blackstone (13th wk) ($5; 1,450; $37,038) (Melvyn Douglas). Nearly $27,400; previous week, $28,600.

Lovers, Great Northern (3d wk) ($4.40; 1,400; $34,579). Nearly $21,300 on subscription; previous week, $17,300; left Saturday (5) to open in New York.

Teahouse of the August Moon, Erlanger (34th wk) ($5; 1,335; $35,495) (Eddie Bracken, Hugh Reilly). Just over $24,600; previous week, $25,300.

'Stockings' 47G, 'Waltz' $12,000, S.F.

San Francisco, May 8.

Second round of Civic Light Opera's "Silk Stockings" improved last week at the Curran. "Anniversary Waltz," in its 25th week at the Alcazar, held steady. "Anastasia" opened Friday (4) night at the Geary, got good notices.

Estimates for Last Week

Silk Stockings, Curran ($4.90, Fri-Sat $5.40; 1,752; $52,000) (2d wk) (Don Ameche). Drew $47,000; previous week, $45,000.

Anniversary Waltz, Alcazar ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (25th wk) (Marjorie Lord, Richard Eastham). Got $12,000; previous week, $12,200.

'ROSALINDA' OK $58,000, 'SHEEP' $11,500 IN L.A.

Los Angeles, May 8.

"Rosalinda," ushering in the L.A. Civic Light Opera season, gave local legit scene a rosy tinge last week, also reflected from pleasant biz rung up by "White Sheep of the Family" in its second (closing) stanza.

"Joy Ride" took a further dip into the red, with three weeks yet to go.

Estimates for Last Week

Rosalinda, Philharmonic (OP) (1st week) ($4.95; 2,670) ($62,000). Excellent $58,000.

White Sheep of the Family, Carthay Circle (C) (2d wk) ($3.30; 1,518) ($26,000). Nice $11,500; previous week, $9,500.

Joy Ride, Huntington Hartford (R) (15th wk) ($4.95; 1,032) ($32,000). Deep red again at $9,500; previous week, $10,500.

'Bus Stop' Fair $20,800 In New Haven-Hartford

New Haven, May 8.

Tour of "Bus Stop" and the 1955-56 season of the Shubert Theatre ended simultaneously here last week. The William Inge play drew about two-thirds capacity on a five-performance stand Wednesday-Saturday (2-5) at $4.50 top at the 1,657-seater for an okay gross of $15,500 out of a possible $23,000.

House is closed until late August.

Hartford $5,300 in 3

Hartford, May 8.

On the last legs of 25-city tour, "Bus Stop" garnered a poor $5,300 in three performances at the Bushnell Memorial here last Monday-Tuesday (30-1), with $2,000 of the receipts from a special matinee performance for insurance club members.

That wound up the season for the house.

'Teahouse' Wow $52,400 In Midwest Split-Week

Des Moines, May 8.

The Larry Parks edition of "Teahouse of the August Moon" grossed a smash $52,400 in eight performances last week, split evenly between the Orpheum, Davenport, and the KRNT Theatre here. The show took in nearly $20,800 at the former spot last Monday-Wednesday (30-2) and over $31,600 Thursday-Friday (3-5) on its local stand.

The comedy is splitting the current week between the Orpheum, Sioux City, and the Auditorium, Sioux Falls, S. D.

'Shangri' $28,500, In First 7, Hub

Boston, May 8.

Only one show was on the boards in the Hub last week. "Shangri-La," tuning up for Broadway, opened to fairish reviews. Hub critics found the musical drama lavish in production, but short otherwise. Tryout holds through this week and lays off the following frame.

Colonial opens May 22 with the Chicago company of "Teahouse of the August Moon" for three weeks and the Shubert has a preem of "New Faces of 1956" set for May 21. Last production of the season is "Pajama Game," at the Shubert in June.

Estimates for Last Week

Shangri-La, Shubert (MD) (1st wk) ($6.25-$4.95; 1,717; $50,000) (Lew Ayres, Martyn Green, Harold Lang). Opened last Tuesday (1) to one pan (Maloney, Traveler) and five fairish reviews (Hughes, Herald; Durgin, Globe; Doyle, American; Melvin, Monitor; Norton, Post); drew an inadequate $28,500 for its first seven performances; Lew Ayres withdrew as male lead, with Jack Cassidy stepping up from a smaller part to take over; Japanese film star Shirley Yamaguchi succeeds Susan Cabot tonight (Tues.) as featured femme lead.

'BOY' $18,300 IN CINCY; TOWN NO TWO-WEEKER

Cincinnati, May 8.

Second week of "Boy Friend" in the 2,000-seat Shubert last week grossed a losing $18,300. First week fetched a disappointing $25,000. Top was $4.95.

Results indicate again that Cincy is not a two-week stand for most musicals. Shuberts immediately cancelled the second half of the fortnight scheduling on "Damn Yankees," starring Bobby Clark, in the Shubert starting May 21, with a $5.65 top.

Slicing of "Damn Yankees' engagement, which will likely wind up the local road show season, was decided upon after "Boy Friend" test failure was evident and mail orders were being filled for the Clark starrer.

Stock Items

The Garrett County Playhouse, Oakland, Md., will begin its second season of stock July 3. Gene Yell, professor of drama at the U. of New Mexico, is producer-director at the operation, which will run for eight weeks this summer.

Harold J. Kennedy has leased the Grist Mill Playhouse, Andover, N. J., and will inaugurate a 10-week season June 23 with "An Evening With Beatrice Lillie." Kennedy operated the Montclair (N. J.) Summer Theatre last year.

Dolores del Rio will star in the Charles Mooney-Henry T. Weinstein strawhat package of "Anastasia."

'Yankees' So-So $25,000, Fourth Week in Cleve.

Cleveland, May 8.

"Damn Yankees," starring Bobby Clark, grossed a disappointing $25,000 at the Hanna Theatre last week, the fourth and final of the stand.

The musical is current at the Nixon Theatre, Pittsburgh.

Tallu $29,800 (6), May Fold, Philly; 'Teahouse' $45,623

Philadelphia, May 8.

Bad notices walloped "Ziegfeld Follies," in its opening stanza here last week and the revue may fold this weekend. The lavish tuner drew unanimous disapproval of three local critics (Murdock, Inquirer; Sensenderfer, Bulletin; Gaghan, News). Star Tallulah Bankhead suffered in the general pan, although lack of material was held responsible.

"Teahouse of the August Moon" continued its boxoffice romp at the Forrest, with tickets for most evening performances at a premium. Town's most active spring season in years winds up with "Shangri-La," which is due May 22 for three weeks.

Estimates for Last Week

Teahouse of the August Moon, Forrest (C) (2d wk) ($5.40; 1,760; $45,700) (Eli Wallach, Gene Blakeley). Shapes up as the year's biggest straight play hit. Could remain longer, but leaving at end of skedded four weeks; another new house record at $45,624; previous week, $44,676.

Ziegfeld Follies, Shubert (R) (2d wk) ($7.20; $6; 1,870; $60,000) (Tallulah Bankhead). Concensus is that it "glorifies the American girl" in the old lavish style and that the comedy material is from the same era; drew a moderate but costly $29,800 for first six performances, despite a big advance sale.

'PAJAMA' NEAT $43,200, SECOND WEEK IN DET.

Detroit, May 8.

Second week of the touring "Pajama Game" grossed a good $43,200 at the 2,050-seat Shubert. Previous stanza drew $35,300. Potential capacity is $53,000 at the $4 top.

Musical remains another fortnight.

B'way Previews Summer Biz Slide; 'Fella' $33,200 in 5, Lunts $21,700, 'Pipe' 40G, 'Cat' $28,600, 'Lark' 18½G

Broadway took a beating last week, with business nosediving for practically all shows. The dip clipped some of the sturdier entries and put less weighty items on a shaky footing. The capacity lineup included "Damn Yankees," "My Fair Lady," "No Time for Sergeants" and "Most Happy Fella."

There were two preems, "Most Happy Fella" and "Wake Up Darling." The latter shuttered last Saturday (5) with "Mr. Johnson," while "King and I" finished its three-week City Center run last Sunday (6). There are two openers this stanza, "Lovers" and "Kiss Me, Kate."

'Plain' Passable $36,200, Closing Tour in Pitt

Pittsburgh, May 8.

"Plain and Fancy" grossed a respectable $36,200 last week at 1,700-seat Nixon, at $4.95 top weeknights and $5.90 Friday and Saturday. Local stand marked end of tour for Amish musical.

"Damn Yankees" opened last night (Mon.) for a fortnight to an advance sale of more than $35,000. It's likely to wind up the local legit season.

'Can-Can' Fairish $34,400 Winds Up Balto Season

Baltimore, May 8.

"Can Can" wound up the current legit season at Ford's last week with a near-$34,400 take. With a $5.60 top for the weekend, the touring Cole Porter musical had the highest price scale in Ford's history.

The gross potential was $47,000.

Met's Threat to Quit Next Year Disregarded by Touring Singers

Atlanta, May 8.

During their engagement here last week on tour, members of the company of the Metropolitan Opera gave an unanimous vote of confidence to the American Guild of Musical Artists board and negotiating committee in its dealings with the management. The meeting was called by Met star John Brownlee, union president, to consider the quoted statement by the management in New York that it might cancel next season's opera if an agreement isn't reached with AGMA.

After a review of the union demands and the Met's proposed revisions of the expiring contract, the meeting heard an explanation of the offers and counter-offers made at the last negotiation meeting in Boston about two weeks ago. They then reiterated their approval of the negotiator's position and gave the vote of confidence.

The strong stand taken by the meeting was apparently something of a surprise. According to members of the company, it had been expected that the chorus singers and dancers would stand firm, but there had been a feeling that the principals might waver, since some of them who have individual contracts due for renewal in the fall are believed to have been under considerable pressure from their agents and, more subtly, from the management, to take a more "reasonable" attitude.

As Met officials have pointed out, the management is in a predicament on the AGMA demands because the existing contracts with the stagehands and musicians contain clauses permitting the union to reopen wage agreements if any other employee group is given a raise.

MARJORIE LAWRENCE TEACHES IN N.O.

New Orleans, May 8.

Marjorie Lawrence, Australian-born soprano, will make her home here and join the Newcomb College music school as a professor of voice July 1. In addition to teaching, the polio stricken opera star will coach.

In private life she's Mrs. Thomas King, wife of a physician.

71st BOSTON POPS

Inaugurate Post of Asst. Conductor with Dickson

Boston, May 8.

The 71st season of the Boston Pops will be inaugurated tonight, Tuesday (1), in Symphony Hall. It's Arthur Fiedler's 27th year as conductor. Seats will be removed and replaced by tables in the traditional Pops manner.

For the first time there's an assistant conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson, member of the violin section in the parent Boston Symphony.

Concerts will continue nightly through May. During June, concerts will be played nightly except Sunday. Season closes on June 30.

Pavlova Biog

"Pavlova 1881-1931," edited by A. H. Franks (Macmillan; $2.50), is issued to mark the 25th anniversary of the death of the Russian ballerina. Chapters have been submitted by various persons associated with the dancer's career: Sol Hurok, Michel Fokine, Arnold L. Haskell, Laurent Novikov and Ram Gopal, as well as members of Pavlova's chorus, and recollections of friends, together with pages from Pavlova's memoirs.

Result is a comprehensive, if somewhat adulatory, tome. Among the 32 photographs in the book, several are printed for the first time. Down.

Chi Opera at Dead-End?

Chicago, May 8.

Suit seeking to throw the Lyric Theatre into receivership was dismissed in Chicago Superior Court last week when the opera company's secretary-treasurer Lawrence V. Kelly brought in $9,650 in cash to settle creditor claims for that amount. Also tossed out was Kelly's $500,000 countersuit charging his erstwhile colleague Lyric president Carol Fox with "conspiring to destroy" the Lyric and to supplant it with the Opera Theatre Assn.

With the legal maneuvers checkmated for the time being, the situation reverts back to the status quo which has the Chicago opera outfit practically immobilized by the managerial wrangle that has pitted Miss Fox against Kelly, artistic director Nicola Rescigno and Mrs. Betty McAllister, prez of the Lyric Guild.

Miss Fox, obviously disappointed at the dismissal of the creditors suit, predicted that "this means there will be no opera in Chicago next season."

Hinting at the undertones in the Chicago feud is a wire signed Lawrence V. Kelly addressed to VARIETY and saying, in part, "Miss Fox is destroying her own work as well as the work of so many Chicagoans. Apparently with her it is rule or ruin."

Aix-en-Provence Goes International in 1956; Set Yankee 'Telephone'

Paris, May 8.

For the first time in its nine years of existence (first in 1948) the Music Festival of Aix-en-Provence will go heavily international with the U. S. coming in for a fair share.

Operas scheduled in addition to "Don Giovanni," "Barber of Seville" and "Platee" by J. P. Rameau will be "La Belle et la Bete" by A.-E.-M. Gretry and Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone," sung in English.

"Platee," a rarely given opera by Rameau, whose "Les Indes Galantes" was the big spectacular of the Paris Opera in 1954, will have choreography done by John Taras, American dance director, formerly of Ballet Theatre and currently with the Marquis de Cuevas.

Madeline Ignal and David Thaw, Americans, will sing the two-voiced "Telephone."

Other musical groups to participate are Sudwestfunks Orchestra of Baden-Baden, conducted by Hans Rosbaud, Quartetto Italiano, Choristers of Saint-Eustache, led by Emile Martin and Conservatory Orchestra of Paris under the baton of Jaques Pernoo.

Festival runs from July 7 through Aug. 2.

Hightower to Spain

Paris, May 8.

With close of Ballet Theatre season Rosella Hightower, American ballerina, and Kovacs and Rabovsky, Hungarian escapees, join Marquis de Cuevas Ballets for summer season, opening in Barcelona May 5.

For Miss Hightower it will be sort of Old Home Week, she having first joined Cuevas troupe when it was Ballet International at the Circle Theatre. For Kovacs and Rabovsky it's a first stand with company.

Classic & Modern Hoofin

St. Louis, May 8.

Because of the large number of productions requiring ballet dancing in addition to the modern stuff two dance directors will divide the chores during the forthcoming season of the Municipal Theatre Assn. at Forest Park playhouse.

Dan M. Eckley and Ted Cappy are the two.

'RIB OF EVE' PROVES FUNNY—BUT THIN

Agnes de Mille's "The Rib of Eve" amusingly described as a "morality play consisting of a series of parties and their aftermaths" debuted last week (25) at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. New addition to the Ballet Theatre repertory permits premiere danseuse Nora Kaye a wide-ranging display of her comedic flair and she is frequently very funny as she harks to the call of the stud at bay on numerous occasions with resultant quarrels and reconciliations with her spouse.

Unfortunately, apart from Miss Kaye's waggish interpretation, the texture of the ballet is such that interest isn't maintained throughout its running time. Dancers find themselves working in a vacuum, relieved only by Miss Kaye's superior comedy and terping. The support by James Mitchell as the husband and Barbara Lloyd as the best friend are good. Oliver Smith's sets are utilitarian as well as decorative. Costumes by Irene Sharaff lend little to the festivities. Morton Gould, who composed and conducted the music has written a score that has a lot of pop quality at times, but bulk of it requires concentration and thus distracts from the ballet.

The hit of the presentation of Wednesday (25) was the "Pas de Deux" from "Swan Lake" with Rosella Hightower and Erik Bruhn (latter on leave from the Royal Danish Ballet) displayed an extreme in virtuosity. Bruhn is as powerful a dancer as the top males in the U.S. His leaps are no less than astounding, and his vigor and imagination incite bravos. Miss Hightower is a similarly imaginative terper. She shows strength as well as delicacy in executing difficult and imaginative routines.

Completing the program are the standard "Les Sylphides" and "Graduation Ball" both of which seemed a little ragged around the edges.

The Ballet Theatre is generally regarded as one willing to experiment and will end itself to new ideas and dances. The names that it has gathered for "The Rib of Eve" are impressive talents in many fields. The sum total seems a bid for pop attention, which the ballet gets only through the top-notch terpability of Miss Kaye. Jose.

Danish Ballet Looks Sure For Met Sellout

Royal Danish Ballet, which is preeming in the U. S. at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y., Sept. 16, is due for a sure boxoffice sellout. Almost six months before the first performance, the advance sale has already accounted for over $70,000. The Metopera has been scaled for a $200,000 gross for the ballet company's 17 performances. The advance is uniformly spread over the various performances.

The Royal Ballet company, now in its third century and being held over, is making its first appearance outside of Europe with the Met stand. The troupe will play in the U. S. under the Columbia Artists Management wing.

Rozsa Concerto Disked

Dallas, May 8.

The Dallas Symphony Orchestra recently recorded the Miklos Rozsa violin concerto, with Jascha Heifetz as soloist, and Walter Hendl conducting, for RCA-Victor.

Work had its premiere here Jan. 15 with Heifetz, who commissioned it, and Hendl conducting.

AUSTIN SYMPH SETS NAMES

Austin, Tex., May 8.

Five performers have been announced for the 1956-57 season of the Austin Symphony Orchestra. Guest list will include Jose Vasquez, conductor of the Orquestra Sinfonica de la Universidad of Mexico; and Ezra Rachlin, regular conductor of the Austin Symphony, who will appear in the dual role of pianist and conductor. Also set are Eleanor Steber, soprano; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; and Berl Senofsky, violinist.

COMING OR GOING?

Red faces which must be saved and hot tempers which must be cooled characterize collective bargaining, a peculiarly American form of democracy which assumes equality at the table between management and labor, and has a Federal law to prove it. So it need occasion little surprise that the Metropolitan Opera and the American Guild of Musical Artists are having tough going coming to terms. Nothing is more to be expected.

But that they will come to terms is equally to be expected. To close down the Metropolitan is fanciful and to threaten to do so unconvincing. Indeed the threat of a business to go out of business has long since lost any force with unions. And understandably. It is kid stuff.

Is the Met going out of business because of its singers' wage demands just as the Met is part of the grandiose scheme to rehabilitate Lincoln Square into a general arts centre? Is the Met advertising itself as on the ragged edge of easy collapse, or is it advertising itself as a great institution with a great future? Can Rudolf Bing work both sides of the street? It is to be doubted. Land.

Hartford Hears New Ops

Hartford, May 8.

Two new operas will be preemed on a double bill to be presented next Wednesday-Friday (9-12) by the Hartt Opera-Theatre Guild at the Burns School auditorium here. The entries are "Miranda and the Dark Young Man," with music by Elie Siegmeister and libretto by Edward Eager, and "Game of Cards," with music by Arnold Franchetti and libretto by the late Max Weber.

Elemer Nagy, head of Hartt's drama department, will stage both offerings, while Moshe Paranov will function as musical director.

Gotham Reviews Hypoing Subscription Sales For D.C.'s National Symph

Washington, May 8.

The favorable reviews of New York music critics have added an additional hypo to the sensational season ticket sale of Washington's National Symphony Orchestra. Orch played a New York concert recently to high praise there, which was reprinted in the D. C. papers.

In the first two weeks of the drive to sell season ducats for the National Symphony's 1956-57 season here, no fewer than 1,621 sets of tickets were purchased. In the comparable period, a year earlier, the sale came to a little over 200 season books.

Plug by the New York reviewers has done considerable to convince Washingtonians that their orchestra is better than they believed. In addition, however, an entirely new booking policy is being followed. The 15 concerts each, in the "even" and "odd" series, include two by the Philadelphia Orchestra, one by the Boston Symphony and one evening by the Royal Danish Ballet. Orch is aiming for sale of 5,000 season subscriptions this year, nearly 1,000 more than were sold last year.

Mrs. Post's Grant For Juves at Capitol Symph

Washington, May 8.

Visiting juves, who annually swarm over the capital in what has become traditional hegiras to the nation's shrines, have found something new added to the standard tour. The first 1,200 of an estimated 50,000 high school students rubbed shoulders with scores of ambassadors, government officials, and socialites at the opening concert in the five week "Music for Young America" series of National Symphony.

Series was made possible through the grant of General Foods topper Mrs. Merriweather Post (divorced wife of former U. S. Ambassador to Russia Joseph ("Mission to Moscow") Davies. It was designed to introduce teenagers from around the country to long-hair music. The brainchild of National Symphony maestro Dr. Howard Mitchell, it has already caught on with the young fry, and bids to take its place with the Washington Monument and the White House as a major tourist lure.

Launching of the angelled series came at a time when National Symphony ticket drive was swinging into high gear with a brisk sale, bringing into sight the goal of 5,000 subscriptions, 1,000 more than was sold for last season's series.

Five-Day Mozart Fest Set for Stratford (Conn.); Stravinsky Kudos in '57

Mozart Festival to be held at the Stratford (Conn.) Shakespeare Theatre for five days May 30-June 3 (as announced some weeks ago in VARIETY) will present Mozart as a composer of opera, choral music, incidental music, dances and chamber music.

Major events will be the opera, "The Abduction From The Seraglio," in a new English version by Chester Kallman, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf with the Symphony of the Air; a serenade of music and dance, which will feature the world premiere of a new ballet, "A Musical Joke," by George Balanchine, and the revival of "Caracole," both danced by the New York City Ballet; chamber music performed by the WQXR String Quartet, and the Coronation Mass and Masonic Music, conducted by Leinsdorf with the Symphony of the Air, soloists and the Stratford Choir. There'll also be a panel discussion on "What Mozart Means to Modern Music," sponsored jointly by the Festival and Yale U.

Fest is being co-sponsored by the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre & Academy, Joseph Verner Reed prez, and Ballet Society, directed by George Balanchine and Lincoln Kirstein.

It's planned to devote the 1957 fest to Igor Stravinsky, honoring his 50th anni in the theatre. Later fests will be dedicated to Rossini, Handel, Gluck, etc.

Rating the Disks

Brahms: A German Requiem (Decca). Brahms' tragic choral masterpiece in a massive, moving performance by the Berlin Philharmonic under Fritz Lehmann with Maria Stader and Otto Wiener as soloists and the St. Hedwig's Cathedral and Berlin Motet choirs. Difficult ensemble passages recorded with excellent quality.

Mozart: Sonatas Nos. 10 & 15 (Victor). Jascha Heifetz in brilliantly toned performances of two typically melodious Mozart pieces. Brooks Smith supplies sure piano accompaniment. Technical quality superb.

Gesualdo: Madrigals (Sunset). Off-the-beaten track repertory by the 16th Century Italian, Carlo Gesualdo, whose madrigals are skillfully performed by The Singers of Ferrara, a Coast choral group, under Robert Craft's direction. Aldous Huxley supplies informative notes.

Mozart: Violin Concertos Nos. 4 & 5 (Victory). Two more popular compositions from the inexhaustibly charming Mozart catalog. Yehudi Menuhin gives richly textured readings with the Philharmonia Orchestra under John Pritchard's baton. Wide-range reproduction with flawless playing surface.

Vitya Vronsky & Victor Babin (Decca). Expert duo pianists, Vronsky & Babin, in a pleasantly varied program of pieces by Chopin, Schubert, Liszt and Milhaud. Latter's "Scaramouche" suite is a humorous, fanciful modern work cleverly projected in this disk.

Beniamino Gigli (Victor). An historical item for future discographers, this Gigli recital was recorded at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., last year at the start of the famous tenor's "farewell" tour. Audience applause a minor intrusive factor in a recording that gives a generous sampling of the expressive Gigli style. Herm.

Won't Curb Slur on Cure

Constitutional protection of a free press and the public interest in the disease of cancer are of paramount importance, the State Supreme Court of Massachusetts ruled Thursday (3) in Boston refusing to enjoin publication of a book on an alleged new cancer cure. The book entitled "Krebiozen, The Great Cancer Mystery," is critical of the use of a drug called krebiozen which allegedly cures cancer. "The establishment of the truth about krebiozen as soon as possible is critically important to the public," the high court said. "If it is a cure, it will be one of the greatest discoveries of modern times. If its of value in some cases only, the limitations are important, and if it is of no value, lives may be saved and suffering avoided by the establishment of the facts," the court said.

Plaintiffs in the case were Krebiozen Research Foundation of Illinois.

Judy Garland's Biog

Simon & Schuster will publish the Judy Garland story which editor Jack Goodman is calling "Over The Rainbow."

Life and Ladies' Home Journal both interested in advance serialization.

Jerry Wald's Book

Columbia Pictures' executive producer Jerry Wald started telling Simon & Schuster's chief editor Jack Goodman some of the shenanigans attendant to being father of Robby, 9, and Andrew, 12, and their assorted friends, including 13-year-old Peter McCoy, son of the late Horace McCoy ("And They Shoot Horses")—and found himself trapped into writing a book.

The Hollywood and BevHills backgrounds are merely incidental to "The Happy Confusion" (book's title) which sees the kids unconcerned about Wald's shooting schedules, the glamorous parties and personalities, and only concerned with fishing and clowning with the Wald boys' assorted friends. "The Wald Menagerie" is a familiar identification for their home—eight parakeets, two parrots, two dogs, two rabbits ("I saved my life by making sure both were males; the kids still don't know how I tricked them"), and other pets. Book's accent is on the manner in which juveniles demand—and get—attention from their parents, regardless of backgrounds which might otherwise distract.

S-H's Cincy Enquirer

Management control fight for the Cincinnati Enquirer ended May 3 when Scripps-Howard obtained a majority stock interest in the Sunday and a.m. newspaper.

Announcement was made following a meeting in New York between S-H biggies and Roger H. Ferger, Enquirer publisher. It came a week after Scripps paid $4,059,000 for convertible debentures representing more than one-third interest in the Cincy daily. Purchase was from Halsey Stuart & Co., Chicago investment house.

Back in Cincinnati, Ferger told Enquirer employees the paper would continue independently and without policy change. He said he had reason to believe that his 10-year contract as publisher would continue, and that no personnel changes would be made.

S-H complete owner of the Cincinnati Post, founded 75 years ago and second oldest link in its chain.

More Show Biz Reading

"The Golden Ham" (S&S; $3.95) by Jim Bishop is indeed a "candid" biography of Jackie Gleason, one which has had its repercussions along Madison and with "the Toots Shor set" when first serialized in Collier's. Never dull, highly informative, a clinical insight on a popular buffoon, it is also a tribute the CBS star's gallantry in permitting himself to be held up in so strong a searching spotlight.

Daniel Blum's No. 7 "Screen World" (Greenberg; $5) continues as a complete record of the preceding with casts, credits and effective stills. Always a good research book, the celluloid counterpart of the Burns Mantle (and successors) series in legit.

Joe Alex Morris' "What A Year!" (Harper; $3.95) chronicles 1929, the capping climax of the Jazz Age, and an idea of the author's skillful telescopings may be gathered from his credits to some 80 sources, among them VARIETY, Joe Laurie's "Vaudeville" and "Show Biz" by Abel Green and Laurie. Morris didn't miss a thing. As he sums it up all this came before Marilyn Monroe, Bloody Marys, dacron, Joe McCarthy, Grandma Moses, automation, Mary Martin, drive-ins, bobbysoxers, toreador pants, "$64,000 Question," Cinerama, UN, electric razors, the Duke and Duchess, the A-bomb, gobbleydygook, sulfa drugs, Nashua, Joe DiMaggio, the 4-minute mile, Gina, Marilyn, radar, color tv, Sinatra, electric typewriters, withholding tax, WPA, jive, brainwashing, the Iron Curtain, jets, scrabble, kleenex, chlorophyll, eggheads, etc. Abel.

Cerf's Bestsellers and Junket

Random House prexy Bennett Cerf points to six of his books which will be in Hollywood production this fall: James A. Michener's "Sayonara" (William Goetz via WB); William (Life staffer) Brinkley's "Don't Go Near the Water," a July-Book-of-the-Month selection incidentally, via Metro; "Band of Angels," by Robert Penn Warren, for Warners; Irwin Shaw's "Lucy Crown," current bestseller, for Hecht-Lancaster; John O'Hara's "10 North Frederick" (20th-Fox); and Art Cohn's Joe E. Lewis biog, "The Joker Is Wild" (Paramount).

Cerf, who flew to Europe yesterday (Tues.), will contact authors as varied as Ambassador Clare Booth Luce, Somerset Maugham, Andre Malraux and Irwin Shaw. Latter resides in Paris. Publisher and Phyllis (Mrs.) Cerf will also meet Fleur Cowles and her new husband in London where the "What's My Line?" panelist will do two guesters on the British counterpart of the show (for which his fee is 30 guineas, about $95) and where also Cerf will address the British Publishers Assn.

FBI 'Official'

Random House will publish Don (ex-AP Pulitzer prizer) Whitehead's "Official History of the FBI" which, while as yet unannounced, is commanding unusual syndication interest. FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover will do the foreword.

Whitehead is shifting over to the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

CBS Staffers' Books

Couple of books by CBS staffers are making their way to the bookshelves. One is Eric Sevareid's "Small Sounds in the Night," based on his nightly news analyses out of Washington and published by Alfred A. Knopf. It'll be out in June, but first introduced at the convention of the American Booksellers Assn. in Washington May 29.

Also getting a timed exposure is "Sports Car Rallies, Trials and Gymkhanas," by David Hebb and Arthur Peck, with publication by Channel Press pegged to the International Auto Show last week at the Coliseum. Hebb is director of CBS Radio's Sunday dramatic show, "Indictment," while Peck is supervisor of network operations for the same web. Both, of course, are sports car enthusiasts.

Holt's Lucky Recoup

Not generally known that upon six months' notice most reprint deals can be stopped after the usual original three-year deals renew automatically. Holt & Co. v.p. William E. Buckley had that in mind when he retrieved Audie Murphy's "To Hell and Back" from PermaBooks, just as it was about to be absorbed into Pocket Books.

By recapturing Murphy's book, for which Perma had paid Holt $5,000 (it sold $10,000 worth of books in the paperback edition), Buckley was then able to resell it to Pocket Books for a fresh guarantee of $7,500. This, too, has since been exceeded in book earnings, thanks to the Universal filmization.

'Gray' Beaucoup Black

By getting 630,000 35c copies of Sloan Wilson's "The Man In the Gray Flannel Suit" published in six working days, Pocket Books says it has established a record. It reports 15 days is average for printing a load that size. Rush was caused by heavy demand on the book, according to firm.

The $3.50 hardcover is in its 41st week on bestseller lists.

mately $175,000 on a total $175,000 investment. The former, which had a 44-performance Broadway run, is figured to have dropped its entire $100,000 capitalization, while the latter, starring Barry Nelson, Barbara Britton and Russell Nype, wrapped up after five performances at an estimated loss of its entire $75,000 stake.

"Fancy" moved to the road last March for a limited tour following its 460-performance Broadway run. The musical folded in Pittsburgh at an approximate $35,000 profit on a $250,000 investment. That's figured on a $24,822 net as of a March 31 accounting, plus estimated profit for the ensuing five weeks. Additional revenue is expected from a picture sale.

The Richard Kollmar-James W. Gardner production had actually netted $110,629 on its New York run, but dropped $99,415 of that amount on the national company, which folded in Chicago last February. The original touring edition costarred Alexis Smith and Craig Stevens and was mounted for $136,343 from the Broadway company's funds. The tuner, incidentally, made $6,369 on the first four weeks of its post-Broadway hop. The backers have thus far been paid back $200,000 on their investment.

As of a March 31 audit, "Bus" had netted $333,670 on Broadway and road. The Robert Whitehead-Roger L. Stevens production was financed at $60,000. The original New York company ended a 478-performance run several weeks ago, while the touring facsimile shuttered last week in New Haven. The road edition had been out since last August.

It's figured that the "Bus" status hasn't altered much since the March 31 accounting. The take includes coin received from 20th-Fox on the film studio's purchase of the William Inge play for a down payment of $75,000, plus weekly payments on profit stanzas up to a $250,000 ceiling. The profit divvy, thus far, totals $300,000, split 50-50 between the backers and the management.

"Tea," which costarred Maria Riva and Alan Baxter, had been touring since last October. It was financed as half of a two-play parlay. The other entry, a fast fold, was a touring edition of "Lunatics and Lovers." The joint capitalization was $40,000.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs, May 8.

Back in the days when Sime was telling the world that the killers of burlesque were the producers of the cheapest dirt, coochers, strippers and others of no talent, VARIETY was also taking pot shots at vanity publishers. One of them was named Carlo Flumiani.

His procedure seemed to be foolproof. He owned a literary agency called Revel. Under this billing he solicited manuscripts from authors and then charged them a fee for "revising and marketing" them. He never touched them. He simply shelved the scripts for 30 days and then would report to the authors that he had got some nibbles from publishers. These were called Prometheus, Pegasus, Psychology and Minerva.

After each of these houses ultimately rejected the scripts, a fifth house, called Fortuny Inc., announced it was ready to publish if the author were willing to pay a part of the cost. The president of this company was C. M. Ferra. This man of iron was actually Carlo Flumiana, owner of the other four paper organizations as well. His editor was a highschool girl who received $13.50 a week. She supposedly read as many as 25 manuscripts a day and made a publication offer for anything she could read. Fortuny published 117 books. Flim-flamming Flumiani's earnings were $93,791. The total of royalties his 117 authors were able to bank was $77.84. One of the books was called "How To Make Money As An Author."

In fact, Flumiani was doing so well that at the height of his larcenies he hired 40 highschool girls, paying them about the same he did his first readers. The law finally caught up with him, and he was sentenced to 18 months in prison for fraud.

Judge Simon Rifkind pointed out that Flumiani had not been found guilty for being a subsidy author, but for making false promises and for giving authors a dishonest return on their investments.

On this shifting sand Edward Uhlan decided to build a publishing biz with the hope that the word "subsidy" would gain as much respectability in the field of print as it enjoys in farming, ship-building and airplane manufacturing.

Trade publishers were turning out 11,000 titles a year and the number that paid off were disappointingly small. The publishers who would gamble on a book could be counted on one hand. Darryl Zanuck gambled on his own. Uhlan says it was nothing but a gold-titled cover with blank pages, but that isn't the way I heard it. Still, he does give a list of big authors who financed their own starts.

Calling All Semantics

Uhlan has entitled his book "The Rogue of Publishers Row." He lists it as an Exposition Banner Book. Having read his confessions, the word "Banner" indicates that it is not a vanity operation but is published on its merits for the trade. How he could make that distinction, since he is the publisher as well as the author, I leave to the professors of semantics.

In the main it is well written, full of humor and odd revelations He began his career by studying most carefully what landed the vanity trailblazers in jail, and then avoided following their steps. His first books dealt with poetry and since nobody, barring possibly Eddie Guest and Robert W. Service and J. P. McEvoy, has made poetry pay, Uhlan felt he was doing the poets of America a favor by including them in an anthology and charging them $3 a volume.

He had an active list of 135,000 persons who wrote verse, and they had no outlet unless they went to a subsidy publisher.

That he has always possessed a certain candor and understanding of what he was dealing in, he explains very well. "It is important that a publisher should be psychologically oriented if he is not to hurt well-meaning authors. He must learn that vice taints him as much as it taints the author—more, perhaps, for while the poor wretch of a writer may be writing under psychopathic compulsion, the publisher is furthering his ends for only one purpose—to make money."

Trade publishers were equally in the word racket to make money and as the years went on most of them felt they had to add a certain amount of pornography to balance their books. By now this has brought them down to Uhlan's level and in some cases much lower. Some of the oldest houses appear as if they are competing with Minsky, and in a much worse way, because while the youth could be warned to stay away from burlesque houses no parent has thought to date of telling his children to stay out of libraries, where there is more dirt under the billing of literature than in a modern burlesque house.

He Punched His Way Up From Polio

In four years Uhlan published 800 books, in all categories, and maintains that he is now the sixth largest publishing house in the United States. He started with $15 in his pocket, and a lot of enthusiasm he could not put a price on. For a kid who was born in Hell's Kitchen, was stricken with polio at the age of four, and who worked his way up by sheer grit among Dead End kids, Uhlan deserves a lot of praise. Handicapped by his emaciated legs, he would fight kids in a sitting position or in a narrow hallway where he could lean against a wall. He won five weight-divisions in wrestling, in less than two minutes a match, and though all that may be well behind him now as he rides the waves in his cabin cruiser, it certainly had a lot to do with his getting to where he is today.

Henry Harrison, the poet turned publisher, was Uhlan's predecessor in the field of vanity poetry publishing. After 18 years of it, Harrison decided to sell his business, as it was taking too much time from racetracks. Harrison wanted to close the deal fast because the horses were running at Tropical Park and he wanted to get to Florida before the season closed.

Not being able to recoup his losses as Joe E. Lewis has, Harrison found himself forced to return to a more familiar field, and is now poetry manager of Uhlan's less speculative enterprise. Uhlan says Harrison is an excellent book designer and between them they have manufactured books on a quality with the best.

This hardly could have been said of subsidy publishing in the era of Flim-Flamming Flumiani.

Where the author pays for the first edition's printing he gets a higher royalty from Uhlan, maybe 20%, but after that he gets less, because the book is now selling on its own in a competing trade market. This is just the opposite of the general trade practice where royalties start at 10%, and may work up to 15%.

As an example of what he won't do, Uhlan was offered $30,000 and a holiday in South America to publish a biography of Evita Peron, but he considered it an evil book and turned it down.

On the other hand, Uhlan was presented one day with a script on gardening. The author turned out to be Ruth Stout, a sister of Rex Stout, president of the Author's League. She confessed that the book had been turned down by practically every publisher and as Uhlan was not anxious to tangle with the sister of the watchdog of commercial authors, he proceeded most carefully.

What Has Stout To Say To This?

The manuscript dealt with mulching. He figured the only ones who would really be against that would be the manufacturers of synthetic fertilizers and possibly the authors of some evil-smelling bestsellers.

He suggested they call the book "How to Have a Green Thumb Without An Aching Back." She liked it. They agreed on terms, and as of this year they report the book as selling well

Though the publishing world has more top secrets than the Pentagon, they publish no trade figures. So one can't judge the industry's financial condition as a whole, but Uhlan says the net return on invested capital in book publishing is about 3%. Loan associations pay more than this, with the Government guaranteeing the investor against loss up to $10,000—something no administration has thought of doing yet for either publishers or authors.

In his youth, he was a top Olympic longdistance runner on the Canadian team, winning several titles. Hughes retired two years ago because of ill health and had wintered in Florida. He had served in both World Wars as an officer.

His wife, the former Peg Willin Humphrey, was associated with Billy Rose and the late showman Lincoln Dickey in several ventures, including the "Aquacade," and was an official of the N.Y. World's Fair of 1939-40. In addition to his wife, were playing for GI audiences in the U.S. and West Indies.

He is survived by his parents and two brothers, Ephraim, who is with WPIX, N.Y., and Paul, who is connected with a travel bureau.

SAMUEL F. ROTH

Samuel F. Roth, 55, veteran film exhibitor and president of Roth Enterprises Inc., died of cancer in suburban Washington May 2. His company had 17 theatres in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, in addition to Washington.

A native New Yorker, Roth began as an usher and later worked in the distribution end of the business. With his brothers Charles and Harry, still partners in the firm, Roth acquired his first house in Harrisonburg, Va., in 1934. He controlled seven theatres there. About 1940, he moved his headquarters to Washington and began to add to his theatre holdings.

In addition to his brothers, he is survived by his wife and two daughters.

JOHN C. OLSEN

John C. Olsen, 37, tv and vaude performer and son of Ole Olsen (& Chic Johnson) was found dead of an overdose of sleeping pills at his home in Flushing, N. Y., May 5. He was last seen alive by his wife April 13, when he was readying to go to Los Angeles on a date with the Olsen & Johnson unit. Mrs. Olsen left the apartment temporarily to live with her sister. When he failed to appear in the unit, Mrs. Olsen notified the police. Police examiner stated he'd been dead about five days. Body was found when Mrs. Olsen returned to the apartment to pick up some material.

with the bobbysoxers on his personal appearances, failed to click in his Las Vegas date at the New Frontier. The more sophisticated gambling clientele didn't dig his frenzied antics and Presley was replaced Monday (7) on the bill by Roberta Sherwood, the Decca songstress.

But despite the Vegas flop, Presley is now mopping up on varied fronts—even as a music publisher. His two latest sides are being published through the Elvis Presley Music Co., a subsid of Hill & Range, in which he's partnered.

Presley's click has made a hero out of Steve Sholes at Victor. Sholes, Victor's country and western chief, originally heard Presley on the indie Sun Records and bought up his contract for $35,000. That investment has paid off many times over since Presley's move to Victor about six months ago. Tom Parker, former manager of Eddy Arnold, now manages Presley.

10 Cops for Elvis Part Of That 15G Overhead

Minneapolis, May 8.

Local promoter T. B. Skarning's contract with Elvis Presley for the latter's matinee and evening St. Paul and Minneapolis appearances next Sunday (13) requires providing 10 policemen as bodygaurds to protect the singer from his juve admirers. It's Presley's first p.a. here.

Skarning says Presley's guarantee is so stiff that the two performances must gross a total of $15,000 for the promoter to break even.

With British Teenage Set

London, May 8.

British teenagers are beginning to take note of "new singing sensation" Elvis Presley.

Even though his "Heartbreak Hotel" record has only just been issued here, there is already a mounting interest and the correspondence columns of the musical press are being inundated with letters as to whether Presley is better than Johnnie Ray or vice versa.

Foster's Agency, Presley's British reps, are already in touch with him regarding the possibility of personal dates in Britain next year.

their efforts to the production of tv programs, or go out of business altogether. As a result, the motion picture industry as such could very easily become no more than a producting adjunct to the television industry."

Holt's statement appears particularly apropos at this time, in the light of the bid for Warner Bros. control made by Lou Chesler and Canadian associates. Despite the denials, insiders insist that Chesler was on the verge of closing with the Warners but Harry Warner, president of the company, feared liquidation of the family property and as a result said no. (Details in another story.)

The Arnold Bernard man professes no knowledge about any takeover, instead states that it is "as yet" only a threat. He adds: "It may never, and for the sake of the motion picture industry, we hope it never will take place. Perhaps if the managements of these film producers can demonstrate their abilities to earn a reasonable return on their vast assests, investors as well as financiers might be more reluctant to liquidate these companies. After all, if these companies could show substantial gains in their earnings over a period of time, they would be able to pay out larger dividends and the market price of their common stock would, in turn, appreciate significantly. Under such circumstances, shareholders would not be likely which Todd had planned to make in Yogoslavia a year ago.

At a press confab, Todd and Gregory Alexandrov, Soviet producer-director, disclosed that the former would cover the dollar costs of the film (which might include American stars) while the Russians would put up the rubles. Quintet would be made over a period of five years.

Films would use the Todd-AO process. First pic would survey the whole range of presentday Soviet entertainment. Todd said he was aware of the responsibility involved in becoming the first American to coproduce with the Russians and commented: "I am not so optimistic as to think that many years of mutual suspicion and distrust will be completely erased by one coproduction. But I think we must start some place and I sincerely hope this is the start."

Contract between Todd and the Soviet Ministry of Culture hasn't been signed yet. Todd said that, on returning to the U. S., he'd confirm the arrangement via cable. He also said he would handle distribution in the western there, with the Soviets releasing the pictures where they have facilities, i.e. behind the Iron Curtain.

Main St. Merchants' Extreme Steps Just to Keep Film Houses Alive

Minneapolis, May 15.

Small-town exhibitors coming in for North Central Allied's annual convention here this week brought reports of merchants' increasing reluctance to permit their only film house to pass out of existence.

The reason, it was pointed out, is because (1) business generally has suffered and (2) juvenile delinquency has increased in those small towns where the lone picture parlor has shuttered.

Growing recognition that a film theatre is a social, cultural and commercial asset is growing in the small towns, the exhibitors say. This has resulted in businessmen grouping together to enlist support for tottering theatres.

At Hinckley, Minn., the Booster club, comprising merchants and professional people, has pledged $2 per member per month to help cover improvement costs and deficits at the one privately owned showhouse which was on the verge of closing. Commercial club of St. Charles is conducting an intensive advertising campaign in an effort to induce more frequent film going and Seymour, Minn., merchants are helping to underwrite Saturday shows at the town's one theatre.

Belgrade, Minn., commercial club actually built a model theatre as a civic project and then leased it to a private operator and club now is raising funds to install a new air conditioning plant in the showhouse.

Baa-Baa Talk

There's a new "gray flannel phrase" kicking around the networks when the program factotums go into the conference bit these days to discuss prospective entries.

When the boys can't make up their minds and are fearful of venturing a "no" for fear that they might be running away from something good, invariably some one'll pop up with:

"Let's shepherd it around."

Lunts in TV Bow With 'Sebastians' As May, '57 Spec

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne make their tv bow in May of 1957 when their current legit click, "Great Sebastians," will be adapted to 90-minute spec form as a "Producers' Showcase" entry on the '56-'57 sked. NBC put up all the coin for the Broadway production in return for getting the tv spec rights, and this will be the first such stage-to-tv transference under the "one big show biz" plan which now finds the tv networks more and more entrenching themselves in film and stage areas.

Somewhat similar deal was worked out by CBS, which put up all the coin ($360,000) for "My Fair Lady," giving the network a 40% ownership stake in the smash musical and a two-three-years-hence spec vehicle.

"Sebastians" closes its Broadway run next month, lays off for the summer and takes to the road in the fall. Upon completion of the road tour next May it becomes a "Showcase" spec. The Lunts plan to do it in England the following year.

% of Coin from Chaplin Shorts on TV Would Go To Anti-Commie Orgs

A New York producer and distributor of vintage films is offering a percentage of his television gross on a series of Charlie Chaplin shorts to an anti-Communist organization, probably Radio Free Europe. Idea is to gain acceptance among American television stations and sponsors for Chaplin's films while at the same time using those pix to fight Chaplin's pro-Communist propaganda.

Morris Kleinerman, vet motion picture producer and latterly a lab owner, is readying a donation of 5% of the world gross from his group of 52 Chaplin shorts to Radio Free Europe. Through Cinema-Vue Corp., his affiliate which is handling television distribution of the shorts, he is also planning to tie stations in with the plan by having them make live announcements in connection with the showings of the Chaplin films asking viewers who have enjoyed Chaplin the artist to fight politico Chaplin by adding their contributions to the anti-Communist organization.

The 52 shorts, comprising 17 two-reelers and 16 one-reelers or-

SCHNOZ 'SNEAKING' LAWFORD AT COPA?

Jimmy Durante, who opens tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Copacabana, N. Y., has been, in his own way, responsible for launching the nitery career of some top performers. Helen Traubel is among those that have gotten their start in the pop field by the Schnozzola.

Durante is apparently continuing to launch more stars. He told the Copa management that he'll bring in a guest-performer to work with him during the bulk of his engagement—a topline Hollywood personality. Somebody, Schnozzola says, "like Peter Lawford," but he won't reveal who it is.

NO BIZ (METHODS) LIKE OPERATICS

Hirings and firings, charges and counter-charges, pitched battles between embittered egotists characterize the world of concert and opera. To recall only a few recent instances is to make the point:

New York City Center Opera furored and Leinsdorf replaced Rosenstock.

Chicago's Lyric Opera Theatre after an encouraging start has become clique-riddled, may expire in a furiously emotional danse macabre.

Philadelphia's Grand Opera was formed by a merger of two companies on a basis of which it secured $25,000 of municipal subsidy. The two originally competitive impresari have since broken out in alley-cat dischording.

Cleveland's suffered the Szell-Ringwall imbroglio.

Buffalo is "me, too" with the current Krips-Deakin feud within the Symphony there.

As for the Metropolitan Opera, the Rudolf Bing regime has been no exception to predecessor regimes in backstage and offstage

RCA Will Back Merman's 'Happy'

For the first time since putting up about half the coin for Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Me and Juliet," RCA is bankrolling a legit musical, putting up the entire $300,000 financing for the Jo Mielziner production of the new Ethel Merman legit musical, "Happy Hunting," slated for Broadway next winter, with book by Lindsay & Crouse. Songs are by newcomers Matt Duby and Harold Karr. Abe Burrows will direct.

As with CBS' $360,000 bankrolling of "My Fair Lady," RCA will get 40% of the show for 100% of the money. Naturally the record album, television and other rights go to the bankroller.

In the straight play field, RCA supplied the entire backing for the current "Great Sebastians," the Alfred Lunt-Lynn Fontanne starrer authored and produced by Lindsay and Crouse. In that case, the company has an option on the television rights, but the recording rights are figured a minor factor.

20th TV-Leases 52 Pix to NTA In $2,300,000 Deal

20th-Fox yesterday (Tues.) joined the rapidly growing list of major studios unloading their pre-'48 features to television, consummating a $2,300,000 deal for 10-year lease of 52 top films to National Telefilm Associates. For NTA, a fast-rising telefilm distribution house, it was the second multi-million-dollar deal in the past five days, since it had shelled out close to $4,000,000 last Friday (11) in the purchase of UM&M TV Corp., along with rights to the Paramount shorts and Universal cartoons, in an outright buy-up of the company.

Under the 20th deal, NTA gets the rights to the films for the U. S., Canada, Cuba, the U. S. possessions and part of Latin America for 10 years for a $2,300,000 guarantee vs. a percentage of the gross, said to be more than 20%. Films are all pre-'48, but only four of the 52 date back to before 1940. Included are such pix as "The Razor's Edge," "How Green Was My Valley," "Les Miserables," "My Gal Sal" and "China Girl."

Deal was negotiated by 20th prez Spyros Skouras and NTA exec v.p. Oliver Unger and announced at the annual stockholders' meetings of both companies yesterday afternoon—by coincidence, the meetings were held at the same time. It was a last-minute wrapup, since previously Hygo-Unity TV, headed by Jerry Hyams, had had the in-

40-Theatre Circuit Plan Breaks Foundation Ice

The 40-Theatre Circuit Plan which is being spurred by Willard Swire of the American National Theatre & Academy has drawn first blood in its campaign to secure donations from the foundations.

Initial grant is only $1,000 but is from within the theatre world itself and a relatively small foundation—to wit, Katherine Cornell's.

Nitery operators expect a business boom as a result of the opening of the N. Y. Coliseum, once the pattern of exhibits becomes established. It's anticipated that an increase in late trade will come about because of the new huge counterpart of Madison Square Garden.

Various midtown spots have already had some hypo since the Coliseum was opened several weeks ago. However, it's been pointed out that because of the character of the exhibits, too much of a pickup wasn't anticipated. The only show from which the cafes could expect some trade was the International Auto Show, and that was obtained. The stamp and photography shows were duds as far as the night spots were concerned. However, with the Home Show, indication that a lot of builders and buyers will be present, the cafemen anticipate that they'll get added customers.

Traffic in the area has picked up considerably since the Coliseum teed off. For example, present subway turnstile facilities have become inadequate to handle the flow of straphangers coming into the Columbus Circle station. Eateries in the immediate neighborhood have boomed since the show opened, and with other types of exhibits the bars and cafes will be hitting an upbeat.

Operation of the Coliseum isn't an unqualified success in every department. Exhibit execs and various unions have been having a series of hassles. Because of jurisdictional fights, the Home Show has been forced to call off telecasts. Two exhibitors have also had to get out because of demands by various unions to install work. Officials hope that several conferences initiated this week will iron out the jurisdictional situation.

Bill Leonard Awaits Medic's Okay on Pickup Of Riesel From Hosp

Bill Leonard's "Eye on New York" had a near-miss and a "maybe" the past couple of weeks on headline hot gueststars for the WCBS-TV (N.Y.)-produced Sunday show fed to the network. The "maybe" is a plan to bring cameras into St. Clare's Hospital in N.Y. next Sunday (20) for the first television interview of labor columnist Victor Riesel, blinded by a vial of acid thrown in his face by a still unknown assailant.

What makes the project iffy is the question of whether his doctors will allow him to undergo the strain of a live pickup, replete with lights, cameras, etc., and whether the station's crews could operate out of his hospital sickroom. Final

RKO Circuit Cancels Warner Short; Claims Too Like Socony Sell on Video

Warner Bros. is trying to convince the RKO circuit that a nine-minute short, booked and then cancelled by the theatre chain, is not the same film currently on television. According to RKO, the disputed short, "Crashing the Water Barrier," bears a remarkable resemblance to "Challenge On the Lake," a 12-minute film shown recently on WABD's "Featurama."

Actually the shorts stem from the same source, but are different in that the WB entry has a different narration, contains considerable different footage, has a different musical score, and is in wide screen and color. The subject matter of both films is the same and a portion of the footage is similar. Both films show Donald Campbell's record-breaking speed boat run made on Lake Meade, Nevada last summer. The event was sponsored by the Socony Mobil Oil Co. which hired Marathon TV Newsreel, an industrial film firm, to make a motion picture account of the activity. Konstantin Kaiser, head of Marathon, filmed two versions—one for tv and one for theatrical distribution. The tv version contains shots of Socony Mobil trucks, while the theatrical print has no advertising matter.

The tv short was turned over free to tv stations for showing. The theatrical film was given to WB for the distribution firm to handle as it pleased. Socony was interested in exposure for the film and not in film rentals. The theatrical film is said to contain different footage except for Campbell's actual speed run which is the same in both films.

WB had made a deal with RKO to play the short, but on Friday (4) shorts topper Norman Moray received a call from RKO cancelling the booking. WB is now protesting that its short is different from the tv one.

George Sidney Centres On 'Pal Joey' For Columbia; 24 Years With Metro

Hollywood, May 15.

After 24 years on the MGM lot, George Sidney has departed to go into independent production, beginning with "Pal Joey," which will be a three-way venture with Frank Sinatra and Columbia Pictures. Metro granted his request for a release from a contract which still had 10 months to run so that Sidney could begin concentrating on his new activities.

Henceforth, he'll operate under the aegis of George Sidney Productions which he prexies and of which his father, former Metro exec L. K. Sidney, is veepee. "Pal Joey," which will be the first to fly the Sidney banner, will be done in conjunction with Sinatra's Essex Productions and Columbia, which owns and will finance the entire package.

It's understood that the Sidney and Sinatra firms each have 25% of the picture with Sinatra, in

'THE SUBS ARE IN THE STIX'

Geoffrey O'Hara Deplores Failure Of Webs To Scout Talent

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your "Plight of the Comics" will be answered when the entertainment industry gets as smart as the baseball industry did some years ago. No longer does a young ball player have to journey to New York and show his stuff to a group of "experts." No, the scout finds him where he plays, in his own sandlot. McGraw had Waite Hoyt under contract when he was 12 years old.

We who travel the schools and college "theatre circuits" have seen undoubted talent time and time again. Is anyone scouting them for the entertainment industry? No.

The "subs" are there, in the sticks. The training (rather than spoiling of them, the ruination of them) is the job for the industry. A big job. Have we no big men any more? I think we have.

Geoffrey O'Hara.

It's Dr. Folsom A 5th Time (ND) Then to RCA Meet

RCA prexy Frank M. Folsom received his fifth honorary degree from the University of Notre Dame at South Bend on June 3. Again it's a Doctor of Laws. He's an LLD already from the University of San Francisco, Fordham, Manhattan and St. Joseph's.

Last November, Notre Dame honored RCA board chairman David Sarnoff with a Doctor of Science degree.

Folsom flies from South Bend, following the award ceremony, to Miami Beach, where a large corps of RCA dealers and distributors, and company talent will be in attendance for a company convention, which will be scattered among five hotels. The brass and talent will be housed at the Eden Roc but the specially produced Georgie Hale revue, for benefit of the conventioneers, will be held at the Hotel Seville. Folsom is making the keynote speech there.

Japanese film critic A. Iwasaki writing in The Nation on "Japan's New Screen Art":

CANTOR POLISHING HIS 'TAKE MY LIFE' BIOG

While east on his Gregory Ratoff (20th-Fox) indie film deal for "The Fifth Season"; talks with CBS' Hubbell Robinson Jr. and on other business matters, Eddie Cantor also set up his memoirs, possibly for Doubleday and McCall's. (mag serialization) publication. Jane Ardmore who worked on the Joan Crawford story for LHJ, and is dittoing the Loretta Young and Marlon Brando stories, has been editing Cantor's memoirs. Elizabeth (McIntosh &) Otis is agenting.

In the mid-1920s Cantor, with the aid of his then radio scripter, the late David Freedman, authored "My Life Is In Your Hands" but the updated memoirs, titled "Take My Life," is divided into four parts: "The Women In My Life," "The Men In My Life," "The Best of My Life" and "The Rest of My Life."

Format is keyed to his heart attack when, taken from Cantor manse in Monte Leon Lane, Beverly Hills, to the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Los Angeles, his life passes quickly in review. Comedian during that extended heart siege, was in critical condition but is now fully recovered.

Paradoxically, Mrs. (Ida) Cantor was stricken with a mild thrombosis last week at their Essex House (N. Y.) apartment and was taken to Mt. Sinai Hospital for treatment. Their oldest daughter Marjorie flew in from the Coast to be with her. The comedian has to return to Hollywood this weekend for an NBC color teever, but Mrs. Cantor is slated to follow in a week or so.

Goldensons to Europe

The sailings of the Queen Elizabeth seem made-to-order for American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres prexy Leonard H. Goldenson who sails today (Wed.) with his wife for a quickie o.o. of the European television scene. Sailing follows a day after yesterday's (Tues.) stockholders' meeting and their return on the Liz, on June 12, is a day before the AB-PT board meeting.

George T. Shupert, prez of ABC Film Syndication, is flying over this weekend and will travel with the Goldensons to London, Frankfurt, Rome, Madrid and Paris where the local video sundry video setups will be surveyed on a local level.

Last January Goldenson expressed plans for setting up an International Division for ABC Film Syndication Inc., which incidentally is a subsidiary of AB-PT and not of the ABC network.

Poor Bilko

Washington, May 15.

A slap at the Phil Silvers television show as giving a wrong impression of servicemen is included in a protest which the Veterans of Foreign Wars filed last week against the report of President Eisenhower's Commission on Veterans Pensions.

The report suggested that some cutbacks were in order.

"We are at a loss to understand the attitude of the Commission toward veterans, which gave birth to this new philosophy," declared Omar B. Ketchum, the VFW's chief D. C. lobbyist.

"It has been suggested that perhaps the Commission has been seeing too many television shows and has been overly influenced by the weekly television program poking fun at the Army, and starring comedian Phil Silvers in the role of Sergeant Bilko. May we express the hope that the great body of men and women who have served in the armed forces are not being measured by the platoon of 'characters' commanded by Sergeant Bilko."

'Sand and Sex' in Biblical Cycle Give Bad Impression of the Good Book

Hollywood, May 15.

Generally speaking, Hollywood has taken a "responsible" attitude toward Biblical subjects but there is a tendency toward "sand and sex" treatment, Rabbi Jacob M. Ott of Hollywood's Temple Beth-El, declared at a panel discussion of "Hollywood and the Bible" here. The rabbi singled out 20th-Fox's 1950 film "David and Bathsheba," contending it "made a japery of Jewish law," particularly the scenes in which the adulteress was stoned.

"The Jewish tradition doesn't treat capital punishment lightly," Rabbi Ott declared. "If the producer had consulted Jewish law and certain non-biblical sources, he could have avoided offense."

Rabbi Ott paid tribute to the "massive research" that went into Cecil B. DeMille's upcoming "Ten Commandments," but reported that other producers are not as careful. He added that four years ago he had seen excerpts from the script of the projected "Solomon and the Queen of Sheba" and had found them "authentic." However, he added, the producer told him that the studio wanted to turn the picture into a "sand and sex" epic and that the producer was opposed to it.

"I hope," said Rabbi Ott, that he will stick to his determination to resist this."

Morris Murphy, repping the Production Code, said that Hollywood had "conducted itself laudably in its use of the Bible" and recounted favorable press reaction to such pix as "Samson and Delilah," "Sins of Jezebel" and "The Prodigal." Latter, he recalled, had been blasted in VARIETY by Dr. Daniel Poling but he felt the blast was unfair since "The parable of the Prodigal Son is, at best, brief and sketchy in the Bible."

'I pray," Murphy concluded, "that the day will never come when the Bible is a forgotten document in a museum. I pray that the day will never come when dramatists ignore it."

Henry Noerdlinger, research consultant on "Commandments," reminded the audience that the Bible, in addition to being a historical record, is a sacred document to 800,000,000 Christians and 13,000,000 Jews. He rapped criticisms of Hollywood Biblical films, declaring that in several instances, the ignorance of the critic becomes plain.

"A preacher," he noted, "bases his sermons on the Bible, but mostly he interprets. This is just what the motion picture does."

10% DIALOG LIMIT

Donald O'Connor Policy Inspired By Buster Keaton Panto

Hollywood, May 15.

On theory there's "too much talk in talking pictures," Donald O'Connor's first picture under his new indie banner, which he personally will write, will have a maximum 10% of dialog. His own role will be entirely pontomimic.

O'Connor, who will shoot film in Europe, said point was driven home to him in recent viewings of old Buster Keaton comedies. O'Connor maintains biggest audience response came "when Buster wasn't saying a word but depending on action for laughs."

Susan Hayward Sole U.S. Prize At Cannes Fest

Cannes, May 15.

France swept the top prizes of its own Ninth Cannes Film Festival by copping the Golden Palms for the best feature and best short as bestowed by the 11 man (six French and five foreign), jury. Jacques-Yves Cousteau's underwater, color exploration documentary "Le Monde Du Silence," was top featured. Albert Lamorisse's 35 minute tinted "Le Ballon Rouge" (The Red Balloon) was top short. Sole award to Hollywood was the best actress nod to Susan Hayward for "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G). (No male acting kudo was given this year).

Sweden's "Sommernattens Leende" (Smiles of a Summer Night), of Ingmar Bergman, got an award for the most poetic comedy, and Serge Youtkevitch got the direction award for the Russian "Othello" which also got special mention for the production aspect of the pic. India, with "Pather Panchali" (Song of a Little Road) of Satyajit Roy, got the nod as the most human document. Special jury award went to another French documentary H. G. Clouzot's "Le Mystere Picasso" on the painter at work.

Other short subject prizes went to Italy for the best documentary "La Course Des Tours," and for best fiction pic the 50 minute Russo pic "L'Ane De Magdalena" (The Donkey of Magdalena). Special mention went to the Czech short "Les Marionettes de Jiri Trynka," with mentions for the best experimental films to the English "Together" of Lorenza Mazzetti and the Gallic "Tant Qu'll Y Aura Des Betes" (As Long As There Are Animals) of Brassai.

Gallic sweep caused some disgruntlement among assembled critics who felt that some films were slighted.

COURT: NUDE NATIVES ENDANGER NO MORALS

Do shots of naked natives in the Amazon jungles arouse "sexual desiries" in American audiences?

Last week the Baltimore City Court dealt another blow to Maryland's already reeling state censors when it ruled that Times Film's "Naked Amazon" could be shown in the state without cuts. Case was argued for Times by the lawfirm of Bilgrey & Levinson.

The state board had charged that "Amazon" was "obscene and/or pornographic . . . and aroused sexual desire." To which Bilgrey & Levinson replied that cuts would "destroy a work of art." Also, they argued, "any nudity displayed in the film was natural to the habitat and was not contrived to stimulate the audience to any sexual desires."

Court said the makers of the picture had carefully eliminated closeups of natives showing their bodies below their waist; that the censor board's objections didn't fall under the provisions of the amended Code chapter cited to the Court, and that restoration of the eliminated scenes were therefore ordered.

Senator Wiley to TV Lensers: 'You're Not Doing Right By Ike'

Washington, May 15.

Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.) doesn't think tv does right by President Eisenhower. The Wisconsin solon thinks the medium makes Prexy look older and more worn than he actually is.

All of this came out in the presence of newsmen the other day when Wiley was at the White House for a ceremony which was to designate a section of the St. Lawrence Seaway as "Eisenhower Lock." On hand were film cameramen to make clips for the newsreels and tv.

Pointing to the floodlight, Wiley told the President, "You ought to do something about these tv lights. You ought to shoot the fellows with the lights."

"Do you think we need some colored lights?" asked the suprised President.

"With some of the television," retorted Wiley, "it shows you looking aged whereas you now look like a kid. I only hope the lights can be arranged so that people on television can see you as you really are, youthful, vigorous, and with the complexion of a kid."

"They do their best," Eisenhower answered. "They're good guys."

Later Wiley complained to newsmen that some people still think of the President "as a sick man," because of his "aged" look on video.

Is There A Fabian in The House Warners Built?—Uncle Sam'll Say

The Government, throught the Dept. of Justice, now holds the key to the future relationship between S. H. Fabian, the Stanley-Warner Corp. and Warner Brothers.

The big question is whether Justice, cognizant of the changed industry pattern since its divorce decree, will (a) allow Fabian to move over to head up WB, and whether (b) it is willing to make concessions that might bring about new links between the circuit and the production company that formerly owned it.

Controlling interest in WB last week was acquired from the three Warner brothers by a syndicate headed by Serge Semenenko, senior v.p. of the First National Bank of Boston, a key figure in the finances of several of the film companies, including Stanley-Warner and Universal. Deal saw the Semenenko group purchase 800,000 of the brothers' shares at $27.50 per share, for a grand total of $22,000,000. There are 2,482,000 shares of common outstanding and the Warners still retain 10% of their stock personally, in trust or via their families. Transaction sees the brothers remaining on the board but, with the exception of Jack L., bowing out from active operation of the company.

Jack Warner remains head of the studio temporarily, at least until October. The new group has approached Jerry Wald, exec producer at Columbia Pictures, on the

Fabian Expansion Cues Lapkin Rise

Nathaniel Lapkin, a key aide to S. H. Fabian in the Stanley Warner operation, may emerge as a prominent executive in either the Warner Bros. or SW echelon as a result of the Serge Semenenko group takeover of the control of WB. Lapkin's exact role is either the production-distribution company or in the theatre chain is tied to Dept. of Justice action relating to Fabian's assuming the top post in the operation of WB.

Although there are reports of the possibility of Fabian divesting himself of his SW holdings in order to shift over to WB and Sam Rosen, Fabian's brother-in-law and SW executive v.p. taking over the SW command, there are many obstacles to this arrangement. Both Fabian and Rosen are solidly tied to Fabian Enterprises, the family holding company which runs Stanley Warner as well as the separately-operated Fabian Theatres. Fabian Enterprises actually "lends" Fabian and Rosen to SW in return for $3,000 weekly for their services as executives.

Since Fabian Enterprises is the controlling factor in the operation of SW, it, and not Fabian, would

Justice Shies Off Back Somersault On Divorcement

The Dept. of Justice so far has taken a dim view to the Warner Bros.-Stanley Warner connection. In reply to the S. H. Fabian request, Justice Dept. attorneys have stressed that divorcement was a fait accompli that had taken 10 years to work out.

Government officials are also said to have stressed that it would not be proper to allow a closer tie between Warner and Stanley Warner at a time when the Loew's divorcement was taking place. The Federal agency also pointed out that the consent decrees, when originally promulgated, corrected a situation in the industry. If it should upset it now, via the WB-SW greenlight, it would create a new situation which does not appear justified, the D. of J. noted.

If a compromise can't be resolved the Semenenko group conceivably would have to work out some other arrangement. However, Fabian is still working on the project.

Pic Shortage Forces AB-PT To Divest More Theatres: Goldenson to Investors

American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres will continue to divest itself of additional theatres "in view of the imbalance between the number of theatres and the supply of pictures," AB-PT prez Leonard Goldenson told the company's annual stockholder meeting yesterday (Tues.). In a placid meeting that devoted its primary attention to the expanding ABC Division of the company, the indication that theatres above and beyond the 16 already sold since the end of 1955 would be disposed of marked the only highlight on the theatrical end.

Goldenson stated that "the major investment" made in merging with ABC and "the risks we have taken are commencing to pay off."

Questions from the floor, few in number, were largely restricted to the matter of stock options for directors and increased dividends. Meeting okayed by-laws amendment reducing the number of directors from 18 to 17

THAT'S MORAL OF WARNER SELLOUT

Divorce has not solved the exhibitors' pattern of frustration. Today the production side of the motion picture industry is healthy and promising while the theatre-operating side is notably depressed. Small exhibs in particular shoulda stood imbedded in the old system where the studios had to produce a lot of features in order to service their own owned & operated circuits.

The moral of today's predicament is seen starkly outlined in the current financial drama of the Warner Bros. sellout and the attendant insights. In short, film studios are on a found-money gravy train, thanks to the very television which so badly dents the film-going habits of the American public.

The sages of yesteryear who solemnly assured the Dept. of Justice that the studios could not survive without exhibition had the argument rear and foremost since events establish that it is the theatres (retail) which cannot survive without the wholesale supply of entertainment.

Thanks to careful adjustments in their output (which in turn affected the theatre b.o.) and to a natural ability to latch on gradually to the television found-money train, production-distribution today is comparatively healthy, whereas the theatres are crying the blues.

Wall Street, with its ears to the ground, is testifying forcefully to this new shape of things. It is investing in production, but it considers exhibition an increasingly poor risk.

The circuits themselves, while maintaining an optimistic front, are doing some hardheadedly realistic thinking about the future. They're diversifying into non-theatrical fields for their own protection.

Foreshadowings

The United Paramount chain did it by acquiring the American Broadcasting Co; Stanley-Warner did it by going into International Latex and other interests, and now by investing (by grace of the Justice Dept.) in Warner Bros. in a move that, to many, seems a little

NTA's $4,000,000 Purchase Of UM & M; 1,450 Par Shorts, Etc.; Ups Gross Assets to $10,000,000

Vidfilms' era of mergers, absorptions and consolidations, which had appeared to have come to an end about a year ago, took on new life this week with the lock-stock-and-barrel purchase of UM&M TV Corp. by National Telefilm Associates. Purchase price was reported in the neighborhood of $4,000,000, with the pricetag reaching that high a figure largely because of the perpetual world rights involved in the 1,450 Paramount short subjects owned by UM&M.

The deal, which came on the eve of NTA's first annual stockholders meeting, brings NTA's gross assets to the $10,000,000 mark, this comprising monies receivable, unamortized film and rights and other assets. It adds nine more half-hour series to NTA's already-large catalog of syndicated programs, plus another three quarter-hour groups. Major interest, however, is the Par short library, acquired by UM&M last fall. Of the 1,450 shorts, about 500 are cartoons. Moreover, NTA gets distribution rights to another hot cartoon package, the 179 Walter Lantz cartoons produced originally for Universal.

With one of the more powerful feature film libraries already on hand, with a large if indifferent backlog of syndicated shows and now one of biggest shorts library in the business, NTA now ranks among the top companies in terms of product and potential. The Par cartoons include the "Betty Boop" series, "Little Lulu," George Pal's "Puppetoons," the "Noveltoons," "Screen Songs," "Talkatoons," "Inkwell Imps," "Animal Antics" and the "Stone Age" series. Live-action shorts include a Robert Benchley series, a Grantland Rice "Sportscope" group and a Hedda Hopper series. NTA is readying a decision on the handling of world theatrical rights on these.

Syndicated programs, to which NTA merely acquires distribution

Warning on Bribes

Hollywood, May 15.

Actors must stop giving any "gifts or gratuities" to casting directors, Screen Actors Guild has warned in a sharp reminder to members that such practices are violating SAG by-laws.

SAG said it's been informed "a few members have been giving gratuities or presents of various descriptions to some casting directors."

Rule SAG referred to prohibits members from such practices on grounds it's conduct unbecoming a member of the guild to offer money, gift, gratuity or other thing of value to employers or casting offices.

Canada's Chesler Brand on Metro Vaulties Today?

Agreement on the sale or lease of 700 pre-1948 Metro films may be made today (Wed.) by the Loew's board of directors when it considers three different offers for the company's film library. Most active bidder is Canada's Lou Chesler who is reported to have offered $50,000,000 for an outright buy of the pre-1948 backlog. Chesler's bid is being made via two of his corporations, PRM Inc., and the Ridgeway Corp. Associated in the Chesler offer is Eliot Hyman's Associated Artists Productions which, in an arrangement similar to the Chesler-Warner Bros. deal, will handle the tv distribution if the deal goes through.

Other bidders whose offers will be weighed by the Loew's board

Heat Bops Biz; 'Mamie' First, 'Vegas' 2d, 'Okla.' 3d, 'Suit' 4th; 'Holiday,' 'Fall,' 'Birds' Next Summer arrived with emphasis in many key cities covered by VARIETY, and activity at the b.o. reflects it in spades. Even the bigger pix are suffering in current session, with exhibitors delaying launching of new fare until end of month.

New leader at the wickets is "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th), which is racking up close to $300,000 although not big or sock on every playdate. Weight of number of engagements plus numerous lusty to sock weeks is putting it over. Second money goes to "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G), which was favored by additional dates.

"Oklahoma" (Magna) is pushing up to third spot while "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) is slipping to fourth. "Cinerama Holiday" is dropping to fifth position.

"Harder They Fall" (Col) is managing to wind up sixth while "Birds and Bees" (Par) will cop seventh place. "Jubal" (Col) is landing eighth spot. "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) is winding in ninth while "Lady-killers" (Cont) rounds out the Top 10 pix.

"Bold and Brave" (RKO), "Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "Gaby" (M-G) are the runner-up films in about that order, and only "Goodbye" consistently good.

"Autumn Leaves" (Col) looms as a potential winner among the newcomers, based on sock showing in Cleveland. "While City Sleeps" (RKO) is a big disappointment on its preem in Pitt. "Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) still amazes with smash showings as it continues in third and fourth weeks in some four key cities.

"Hilda Crane" (20th), while doing nice matinee biz in some spots, still is disappointing. Only in Toronto is it rated nice. "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col), mild in Denver, is dull in Seattle.

"Alexander the Great" (UA), only showing in three keys covered by VARIETY is good in Cincy, great in Detroit and okay in Philly. "Husband for Anna" (IFE) looms nice in Chi.

"Tribute To Bad Man" (M-G), fine in Washington, looks good in Cleveland. "Serenade" (WB) missed the ratings this session because doing so mildly. It was nice only in Frisco.

"Conqueror" (RKO), nice in Balto, is rated sock in Toronto. "Night My Number Came Up" (Cont) is doing well in several keys, especially Denver.

"Swan" (M-G), okay in Chi, looms good in N. Y. and Philly. "Last Hunt," from same company, shapes fast in Chi.

Pleading Against Federal Wage Minima, Brylawski Says Biz Never So Bad As Recently

Washington, May 15.

Inside belief here is that Congress will not get as far as final passage of legislation which would make some—but not all—theatres subject to the Federal wages and hours law. If there is no final action by the time Congress adjourns sine die late in July or early in August, new legislation will have to be introduced in the next Congress.

The Senate Labor Committee conducted hearings last week on bills which would make individual theatres grossing over $500,000 annually and all circuits of at least five theatres subject to the law. Law provides a minimum wage of $1 an hour and overtime for weekend work.

Principal pitch for the industry was given by Julian Brylawski, of Stanley-Warner, who appeared on behalf of TOA, Allied, and several smaller indie exhibitor associations. Backing him up, with a report on conditions of smaller theatres around the country was Claude Mundo, of TOA.

Brylawski pointed out that most theatres are in financial difficulty and that the added burden would break their backs. He said that such rich states as New York, Connecticut, etc., which had state-wide minimum wage laws, placed the floors for theatre employees at 50 to 75c. per hour. This is substantially under the $1 Federal floor for those whose output goes into interstate commerce.

Brylawski declared: "The last six months has been, beyond question, the poorest six months that the motion picture business has ever experienced. The entire motion picture industry, even in our large centers, is balanced so delicately on the knife-edge of survival or destruction, that the smallest expense could throw the balance the wrong way.

"It is true that in the early summer of last year the motion picture theatres did have an upsurge in attendance and we had a comparatively successful summer season. But it was short-lived and died on Labor Day, with the resumption of the winter season of improved television attractions. Unfortunately, the recession in motion picture attendance went far below even the floor of the preceding fall."

Senator John Kennedy (D., Mass.), who was chairman of the hearing, inquired about the number of film theatres grossing over $500,000 annually. Bry'awski said he believed it would be a fraction of 1%. He said he'd obtain the accurate figures. He was also asked how many theatres were in circuits large enough to be affected by the bills. Brylawski estimated 10% to 15%. Again, he said he'd obtain the figure.

Kennedy inquired whether the exhibitors would object to the $1 minimum if they weren't compelled to pay the time and one-half for overtime for weekend work.

Brylawski said he wasn't authorized to speak on whether theatres would okay the $1. He was definite, however, they were against the overtime pay provision, since nearly all of the theatre business is done weekends.

John Payne's Credo On Actors as Producers; Due in Copenhagen

Hollywood, May 15.

John Payne, whose Window Productions is associated with Seltzer Productions in lensing "The Boss," plans to continue co-production deals rather than function as a separate indie. Payne, who stars in "Boss," reports discussions with other actors regarding their indie units who feel there are too many headaches attached to individual production and would like to tie in with org like Seltzer to take over production.

Payne has had discussions with Frank Seltzer on a second feature. He leaves May 15 for Copenhagen to star in "Hidden Fear" for United Artists, then returns for final commitment with Pine-Thomas.

U's World Sales Staff Part of 'Bright Girls'

Hollywood, May 15.

Mass type-casting was employed by Universal in a specially written scene for "Four Bright Girls," Aaron Rosenberg production. Director-writer Jack Sher sat up all one night writing the scene showing four young starlets being introduced to delegates at a studio sales convention.

Next day the scene was shot—with 72 delegates to Universal's global sales conclave playing themselves.

Jerry Wald's Fabian Talks

Columbia prexy Harry Cohn has given Jerry Wald, executive vice-president in charge of production, the greenlight to negotiate with the new management group of Warner Bros. relating to Wald's assumption of the top production post at the WB studio. This was achieved following talks between Cohn and Wald's attorney, David Tannenbaum, in Hollywood. Wald's pact with Col still has two years to run.

Wald and his business associate, Milton Pickman, had talks last Saturday (12) with Stanley Warner prexy S. H. Fabian, prominent in the WB deal, and SW veepee Nat Lapkin. Stanley Warner, with an eye to the consummation of the WB deal, has also talked with Hal Wallis and David O. Selznick, but Wald appears the strongest contender if terms can be worked out. Most appealing to Wald is the utilization of SW's Cinerama process for feature film production (story plot), away from the travelog technique which, thus far, has distinguished the first three Cinerama productions.

Also under discussion between Cohn and Tannenbaum is the production status of "Andersonville," which had originally been listed by Col as a personal Wald production, but which Cohn took off Wald's slate and set for another producer, believed to be George Sidney, who is shifting to Col from Metro.

Distribs Keep Strategy Under Wraps

Come Before Senate Group Next Monday (21)—Expect Phillips and Schimmel Among Witnesses

Washington, May 15.

The producers and distributors testify before the Senate Small Business subcommittee next Monday (21) to answer complaints of their selling practices made before the same committee in March by spokesmen for Allied and TOA.

Indications are that there will be six or seven oral witnesses and that several other statements and affidavits will be submitted.

While the list of spokesmen has not been disclosed, it is expected that they will include Louis Phillips and Adolph Schimmel, among counsel for the major companies, who attended the first hearings. The salesmanagers will be represented by one or two spokesmen. The Hollywood studios will have one or two of their own on hand. Among these will probably be Y. Frank Freeman, of Paramount, a veteran spokesman for the production end of the industry.

The Justice Department's enforcement of the antitrust decrees was also attacked by the exhibitor spokesmen. However, there will be no oral witnesses from the Department. Instead, the division has been requested to submit a written statement of its position.

PROPHECY: ALLIED TO BLAST DISTRIBUTORS

Minneapolis, May 15.

Alleged increasingly "desperate" plight of small-town and subsequent-run exhibitors because of inability to obtain film rental relief in the face of decreasing income and the "need" for federal control of such rentals are due to be emphasized at North Central Allied's annual two-day convention here starting this (Tues.) afternoon.

As usual, blame for the threatened extermination of "the little fellows," was to be placed principally on the shoulders of the "hard-hearted, greedy" distributors who refuse (a) to make enough pictures and (b) to sell on a "live-and-let-live" basis.

Foregoing the usual annual "report" or any formal address for the first time, Bennie Berger, who has been local Allied president ever since its inception except for one term and who is slated for another re-election, will concentrate on blasting distributors.

Producers Need 'Anger' (Plus Talent?)

Hollywood, May 15.

The "anger" that an indie producer puts into his making of a picture can be the determining factor in whether it will be strictly run-of-the-mill or a better film which will cut its mark at the boxoffice.

This theory has proven a workable principle for producer-director Robert Aldrich. He is patterning his entire future endeavor on this axiom, and pressed for a rule of thumb for young directors and producers who would cut a quick swath across the Hollywood scene recommends its application.

"Anger," Aldrich defines as "the energy a producer has and the conviction of what he has to say being right and must be heard."

Irrefutably linked, Aldrich thinks, is the need for emotional identification on the part of the audience and the necessity of a picture having "something to say."

"Identification in motion pictures today is very slight," he opines, "compared with those hits of the past. Not enough attention is paid to this emotional identification. If this quality is present, it is likely to be a much better picture."

New York Sound Track

This year's "Varsity" revue at Columbia U. (they remind you at the drop of a guard that Rodgers and Hammerstein, Howard Dietz and Herman Wouk were writers there in college days) contained a spoof on the Actors' Studio kind of acting, "Portrait of the Artist," words by Barry Grael, which has been widely quoted among showfolk. There are references lyrically to Kazan and Strasberg and their thespians whose "scenes are right and jeans are tight" and who make the old Group Theatre seem "Bronxy." Caricatured candidates for acting glory are dismissed with couplets like "no hope-takes dope"-"No poise-likes boys" and the embryonic Marlon Brandos produce "Shaw and Schiller which sounds like Arthur Miller." Incidentally agent Annie Laurie Williams is handling young Grael commercially.

Agent Mark Hanna is accompanying Helen Hayes to Paris July 4 for her stint in "Anastasia," the 20th-Fox film which Anatole Litvak will produce with Ingrid Bergman, Yul Brynner and Miss Hayes. Hanna is a longtime friend of the star and her late husband, Charles MacArthur. Miss Hayes has been staying at her Nyack, N. Y., house since the playwright's death. Shooting starts July 16 but the intervening 10 or 12 days in Paris will be devoted to costumes and rehearsals.

Jerry Wald tells this one. When he wanted Montgomery Clift to star in "Sons and Lovers," he sent him the script with a note attached. It read: "This role in no way resembles your part in 'From Here to Eternity.'" Clift agreed to do the picture . . . Waiting for Technicolor to clear up the requested details of its new color system (does it involve the camera, or doesn't it?) is a little like waiting for Godot . . . As a parting present from the Soviet Ministry of Culture, Mike Todd received a bear cub . . . Code administrator Geoffrey Shurlock here for the rest of the week . . . Charles Baldwin, the MPEA's Italo rep, on his first visit to Spain . . . "Barefoot Battalion," a 2-D black-and-whiter taken on by 20th-Fox. G. Tallas directed . . . Don Getz and the German Gloria feudin' over "08/15"? . . . Charles Einfeld, 20th v.p., expected back from Europe late this week . . . Studios throwing a big reception for Indonesian president Soekarno May 31. Eric Johnston will attend along with Bill Palmer, the MPEA rep in Indonesia. Palmer will be in the Soekarno reception committee when the Indonesian president arrives in Washington on a state visit.

Considerable trade talk about Ed Sullivan column revelation that Emmett Kelly, who's been drawing $2,500 for tv personals, got $160 weekly with Ringling Circus . . . London delegation to Variety Clubs convention at Waldorf last week was led by its Chief Barker, Nat Cohen, of Anglo-American Pictures who returned Sunday a.m. because his daughter was maternity-expectant any minute.

Fred Feldkamp Productions Inc., of Delaware, filed a statement designating its New York State offices for the conduct of a motion picture business. Pamela Woolworth is president. Talbot K. Malcolm filing attorney.

American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres homeoffice personnel chipped in $3,500 for United Cerebral Palsy, presented a check in that amount to Leonard Goldenson, president of AB-PT and chairman of UCP. Goldenson, incidentally, leaves May 16 for a swing of the capital cities of Europe . . . Ben Rogers switched from art director at Donahue & Coe to the same post at Buchanan . . . Arthur Hornblow Jr. set plans to shoot "Solomon and Sheba" in Spain next spring . . . Allied Artists mapping an elaborate preem of "Screaming Eagles" in Fayetteville, N. C.

Robert St. Aubrey planed last week to Copenhagen where he and Howard Kohn will co-produce "Hidden Fear" for United Artists release. Film will star John Payne and Conrad Nagel.

Milton Pickman, onetime veepee of the (Jerry) Wald-(Norman) Krasna Productions at RKO and now generally aiding Wald in his sundry new negotiations, off to Europe today (Wed.) for a quickie on personal business.

Actor-turned-decorator William Haines redoing a lavish Sherry-Netherland Hotel apartment for the Jack L. Warners, indicating protracted residence in Gotham. WB studio head has a villa in Cap d'Antibes on the Riviera, an Arizona ranch, and is building a Palm Springs house, besides his BevHills showplace.

Digging back to the 1946 incarnation of the radio Columbia Workshop, RKO will do "The Day They Gave Babies Away" and British Glynis Johns will have the lead . . . more retrospective stuff: late Winnie Sheehan of Fox will be impersonated by Larry Keating when 20th-Fox's "The Best Thing in Life Are Free" rolls. Due for Spain is Ricardo Montalban on the "Warriors and Lovers" feature for same company.

American Dubbing Co.'s Peter Riethof back from Paris where he completed the English-dubbed version of the French "The Respectful Prostitute" . . . Jules Levey to the Coast over the weekend . . . Metro's studio publicity chief Howard Strickling in for homeoffice conferences . . . Exhibitors doing a burn at Servel's advertising for its air conditioning unit. "For less than the price of a movie ticket," . . . Allied units report that Metro is now selling "I'll Cry Tomorrow" at regular prices but that salesmen are begging for $2.50 or $5 more "as a sort of face-saving measure."

Slipping of the cruzeiro in Brazil a point of concern for the film companies . . . Paintings of Ulric Bell, exec assistant to 20-Fox prexy Spyros P. Skouras, are on exhibit among others in the Roxy Theatre . . . Murray Silverstone, 20th International topper, back from Europe Friday (18) . . . Trouble looming for the N. Y. censor . . . Overlooked in last week's VARIETY story on Negroes in films—the remake of "Emperor Jones" which Universal has planned . . . Eidophor, 20th's color theatre-tv system, demonstrated last week at the company's experimental house in the Bronx for homeoffice execs . . . Metro now the only company to distribute combination optical-magnetic prints . . . Eric Johnston to visit London and other capitals in June.

MAP FOR A NEW SHOWBIZ

It's now official that the Warners have sold out to Serge Semenenko (First National Bank of Boston) who is merely the fiscal agent for Charles Allen, the Wall Streeter, and David Baird (Foundation). Latter is also the chairman of the executive committee of Stanley Warner Corp. Of course Simon H. Fabian, prez of SW, is dominant in the takeover but, perhaps more realistic, is the Allen-Baird combination as the bankrollers for Fabian's recent expansion moves.

Now comes that $50,000,000 package for Loew's backlog of 700 pictures, with attorney Ed Weisl representing PRM and Ridgeway Co. (Lou Chesler), although it's a 50-50 tossup that it can go either way — a deal or none. Arthur M. Loew is a very reticent negotiator in the sundry bids for the Metro backlog. Ely Landau's NTA and the major networks are also interested. The latter are inclined to be selective. NTA and PRM-Ridgeway would be package deals and anything is up to the board for aye or nay.

Loew's Inc., before it divides itself officially into the Metro picture production-distribution segment and the Loew Theatres chain operation, has a $30,000,000 debt to the insurance companies—at a very attractive under-3% commitment—for the parent company, and another $10,000,000 in theatre mortgages as regards the chain. That $50,000,000 would resolve lots of things and expedite the cleavage which, while again set back to early '57, might now be realized in September of this year as has been promised.

Then there's 20th-Fox, which has begun the "unloading" process with a 10-year television deal with the above-mentioned NTA for 52 pictures, with several additional such packages being readied for the market. 20th is said to get a $2,300,000 guarantee for this package alone.

Also, there is Darryl Zanuck and 20th — that indie package deal has gone through—so any palaver on taking over Burbank, as and when the WB-Semenenko & Co. want a new production chieftain, must omit Zanuck. He simply doesn't want that responsibility. Don Hartman made his own exit deal at Paramount for the same reason.

Jack L. Warner is reportedly locked in for a year to run WB at Burbank and thereafter a Jerry Wald may be the new monarch.

Inevitably it must be asked, with increasing skepticism, how the television industry can afford or digest the many costly chunks of celluloid for which it has contracted. That's tv's worry—and the banks that put up the credit. From the standpoint of the picture pioneers who have been or may be able to take out Fort Knox-like loot from the residuals, they are very much in the mood to pocket the cash and not wonder why the buyers are so eager for old films.

But as the trade stands by in some regret at signs of an ending era, it's worth mentioning that aggressive screen showmanship is not dead. Paramount and U-I have it. So does United Artists, although there are those who think prosperity quickly robs dynamic teams of their freshness of zest. Allied Artists is another company which actively presses the point of continuing aggressiveness.

The question persists whether the desired dividends from this Hollywood-to-video segue will redound to the enrichment of whom? The sellers? The new speculators in celluloid accruals? The public? And where does the time-honored commercial theatre exhibitor come in? Minimization of the production line must tend to enhance the seller's market.

Back of it all one wonders about the unrealistic legalistics which created divorcement in the first place. Has the unaffiliated theatreowner been helped, even if Hollywood didn't succumb to that television loot? And with the producers segueing increasingly into the electronic marts, the limitations on the production line for the commercial theatres are obvious.

Of all the historical debacles in the transition from the family type of vaudeville, to the upsurge of the silents, to the impact of the talkers and the technological magic that was first radio and now television, the developments circa 1956 may well establish this year as perhaps the most memorable milestone—the year when Hollywood started to capitulate to television. For it should not be forgotten that the new supposedly straight studio purchases, where the tv potential is secondary, are still predicated on such mundane matters as realty and "book" values. But if the picture business continues to diversify itself in the manner detailed above, it may become a shell of its original self.

Abel.

WB Family Affected?

One studio topper being dickered to take over the day-to-day WB studio operation, when and if the Fabian-Warner Bros. deal is consummated, is sure of one thing: "Steve Trilling will stay." Trilling has been Jack Warner's longtime aide.

Milton Sperling, son-in-law of Harry M. Warner, has his U. S. Pictures unit releasing through WB, and Bill Orr, who is married to Joy Warner, daughter of Ann and Jack Warner is another executive aide to the latter. Their future status is indeterminate.

MPAA Meet Eyes Way to Upgrade Distrib Method

Ways and means of streamlining and updating film distribution methods were the subject of a two-hour meeting in Gotham Monday (14) of the Motion Picture Assn. of America board. Several of the presidents, including Arthur Loew and Spyros P. Skouras, attended.

Powwow also was concerned with possible solutions to the current boxoffice slump, which has hit a new high in May, but actually has prevailed throughout the first quarter. In the instance of one of the majors, first quarter revenues were off $2,000,000 domestically.

What's worrying the filmeries also is the fact their foreign billings have begun to dip, not by much—and in the instances of some companies not at all—but enough to cause concern at a time when the outfits depend more than ever on their overseas coin.

The accent today, at the Motion Picture Assn., is primarily on the foreign market. MPAA prexy Eric Johnston is due to make a swing through Europe next month with the primary purpose of spending a week in Britain where company reps have reported considerable anti-American agitation in the local producers assn.

This isn't the first time that the companies have been mulling over the domestic distribution setup and the need for modernizing it along more economic lines. Distribution and selling costs are up with most of the companies. One suggestion made has been the consolidation of physical distribution facilities in the U. S. and possibly also abroad.

Prexies again discussed an admish-on-credit project and a committee will study it.

Subject of pic sales to the Soviets came up in passing at the Monday meet.

20th Joins Outside Package Trend; Skouras More Potent Productionwise; Talks to Wald, Goetz, Selznick

John Bash De-Listed

Hollywood, May 15.

John Bash Productions has been removed from the Screen Actors Guild's unfair list.

SAG explained Bash had been listed because he hadn't paid an arbitration award in favor of the guild, and that Bash informed SAG he didn't pay because no one notified him he should. Bash has paid and consequently is off the list.

Entirely new slant on production seems to be shaping at 20th-Fox where, with the departure of Darryl F. Zanuck, prexy Spyros P. Skouras has now grabbed much tighter hold on all aspects of company activity, notably production.

Having in the main relied on its own studio in the past, 20th now appears to be shifting to the view that it's time to join the trend and flirt with the indies.

In recent weeks, Skouras has conferred with such production personages as Jerry Wald and William Goetz. In addition, he's believed close to a deal with David O. Selznick to contribute at least one picture.

Zanuck, of course, if the new contract goes through, will be releasing his own productions via 20th, with the latter doing the financing.

In the past, while 20th has had some indie contributions financed wholly or in part by itself, it's stayed clear of the kind of "package" deals widely entered into by Warner Bros., Paramount and Columbia.

The deal with Selznick involves the third remake of Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms." It was to have been made under projected RKO tie of Selznick's.

While 20th has some strong potential grossers coming through ("King and I," "Bus Stop"), the longrange product situation is a source of concern at the company, with future big pictures, such as "Anastasia," still in the blueprint stages or not yet before the cameras. Problem of putting out a continuity of good pictures, with which all studios are saddled, has Skouras exploring the indie angle with a view to bolstering the lineup.

Tiffs With Aliens Sure, Sez Shurlock

America's film industry is increasingly (1) dependent on the foreign market and (2) trending to international co-production. Resultantly a new and growing problem confront the Production Code. So declared Geoffrey Shurlock, who administers the Code, at the annual luncheon of the motion picture department of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.).

With the motion picture world shrinking, "it will become more and more difficult for us to interpret and apply the basic morality of the Code solely, or even principally, in terms of our own home customs and conventions," Shurlock told the group which does the reviewing for the Catholic Legion of Decency.

He cited the French picture, "Letters from My Windmill" noting: "If such a solid subject as the acceptable portrayal of the Mass can be viewed from such widely divergent angles, what is going to happen when we of the PCA try to bring into harmony a Hollywood and European coproduction which enters into a controversial area?"

Observing that coproductions are almost always planned for shooting abroad, Shurlock asked "Whose sensibilities will get the right of way, theirs or ours?"

Said Shurlock: "We still believe our method of treatment under the Code is better in the long run but to convince our foreign partners will be an exercise in missionary zeal, tact and eloquence."

TV Black Cloud Over Quiet 20th Annual Meeting

The tremendous problem caused to the film industry by the impact of free television was stressed yesterday (Tues.) by prexy Spyros Skouras at an extraordinarily quiet 20th-Fox annual stockholders meeting in New York. Skouras and the entire board of directors were reelected by the shareholders.

The 20th chieftain reported a net of $460,739 for the first quarter ended March 31, 1956, or 17c per share as compared with $1,423,811 or 54c per share in the similar period of 1955. Thanks to the tv deal with National Telefilm Associates, Skouras said, the net for the first six months of 1955 should equal or surpass the $1.06 earned for the first six months of 1955.

Skouras revealed that the company had submitted its new contract with Darryl F. Zanuck to the courts for approval. It calls for 20 pictures over a seven-year period, with a minimum of one and a maximum of five per year.

The company, according to Skouras, may dispose of some of its assets "not necessary to our primary function of making pictures." He said a spinoff was part of the general plan.

With Theatre-Studio Divorce, Which Side Assumes Metro's Debt?

Loew's Inc. continues to be faced with a puzzler on how to divide the funded debt of $33,337,000 between the new theatre company and the production-distribution firm. The division of the debt, which must be made before the company splits its shares between the two companies, has been the subject of considerable discussion between the boards of the two firms. Loew's Inc. prexy Arthur M. Loew has promised the company's stockholders that the stock split, originally scheduled for Feb., 1957, would be moved up to September of this year.

In addition to discussions with the insurance companies holding the funded debt, Loew's Inc. is reported to have had some talks with Serge Semenenko of the First National Bank of Boston who is said to have expressed a willingness to take over $15,000,000 of the production firm's share of the debt. However, there's asserted to be some conflict relating to Semenenko's entry, with the new directors, Paul Manheim and Charles Stewart, representing the Wall St. banking houses of Lehman Bros. and Lazard Freres respectively, leading the opposition.

Difficulty in arranging an equitable arrangement on the funded debt stems from differences relating to each company's share of the obligation. The new theatre board argues that the majority of the coin was borrowed for production purposes while the production-distribution arm is convinced that both segments of the previously-combined operation are equally responsible.

Should the boards of the two companies be unable to reach a decision on the debt problem, it's regarded as conceivable that an appeal will be made to the Federal Court, which implemented the Dept. of Justice's consent decree divorcing the companies, to attempt to work out an equitable distribution of the debt.

In addition to $33,337,000 combined debt, the theatre arm also has mortgages outstanding amounting to $10,000,000.

As an angle for wiping out the debt, it has been suggested that Loew's sell its Culver City plant and then rent it back. The 200-acre lot, in the heart of Culver City, is said to be worth as much as $100,000,000. A Loew's spokesman, however, denied that the company was giving any thought to this proposal, although reports are that Loew's can obtain as much as $500,000 for a half acre of land if it planned to decrease the size of its physical holdings on the Coast.

Todd's 'Swap' With Reds

[HE SAYS U. S. STATE DEPT. DID KNOW]

The first film "swap" deal between the States and Russia was revealed last week when Mike Todd said in New York he may take on two Soviet pictures in return for his "In 80 Days Around the World" playing the Red Circuit.

Swap, which involves no money, also ties in with Todd's arrangements to coproduce five features with the Russians. Latter, he said, are giving him every conceivable cooperation and the first film, a rundown on Soviet entertainment which Todd himself will direct, is skedded to roll in June. Color and the Tood-AO widescreen process will be used.

(Later, on the Coast, Todd indicated he might distribute in the U.S. the Russian color version of "Othello.")

At a press confab in N.Y. Todd made these points:

'$25,000,000 Budget'!

(1) He'll make "War and Peace" with the Soviets "only if the artistic concept is clearly defined," i.e. if he's the one to determine what's what with Tolstoy. If Moscow doesn't go for that idea, the Russians may still make the picture, and he may still handle it outside the Soviet orbit. "War and Peace" would carry a budget of $25,000,000 (that's including the Russian ruble contributions and Government cooperation via sets, extras, etc.) of which Todd would

Al Daff Informs U's Sales Staffers of Top-Budget Items for '56-'57 Export

Hollywood, May 15.

Total of 30 top budget films will be released abroad by Universal in the 1956-47 releasing year ending Feb. 28, 1957, exec veepee Alfred E. Daff told delegates to company's global sales bash here yesterday. Of these, 18 will be in Technicolor, of which 10 will be in CinemaScope and one in VistaVision, "Away All Boats."

Board chairman Nate Blumberg also addressed yesterday's meet. Other speakers included Charles J. Feldman, sales veepee; Norman Gluck, United World Films veepee, and Charles Simonelli,

Foreign Films at Cannes Festival

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 15.

Le Ballon Rouge (THE RED BALLOON) (French) Color). Montsouris production and release. Written and directed by Albert Lamorisse. Camera (Technicolor), Edmond Sechan; music, Maurice Le Roux; editor, Pierre Gillett. With Pascal Lamorisse. At Cannes Film Festival. Running time, 35 MINS.

This is a whimsical short that will please almost anywhere. It got a spontaneous ovation at the recent Cannes Film Fest though only 35 minutes long. Made by the man who made "White Mane," it has excellent U. S. possibilities. This has both moppet and adult appeal.

It concerns a boy who finds a red balloon one day which follows him wherever he goes, having almost human perception and ability. It blithely makes its way through Paris on the boy's heels. Finally a gang of boys punctures the balloon, with a resulting payoff.

Director Albert Lamorisse has gotten the right feel of whimsy into this and the color touches perfection. Special effects and moppet work are all fine.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE (Anglo-Spanish). Warner Bros. release of Filmorsa production. Stars Orson Welles; features Robert Arden, Michael Redgrave, Akim Tamiroff, Patricia Medina, Suzanne Flon, Katina Paxinou, Mischa Auer, Jack Watling, Paola Mori, Peter Van Eyck. Written and directed by Welles. Camera, Jean Bourgoin; music, Paul Misraki; editor, Renzo Lucidi. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

WB has this for Europe and South America but not for the U.S. Orson Welles' last Continental film before heading back to renew his U.S. career, it emerges a jumbled mixture of story and effects which are striking at times but have too much flash and fantasy without enough flesh. Reminiscent of "Citizen Kane" this remains somewhat confused. Pic shapes mainly as a good programmer on its worldwide reverse chase theme as an adventurer tracks down the past of a mysterious great man to lead to his own eventual murder.

An eccentric millionaire, Orson Welles hires a nosy American, who is trying to get to his daughter, to find out about his youth. The search uncovers slowly the true shady past of the great man who dispatches all the people as they are revealed until the two are alone. His obsession in not wanting his daughter to know about his criminal past leads to the rich man's suicide.

Possessing a group of name folks in little cameo roles, these may help its chances in the U. S. Robert Arden is much too unexpressive to give credence to the young man who almost outwits the half-mad brilliance of the rich man. Lensing and editing at times carry brilliance and flash. The production dress of the Continental background also helps. But this rather confused tale will have to be sold on its splashy action quality rather than anything else. Welles, in an unusual makeup, gives it weight and power at times. Cast is good and Paola Mori emerges a taking new femme film personality. It is in English.

Mabaroshi Nouma (THE PHANTOM HORSE) (Japanese; Color). Daei production and release. Directed by Koji Shima. Screenplay, Hasegawa; camera (Eastmancolor), Michio Takahashi; editor, Omori. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Sprightly and knowing colors envelop this nicely told tale of a boy and his horse. Though reminiscent of some Hollywood pix, as the horse wins the derby to save the old homestead, this has an honest unfoldment and is told with winning acting, pacing and a taking moppet understanding.

Colors are excellent and this has a general entertainment value which may make it a fine general entry or an okay item for specialized situations. Acting is nice as are technical credits.

Cela S'Appelle L'Aurore (THAT IS THE DAWN) (Franco-Italian). Marceau production and release. Stars Georges Marchal, Lucia Bose; features Nelly Bourgeoud, Gianna Esposito, Jacques Delbo, Julien Bertheau. Directed by Luis Bunuel. Screenplay, Jean Ferry, Bunuel from novel by Emmanuel Robles; camera, Robert Le Fevbre; music, Joseph Kosma; editor, Marguerite Renoir. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Film unfolds on island of Corsica and concerns a man who gets involved with problems which force him to take a stand. This looks only for some special spotting in the U.S. Theme might encounter some censorship difficulties.

A young doctor feels a commitment to workers of an island who are exploited by the leading factory owner. When his wife leaves him for a trip to the mainland, he falls in love with a beautiful newcomer. The brutal eviction of the doctor's friend from his home, with his sick wife, by the owner leads to the catalyst and the doctor's decision.

Director Luis Bunuel has filled in this often banal story with clever handling. Characters are strongly etched. Georges Marchal is adequate as the humane doctor. Lucia Bose is cold but comely as the mistress while the remainder of the cast is fine. There is expert lensing by Robert Lefebvre, nice music of Joseph Kosma and knowing editing by Marguerite Renoir. This makes it an unusual film but strictly an exploitation item, with limited U. S. chances.

MARIE-ANTOINETTE (Franco-Italian-Color). Gaumont release of Franco-London Film-Gibe-Rizzoli production. Stars Michele Morgan, Richard Todd; features Jacques Morel, Aime Clariond, Jeanne Boitel, Guy Trejean, Marina Berti. Directed by Jean Delannoy. Screenplay, Bernard Zimmer, Philipe Erlanger, Delannoy; camera (Technicolor), Pierre Montazel; editor, Henri Taverna. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 120 MINS.

Trotted out for French edification is a retelling of the story of Marie-Antoinette and her pure love affair with Count Axel De Fersen with a background of court giddyness and eventual revolution. Its inside-Versailles intimacy and lack of real spectacle or of exciting visuals slow up this oft-told tale. It is a doubtful U.S. item. There is an Anglo version made for England which has already been insured circuit booking there. This version, with the names of Richard Todd and Michele Morgan might slant this as worthy for secondary U.S. spots, but it remains in need of bally for firstrun chances.

Director Jean Delannoy has given this a cold mounting. Michele Morgan is decorative but does not wear the regal raiment too well and rarely displays the femininity of the queen. Richard Todd is a pale figure in the unsuitable role of the queen's platonic lover. Jacques Morel manages to give a deeper note to the character of the weak king. Color is good and Versailles shooting gives it some dress and production value. Acting is sketchy in lesser roles and Revolutionary scenes have an operetta aspect while most technical credits are fine.

Les Possedees (THE POSSESSED) (French). Marceau production and release. Stars Raf Vallone, Madeleine Robinson; features, Dany Carrel, Magali Noel. Directed by Charles Brabant. Screenplay, Maurice Clavel, Andre Tabet from play, "Island of Goats," by Ugo Betti; camera, Edmond Sechan; editor, Maurice Serein. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

The play version ran on Broadway only a week last season, and this Gallic pic rendition of the Italo piece "Island of Goats," looks to also have limited film chances except for exploitation angle on its sex drama of a goatlike man who troubles a houseful of women. It does have some torrid bits but it seems limited to offbeat spots.

Director Charles Brabant has not been able to give credence to this tale and it remains unconvincing with thesping little help. Lensing and editing are okay. It remains something for the sensational trade.

Sommarnattens Leende (SMILES OF A SUMMER NIGHT) (Swedish). Svensk Filmindustri production and release. Directed and written by Ingmar Bergman. Camera, Gunnar Fischer; Ake Nielsen; editor, Oscar Rosander. With Ulla Jacobsson, Eva Dahlbeck, Harriet Andersson, Gunnar Bjornstrand. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 110 MINS.

Offbeat Swedish comedy of manners and passions is limited for the U.S. due to its talky aspects. It has an unusual lusty comedy manner, and this might make this worthy of arty spots. It details how a group of badly assorted couples are straightened out one summer night influenced by a strange elixir that makes people do what they want. Clever, and at times ribald, it has a too ponderous touch to really light up the comedic aspects of this slightly overlong affair. This has a topnotch acting and technical mounting, with Ingmar Bergman's direction knowing and agile.

MOZART (Austrian) Music) Color). Columbia release of Cosmopolfilm production. Stars Oskar Werner; features Johanna Matz, Gertrud Kuckleman, Nadia Tiller, Angelica Hauff. Directed and written by Karl Hartl; camera, Oskar Schnirch; editor, Henriette Brunsch; music, W. A. Mozart. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Tinter is a rather relaxed outline of the last years of Mozart's life. Somewhat schmaltzy in detailing his love affair with a young singer who inspired his "The Magic Flute," it has the saving grace of not hoking up the process of creation and greatness. However, the real feel of Mozart's genius is absent except for his music on the soundtrack.

This has a restrained performance by Oskar Werner. Lensing gives a washedout color feel. Pic shapes as a good nabe lingo entry or for special spots on the musico appeal of Mozart with another asset in the 200th anni celebration of his birth.

Surrounding thesping is fine but music and Werner dominate this sketchily-mounted pic.

OTHELLO (Russian; Color). Mosfilm production and release by Serge Youtkevitch. Screenplay, Youtkevitch from play by Shakespeare; camera (Sovcolor), E. Andrikania; music, A. Khatchatourian; editor, K. Alleeva. With Serge Bondartchouk, I. Skotzeva, A. Popov, V. Sechalski, E. Vesnik. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

If Shakespeare's "Romeo And Juliet" can be terped to fair U. S. box office returns by Russo filmmakers, a straight version of "Othello," shorn of its verse, might also be an offbeat arty entry. Color and playing give this a measure of taking dramatics as the Moor's jealousy grows to torture and murder of his beloved. This mounts to a fine frenzy and has a visual aspect that might make it worthy of special spotting outside the Russo houses in the U. S.

Director Serge Youtkevitch has given the Moor a stature and his depiction of the growth of jealousy, inspired by the twisted Iago, are the film's high points. One flaw is the lack of needed charm in the Iago character. However, the excellent color renditions, setting and acting make this a worthy gambit. Serge Bondartchouk gives the Moor a depth that pays off. Desdamona is played perfectly by a pulchritudinous actress, for a change, in Irini Skotzeva. Khatchatourian's robust and nuanced musical background is also an asset. This further points up the Russo switch in film policy with an adherence to the classics and a veering away from controversial matters.

LE MYSTERE PICASSO (Documentary-French-C'Scope-Color). Cinedis release of Filmsonor production. Directed by H. G. Clouzot. Camera (Eastmancolor), Claude Renoir; music, Georges Auric; editor, Hendi Colpi. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 87 MINS.

Black and White, color and C'Scope are used in this filmic rendition of the famed painter Pablo Picasso at work. Drawings make up the first part followed by an analysis of two paintings and how they become the finished product. Line is matched with a probing musical score and sharp film manner to produce an interesting and offbeat pic treating the creative artist.

The nature of the film makes this one for only special spotting in the U. S. since it may appeal only to those interested in Picasso's work. His genius is something taken for granted but rarely shown in the film.

However, this unusual pic creates an almost hypnotic effect and hits a cresendo when C'Scope is utilized to denote the work which goes into a painting. Color and lensing are excellent and this pic, which started out as a short and grew into a full length film, is a definite exploitable subject. However, it is limited to those interested in the work of Picasso.

To Koritsi Me Ta Mara (THE GIRL IN BLACK) (Greek). Hermes production and release. Written and directed by Michael Cacoyanis. Camera, Walter Lassally; editor, Emile Provlengios; music, Argyris Koudanis. With Ellie Lambert, Dimitri Horn, Georges Foundas, Eleni Zafirou, Notis Pergalis. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Young Greek director Michael Cacoyanis is the man who gained a measure of international interest with the pic "Stella" at the Cannes Fest last year which was picked up for world distrib by Universal and won a foreign critics award in the U. S. this year. "Stella" was made for $25,000 and present entry for $35,000. It has a fine technical gloss and tells a sombre tale with marked visual talent. Coming of age of a playboy involved with the provincial, cruel lives of a group of inbred islanders, this packs some dramatic voltage which is overstated at times. It makes up for this somewhat in the playing and atmospheric handling.

The young man who comes to a Greek island to relax falls in love with a beauteous local girl who is the butt of the idle male contingent because of her loose mother. Story is extremely well played by leads Ellie Lambert and Dimtri Horn. Pic has an excellent lensing backdrop by Walter Lassally. It denotes an emerging talent in Cacoynais. Film could be a definite lingo spotter plus fodder for arty U. S. chances.

Kohrinta (LITTLE FAIRGROUND SWING) (Hungarian). Mokep production and release. Directed by Zoltan Fabri. Screenplay, Imre Sarkadi; camera, Barnabas Hegyi; editor, Fabri; music, Gyorgy Ranki. With Bela Barsi, Manyi Kiss, Mari Torocsik, Imre Sos, Adam Szirtes. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

This shapes as the first Magyar film since the war to hint for some U. S. possibilities. Mainly the tale of two lovers separated by social and political conventions who finally assert themselves and their love, it has a human sentimental quality never descending to mawkishness. Direction shapes this into an entertaining piece with a fine flair for atmosphere, mood and drama by young director Zoltan Fabri. Shorn of some early talk of collectives versus individual farming, its tale of love can be cut into a highly offbeat pic worthy of spotting in some U. S. arty situations.

Scenes of the lovers first meeting on a fairground swing, a brilliantly mounted dance scene when the young lover makes his desires evident in a long dance with the girl (a masterful piece of cinema) and the treatment of characterization, combine to make this a fine pic. Technical credits and playing are excellent. This is of course limited for certain U. S. spots but it has the film content necessary for consideration. Mosk.

Nightmare

Murder-under-hypnosis slant with Edward G. Robinson. Below par program fare.

United Artists release of Fine-Thomas-Shane production. Stars Edward G. Robinson, Kevin McCarthy, Connie Russell; features Virginia Christine, Rhys Williams, Gage Clarke, Barry Atwater, Marian Carr, Billy May and his orchestra. Directed by Maxwell Shane. Screenplay, Shane, from Cornell Woolrich novel; camera, Joe Biroc; editor, George Gittens. Previewed in New York May 9, '56. Running time, 89 MINS.

Rene	Edward G. Robinson
Stan	Kevin McCarthy
Gina	Connie Russell
Sue	Virginia Christine
Terrence	Rhys Williams
Belnap	Gage Clarke
Warner	Barry Atwater
Madge	Marian Carr
Louie Simes	Billy May

Name of Edward G. Robinson plus the appeal of Connie Russell for the younger set may save this routine thriller. Though it starts out with a strong promise, and throughout the film there are moments of tension, "Nightmare" rates not much more than "E" for effort.

Trouble is that picture emerges as something one has the feeling of having seen many times before. It's the old saw about the fellow who has a nightmare in which he dreams he has killed someone. When he wakes up, he finds evidence that he actually committed the crime, but he can't find anyone to believe him.

Eventually, of course, it turns out that his "dream" was reality; only he did what he did under hypnosis. With Robinson, as a sleuth, ferreting out all the dirty work, there's a happy ending.

Part of the trouble lies in the editing by George Gittens. A couple of times there are fadeouts seemingly leading into flashbacks, only they never prove to be anything but trick effects. Lensing, incidentally, by Joe Biroc, at times catches an unusual quality in creating moods and is distinctly on the plus side of the pic.

As the highstrung musician who kills under the hypnotist-criminal's spell, Kevin McCarthy is properly distraught in a part that really doesn't leave him much leeway. He's in constant emotional turmoil and even has to go through an attempted suicide routine. All things considered, McCarthy does surprisingly well with the role.

Robinson, the tough-as-nails cop with the soft heart, who's married to McCarthy's sister, etches a less than convincing portrait. He's neither at his best nor at his worst. Connie Russell is obviously more at home before a mike singing than in dramatics before the camera, but she's pretty and appealing as McCarthy's confused sweetheart. In a brief part, Marian Carr stands out and might be noted as a comer. Rhys Williams is bluff as a sheriff's deputy and Virginia Christine is adequate as Robinson's wife. Gage Clarke plays the villain.

Maxwell Shane's script and direction aren't of much help to this entry. Dialog has its crisp moments, but on the whole it fails to convince. Musical backgrounds, with a haunting jazz tune (it's connection with McCarthy is never adequately explained), help underscore the New Orleans locale. They're played effectively by Billy May and his band, with May figuring briefly in the dramatics. Miss Russell delivers her numbers in fine style. Hift.

Away All Boats

(VISTAVISION-COLOR)

Sprawling wartime Navy adventure. If strongly sold may override story deficiencies. Jeff Chandler starred.

Universal release of Howard Christie production. Stars Jeff Chandler, George Nader and Julia Adams. Directed by Joseph Pevney. Screenplay, Ted Sherdeman from the novel "Away All Boats" by Kenneth M. Dodson; camera (Technicolor), William Daniels; special photography, Clifford Stine; special action scenes directed by James C. Havens; editor, Ted J. Kent; music, Frank Skinner. Previewed in N.Y., May 1, '56. Running time, 114 MINS.

Captain Jeb Hawks	Jeff Chandler
Lt. Dave MacDougall	George Nader
Nadine MacDougall	Julie Adams
Commander Quigley	Lex Barker
Doctor Bell	Keith Andes
Lt. Fraser	Richard Boone
Ensign-Kruger	William Reynolds
Lt. Mike O'Bannion	Charles McGraw

Having clicked with the Army-themed "To Hell and Back," Universal apparently hoped the Navy-slanted "Away All Boats," would be a case of lightning striking twice. That's doubtful for "Boats" is a big, sprawling, episodic war adventure. Its action elements are tense and exciting, but as a whole the film lacks cohesion and an acceptable point of view. The introduction of an extraneous flashback romance, obviously aimed at the femme trade, hinders rather than aids the story telling.

"Boats," however, has a chance of overcoming these production handicaps via extensive and hard-selling campaign now under way. For marquee value, only Jeff Chandler's name stands out.

Perhaps "Boats" main fault is that it attempts to cover too much. Based on Kenneth M. Dodson's novel, the Howard Christie VistaVision production follows the World War II adventures of the U.S.S. Belinda, an attack transport. It picks it up at its shipyard mooring and follows the Belinda through its shakedown cruise, its training period in the Pacific, its landing actions, and its successful and courageous fight against Japanese Kamikaze attacks.

Combined with the ship's adventures, the Ted Sherdeman screenplay aims to give an account of the men involved in the actions. The task apparently is overwhelming, for the crew is large and all that the viewer obtains is small vignettes, some of them sharply etched; others merely sketchy and undeveloped. The primary focus is on the ship's captain, played by Jeff Chandler, and George Nader, as one of his chief aides.

Chandler's role is to convey the loneliness and responsibility of command. Mostly standoffish, he occasionally lets his guard down to reveal a sense of sensitivity but, in the main, he strains to remain emotionally detached from his officers and crew. Nader, as a former Merchant Marine captain now relegated to taking orders, is the efficient and brave officer who completely understands the captain's problems.

Other members of the crew include Lex Barker, as a socialite officer new to sea duty who eventually wins respect via battle exposure; Richard Boone, Charles McGraw, and Sam Gilman, as hardened sea officers; Don Keefer, as a bumbling ensign; James Westerfield as Chief Carpenter's Mate; George Dunn as a naive enlisted man, and Kendall Clark as a finicky officer. There are also many other assorted types of officers and men, each of whom reacts differently to the various problems that confront a warship in enemy water. Julia Adams, as the wife of Nader, is the only femme in the cast.

There are many incidents—all of which take place in the regular line of duty of the crew; accidents, mistakes (firing on friendly planes), deaths in battle, boat drills, restlessness of the crew on not receiving mail and not obtaining shore leave in a populated area. The captain turns the crew's bitterness on himself by adopting certain eccentricities — acquiring a pet monkey and ordering the building of a personal sailing sloop for "yachting" when the ship is not engaged. He employs this method to set himself up as the focus of "hate" to prevent the crew from battling among themselves.

The best footage is the Kamikaze attacks. It is filmed so expertly that the audience feels that it is a member of the crew as the Japanese suicide planes plunge on the deck. William Daniels' VistaVision lensing proves helpful in the coverage and Clifford Stine's special effects are outstanding.

Performances, on the whole, meet the needs of the story. Chandler is properly taciturn and

CinemaScope In Black & White Pends at 20th

Keyed to the departure of Darryl F. Zanuck as 20th-Fox production head, the studio now is no longer 100% committed to CinemaScope in color.

Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy, said in Gotham last week that, if a suitable subject came along, 20th would no longer hesitate to make it in black-and-white CinemaScope. He pointed out that Metro had announced plans for the first b&w C'Scoper, "The Power and the Prize."

This is the second time that, because of lack of support from the other companies, 20th has had to back down on a CinemaScope policy. Originally, it had insisted on magnetic sound for its widescreen system. Today, 20th is almost the only company to still service theatres with any quantity of four-track magnetic prints.

Most of the producers now take the view that, while color is a definite b.o. stimulant, it can also be a deterrent if used indiscriminately. Apart from this, print costs on color run exorbitantly high, particularly in the instance of 20th which continues to put out optical and magnetic prints.

Skouras disclosed that, on May 21, he would appear before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to give his views on subscription-tv. He said he was as opposed to it as ever.

He also acknowledged that talks for the sale of 50 of 20th's features for tv were going on, but said he hadn't been offered the right price for them yet. He said he had nixed an offer for $2,000,000 as being inadequate, and that he had been offered a higher sum than that.

Wald Proposes, But Col Disposes 'Andersonville'; He Declines To Be Hurt

Hollywood, May 15.

Despite recurrent reports from Col that "Andersonville" was to be one of Jerry Wald's personal productions for 1957, he will have no part of it, the studio reported. Instead, the film version of MacKinlay Kantor's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel will be made by an independent "collapsible" corporation, set up for the venture with a top producer-director. No one has been set for it as yet.

Understood the studio figures the film will carry a budget of around $4,000,000. Importance of the property motivated the studio's desire for a deal with a top indie.

Wald, informed of the decision while in New York on "my first vacation" since joining Columbia as veepee and exec producer, sidestepped a direct battle over the situation by commenting that "as everyone in the industry knows, I am not a quarrelsome fellow."

However, he pointed out, he acquired the property from galley proofs, persuaded Columbia prexy Harry Cohn to buy it, assigned writer Irving Ravetch to prepare a treatment and has been active in its preparation.

ROGERS HOSPITAL TO COLLECT ON JULY 16

Second annual audience collection for the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital will be held during the week of July 16, S. H. Fabian, national chairman of the collection drive, revealed this week.

Plans for drive will be finalized on May 17 via a country-wide telephone broadcast. It will originate in New York and will be received amplified at designated points in all exchange cities. Broadcast meeting will be presided over by Abe Montague, president of the Will Rogers Hospital. On the broadcast with Montague will be Sam Rosen, associate chairman of the fund campaign; Charles J. Feldman, exhibitor chairman, and Eugene Picker, chairman of the finance and fund raising committee.

Special two-minute appeal trailer, featuring Henry Fonda, will be provided gratis to theatres pledging their support to the collection drive.

WENT FOR 'MOOD', NOW A B.O. BROOD; 50 TV SCRIPTS HOME TO CLUCK

Hollywood film producers who've been on a television script buying spree for some time are now being subject to second-guessing as the finished features go into release and fail to score with either (a) the public or (b) the critics.

Idea has grown that these teleplays are "mood pieces" and that their thinness shows up starkly when projected on a theatre screen. In short the larks of video come home to roost on the big screens of filmdom looking like under-weight sparrows.

It is being asked: has Hollywood been trapped in an "introvert" cycle, forgetting the standard ingredients of tension, plot and action?

Profusion of teleplays still waiting to make the transition to the big theatre screen gives particular point to worriedly raised eyebrows among industry execs.

"Once you start stretching an already thin or think script, you may find that, in the end, you've got nothing to show," said Jerry Wald, Columbia Pictures exec producer, in N. Y. last week. "We've got to give people something they can't see on television. Otherwise, how can we expect them to come out of that livingroom to see our shows?"

Added Wald: "We can't be a bunch of hitchhikers. No great pictures will ever be made from tv throwaways."

TV Itself Astonished

The tv people themselves, who not long ago were given the big brush by the film companies, are a little astonished at the sudden mass reaction to their product. Along with many in the film industry, they can't quite see the purpose of "building up" a small, intimate story into big, spectacular drama. Worse yet, they say, is a tendency to copy from the tv screen without any special attempt at elaboration.

"If a television play is bought for motion pictures, it must be expanded 'in depth,'" says Herbert Brodkin who produces the frequently outstanding Alcoa Playhouse and Goodyear TV Playhouse shows on NBC-TV. "Films have a chance to do what we can never hope to do in less than an hour. What shocked me recently was to see a tv script brought to the screen almost verbatim. That's the surest way to kill it."

Brodkin, who's to become a Hollywood producer himself, said he couldn't understand why the studios picked up some of the "bad ones" and overlooked the good ones, i.e., those that had a ready core for a theatrical feature. "In motion pictures it's the story that gets the accent. With us, in the living room, the accent is more on human quality."

Nearly 50 Sold

Close to 50 teleplays have been purchased by studios and indies, including some that seemed to be all mood and very little story. "The two media are compatible only to an extent, and I think the film producers are going to find that out," noted one tv writer. "Mood requires a certain technique. It's very difficult to maintain successfully through a full-length picture."

Others hold that Hollywood is making a much more basic policy mistake by romancing tv that way. They point out that, on a favorable Sunday night, many millions are apt to see a certain play on the air. "Why should we assume that all these people want to see a warmed-up version of the same property again, only on the larger screen?" asked a film company exec.

"If we are out to beat the television competition, it shouldn't be by riding its coattails. We have a lot of things in our favor, including the wide screens, color, a sense of scope and movement. Here we are giving it all up to concentrate on drab little apartments in the Bronx where 'ordinary' people try to solve their everyday problems. That's not why people go to see motion pictures."

As a corrolary it's pointed out that, in Italy, one or two of the neo-realist pictures focusing on the misery of the Italian people were very successful, but that the rest flopped miserably. "The motion picture screen represents escape. If it gets away from that idea too much, it'll deprive itself of an important segment of its audience," ran one comment.

While some, like Metro production chief Dore Schary, feel that "the jury is still out" (see separate story) on the teleplays turned film scripts, others see the handwriting clearly on the wall. "Just forget 'Marty' and think in terms of 'Patterns' and 'Ransom,'" said one exhibitor. "If they give us many more like that, we'll all be sitting home."

Wald feels strongly that the talent developed by tv in the writing field should apply itself to writing screen originals for hefty coin rather than tv scripts. "The opportunities for creativity in the two media just can't be compared," he said.

Serling's Question

TV scribe Rod Serling, who's been among the most prolific of the upcoming crop of new writers, is now writing an original on the Coast, and he agrees with Wald. "There is more food for thought than gravy" in Hollywood's enthusiasm for tv scripts, he noted last week. Studio officials, he thought, were awakening to the fact that what's popular on the small parlor screen doesn't necessarily repeat in the theatres.

Other production execs have chimed in with similar observations. Robert Lantz, exec v.p. of Figaro Inc., declared recently that the industry was overdoing the purchase of tv properties. "The majority of tv scripts on little incidents will come to grief on the screen," he said.

Brodkin, who put on a good share of the video plays that have been bought for filming, said he was amused by the fact that, when he discussed his picture deal and suggested certain scripts, his ideas had been nixed by studio execs. "A look at the kind of films they're turning out these days made me wonder whether they really knew what they were talking about," said Brodkin whose choice of shows has met with a very high popularity rating.

Copycatting Video

"There are certain areas which tv won't touch because of sponsor sensitivity," noted one company exec who felt strongly the film biz was making a mistake copycatting tv. "Television rarely will touch a topical theme, and it won't get into certain areas of human emotion," he said. "We have our chance to be different and challenging. Instead we waste time trying to emulate a vastly inferior type of presentation."

Several reasons are cited for Hollywood's current yen for tv material. First, there is a shortage of interesting stories and video represents a new and convenient source. Second, the producers have always fallen for the "pre-sold" tag and are doing so now. Third, the b.o. slump inevitably creates a desire for an offbeat approach, and since Hollywood is given to "cycles"—and the teleplays are popular—the "follow the leader" mentality has again come into play. Fourth, eastern execs may look at a particularly moving tv play and fail to realize that its ingredients are typical of all that medium and don't readily lend themselves to translation to the larger screen where the story element is so much more important.

Screen Writer Income Over $10 Mil

Hollywood, May 15.

For the first time in three years, screen writer income is over the $10,000,000 annual income figure again, and appears to be approaching the old peaks of the lush post-war years. So reports treasurer Curtis Kenyon of Writers Guild of America West, in his annual financial breakdown. (He also reveals tv scripters now have pulled within 50% of the total earnings of the film writers).

After a 1952 high of $11,800,000, screen income by mid-1955 had slid to $8,600,000, but in the past year the figure jumped to $10,750,000.

Gregory Peck: Where Are The Scripts?

Hollywood, May 15.

A wail of woe is raised about the desperate scarcity of good stories by Gregory Peck and Sy Bartlett, partnered in Melville Productions. After plowing through 500 originals, novels, adaptations and other pieces of fiction, only item bought by Peck was a Broadway play, "Affair of Honor," for which he paid $75,000 guarantee on an escalator up to $300,000 if play was a success as a play, which it was not.

"Honor" was authored by Elwood C. Hoffman, onetime staff script editor at CBS in Manhattan.

RKO 'COINCIDENTALLY' MAKES MORE ABROAD

Hollywood, May 15.

Although no particular effort has been made in that direction, RKO will go heavily into foreign production next year. Studio already has six 1957 productions slated for partial or complete lensing abroad.

However, according to story department chief William Nutt, the sudden burst of overseas activity is purely coincidental. Only set formula for his department, he added, is to "find good stories regardless of locale."

Studio will make "Pakistan," the John Wayne starrer, entirely in that country and will trek to Japan for "Escape in Japan." Other locations are set for Spain for "The Peerless Knight," Italy for "Portofino," Paris for "10 Days in Paris" and Africa for "Rachel Cade."

TV-Derived Stories Disappoint

VARIETY reviews of recently released features based on television scripts indicate that they're not living up to the "Marty" acclaim. For example, as to "The Catered Affair":

> "Another television script proves mild in theatre screen form. Spotty prospects for Chayefsky story despite strong cast."

The reviewer's opinion on "Crime In the Streets," based on Reginald Rose's teleplay, was: "A program filler, and mighty dreary one at that."

Discussing "Patterns," VARIETY appraiser, while noting that it was "a skillfully-executed film," remarked that it "might present selling problems at the outset because of its unelaborate production and lightness of weight in the name value."

"The Rack," another Rod Serling entry, was characterized as: "Poor material for an hour and 40 minutes of screen time . . . Well enough done within the melodramatic category, but too depressing and dreary to be suitable for popular screen tastes."

Schary's Caution: Verdict Not Yet In on Teleplays

Metro production chief Dore Schary discounts the growing reaction against the conversion of teleplays into feature films. To condemn all of video stories as "thin" just because a few of them have failed to amount to much "artistically" at the boxoffice would be like saying that "we will never buy legit plays for pictures any more," Schary observed. Teleplays, per se, cannot be condemned, the Metro exec declared, pointing out that the result depended on the individual story and how it was handled.

Schary maintained that the full score was not yet in on the tv-to-pix workovers. He felt, however, that the definite test for Metro might be the upcoming "The Catered Affair," based on Paddy Chayefsky's teleplay. "If we find there is resistance because people might have seen it on television," Schary said, "we might have to revise our thinking."

H'wood to Enter Films In 1st Irish Pix Fest With 4 Other Nations

London, May 15.

Five nations have already agreed to participate with feature pix at the first Irish International Film Fest, which is to be held in Cork May 21-27. U. S., Great Britain and France are submitting two features apiece. Other entries will come from Egypt and Japan.

The Hollywood duo will be "The Searchers" (WB) and "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G). From Britain, the Rank Organization will be screening "A Town Like Alice" and Herbert Wilcox is submitting his latest Anna Neagle starrer, "My Teenage Daughter."

Feature entries also have been promised by Belgium, Germany, Holland and Italy. Shorts and documentaries will come from many producing companies, including some from India, Ireland, Norway, Canada and Pakistan.

COLLIER YOUNG'S HAPPY TIME WITH FILIPINOS

Collier Young has been in New York for confabs with United Artists execs anent "Huk," which he independently produced in the Philippines for UA. Some of the talk will be about that title—for Young concedes it's not a word familiar to all. But chances are it will stay, with some effort made to build intrigue around its meaning.

Film was brought in at a cost of $350,000, $100,000 of which was in frozen UA Philippine pesos. And, as Young relates it, the 100G spent on the islands gave him an "in" on just about anything he wanted. Since the picture deals with the defeat of Philippine guerillas, the local government was particularly anxious to cooperate. School holidays were declared when Young's company rolled the cameras and the population of entire villages showed up for the mob scenes.

This is the first Young picture for UA, under a multiple-film deal. He's continuing as head of Filmakers, indie unit in which he's partnered with Ida Lupino, but this outfit has been active because of Miss Lupino's preoccupation with television work (Four Star Theatre).

Filmakers is the company which brought in financing from both franchise distributors and exhibitors, the former going along to secure releasing rights to the product and the latter as a means of upping the flow of films. An abundance of paper work was involved but, according to Young, it worked out fine and he figures on tapping the same money sources again when deals with a company such as UA cannot be closed.

PARAMOUNT PROD'N PEAK

BIG PRODUCTIONS COMING

June Bustin' Out All Over With 7 Pix In Prod'n; 13 To Roll In Next 7 Months

In accelerating even the studio's current high of six films before the cameras, and in a move to continue its production upbeat, Paramount has scheduled 13 more pix for lensing within next seven months. Five of the films are slated to start in June, and with two of the pix currently shooting still before the cameras at that time, Par will hit an all-time production high with seven films in production simultaneously that month.

Pix starting in June will include "The Jim Piersall Story," starring Anthony Perkins with Alan Pakula producing and Robert Mulligan directing; "The Buster Keaton Story," starring Donald O'Connor with Robert Smith and Sidney Sheldon co-producing, latter also directs; "Flamenca," which Donald Siegal directs for producer Bruce Odlum; "Beau James," starring Bob Hope, a Melville Shavelson-Jack Rose production which Rose will produce and Shavelson direct; and Hal Wallis' "The Rainmaker," starring Katharine Hepburn and Burt Lancaster with Joseph Anthony directing.

Pix set for Fall are: "The Sons of Katie Elder," starring Alan Ladd with Samuel J. Briskin producing, to roll in August; "Papa's Delicate Condition," starring Fred Astaire with Robert E. Dolan the producer, and Alfred Hitchcock's "From Amongst the Dead," for September filming; "The Joker Is Wild," starring Frank Sinatra with Samuel J. Briskin producing, and Charles Vidor directing; "Joey," starring Anthony Perkins, with Alan Pakula producing; and an untitled Martin & Lewis comedy to be directed by Don McGuire; all three to roll in October; "Teacher's Pet," starring Clark Gable for Perlberg-Seaton; "The Red Nichols Story," starring Danny Kaye, a Shavelson and Rose production; latter two are to be lensed in November.

The six films now in production are "Funny Face," "The Loves of Omar Khayyam," "The Lonely Man," "The Maverick," "Gunfight at the OK Corral," and "Hollywood Or Bust." "Gunfight" and "Bust," Hal Wallis productions, will still be filming in June.

L.A. Okay; 'Las Vegas' Virile $64,000, 'Jester' Stout 48G, 'Mamie' Flaming 22G, 'UFO' Fast 14G, 'Holiday' 26G

Los Angeles, May 15.

Over-all firstrun biz in current frame, with Mother's Day generally boosting trade, is running substantially ahead of comparable week a year ago although new entries, mostly good to big, are not socko. Nifty $14,000 is seen for "Unidentified Flying Objects" on initial week at Fox Wilshire.

"Meet Me in Las Vegas" likely will land neat $12,000 in two theatres plus good $52,000 in one nabe and eight drive-ins. "Court Jester" shapes pleasing $12,000 in two houses plus $36,000 or near in two nabes and five ozoners. "Ballet Romeo and Juliet" is rated good $7,200 at Fine Arts.

"Quincannon, Frontier Scout" with "Crime Against Joe" is slight $7,000 in two locations. "Cinerama Holiday" and "Oklahoma" both posted very strong Mother's Day takes but other longruns are largely medium.

Estimates for This Week

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; $1-$1.50) —"Ballet Romeo and Juliet" (Indie). Good $7,200. Last week, "Patterns" (UA) (6th wk-3 days), under $1,000.

Fox Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; $1-$1.80) — "Unidentified Objects" (UA). Nifty $14,000. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (6th wk-6 days), $3,700.

Vogue, Rialto (FWC-Metropolitan) (885; 837; 80-$1.50) — "Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G). Lofty $12,000. Last week, with other units.

Orpheum, Iris (Metropolitan-FWC) (2,213; 816; 80-$1.25)— "Court Jester" (Par) and "Johnny O'Clock" (Col) (reissue). Pleasing $12,000. Last week, "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col) and "Jack Ketchum" (Col) (2d wk), $6,200.

Hillstreet, Fox Beverly (2,752; 1,334; 80-$1.50)—"Frontier Scout" (UA) and "Crime Against Joe" (UA). Slight $7,000. Last week, Hillstreet with Vogue, "Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Way Out" (RKO) (2d wk), $6,200.

'Vegas' Loud 13G, Prov; 'Dust' Dry 7G

Providence, May 15.

Very mild week with exception of the State's "Meet Me In Las Vegas," which is fine. Other stands are mild to fair. Sunday weather was hot and summery for first time this year. "Star in Dust" shapes fair in first Albee round.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 50-80)— "Star In Dust" (U) and "Day of Fury" (U). Fair $7,000 or near. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "Toughest Man Alive" (U), $8,000.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 60-80)— "Goodbye My Lady" (WB) and "Terror at Midnight" (Rep). Mild $4,000. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk), $10,500.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-90)— "Meet Me In Las Vegas" (M-G) and "Top Gun" (UA). Fine $13,000. Last week, "Comanche" (UA) and "Storm Fear" (UA), $8,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 50-80)—"Jubal" (Col). Lean $5,000. Last week, "Scarlet Hour" (Par) and "Night Number Came Up" (Indie), $4,000.

'MAMIE' MODEST 13G, HUB; 'GOODBYE' SAME

Boston, May 15.

A touch of summer is slowing action at the wickets this frame, with temperatures hitting near the 80-mark Sunday (13). Even highly regarded product is showing up badly. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" at the Metropolitan, "Never Say Goodbye" at Memorial and "Birds and Bees" at Paramount and Fenway combo all shape tepid. Holdovers fared poorly except for the art houses which still amazed. "Ladykillers" is sock in fifth stanza at the Kenmore.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; $1-$1.80)— "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (10th-final wk). Slow $4,000. Last week, $5,000.

Beacon (Beacon Hill) (678; 90-$1.25)—"Manon" (Indie) (2d wk). Slick $5,000. Last week, $7,000.

Cinerama (Cinerama Productions) (1,354; $1.20-$2.85)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (38th wk). Oke $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 60-$1)— "Touch and Go" (U) and "Helen Keller Story" (Indie) (4th wk). Oke $3,000. Last week, $4,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 60-$1)—

Heat Bops D. C. Albeit 'Bad Man' Stout $10,000; 'Mamie' Rugged $18,000

Washington, May 15.

First heat wave inevitably is taking its toll here currently. Some weak product also is hurting. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" at Loew's Palace bowed in at a lively pace. "Tribute to Bad Man," bolstered by the short, "Wedding in Monaco" at Loew's Columbia is well above average. "Patterns" at Lopert's Playhouse and "Hot Blood" at RKO Keith's both are very sluggish. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" is firm in second stanza at Capitol. "Cinerama Holiday" is up again in 31st week at the Warner.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 70-95) —"Maverick Queen" (Rep). Fair $4,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) (2d wk), $4,000.

Capitol (Loew) (3,434; 85-$1.10) —"Meet Me In Las Vegas" (M-G) (2d wk). Firm $16,000 after $22,000 for opener.

Columbia (Loew) (1,174; 70-95) —"Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) plus short, "Wedding in Monaco" (M-G). Lusty $10,000. Last week, "Comanche" (UA), $7,500.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 75-$1.10) —"Zanzabuku" (Rep) (2d wk). Mild $3,000 after $3,500 last week.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 75-$1)— "Hot Blood" (Col). Slight $6,500. Last week, "Kansas Raiders" (RKO) and "Tap Roots" (RKO), $7,000.

Metropolitan (SW) (1,200; 75-$1) —"Maverick Queen" (Rep). Fair $6,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col), $6,300.

Palace (Loew) (2,360; 75-$1.10)— "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Lively $18,000. Last week, "Hilda Crane" (20th), $14,000.

Playhouse (Lopert) (456; 75-$1.10) — "Patterns" (UA). Very weak $4,000. Last week, "Richard III" (Indie) (8th wk), $5,000.

Warner (SW) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40) —"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (31st wk). Several weekend group bookings holding this to firm $17,000 after slight dip last week to $16,000. Stays.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 90-$1.25) —"Picnic" (Col) (13th wk). Still smooth at $6,000 after $6,500, and stays.

Storm Warnings Cut Omaha; 'Space' Hep 6G

Omaha, May 15.

Frequent tornado warnings plus a dearth of strong new pix are taxing trade at downtown firstruns this week. "Threshold of Space" is standout, being rated fancy at the Omaha. "Mamie Stover," only other new entry, is just okay at Orpheum. "Meet Me in Las Vegas," being helped by the addition of "Wedding in Monaco" short, is good at the State and should hold a third.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,000; 75-$1)— "Miracle in Rain" (WB) and "Brain Machine" (RKO) (2d wk). Light $2,000. Last week, $3,800.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 50-75) —"Threshold of Space" (20th) and "Ghost Town" (UA). Neat $6,000, aided by fine crix. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col) and "Deep Blue Sea" (20th), $4,500 in 6 days.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,890; 70-90) — "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Okay $9,000. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk), $8,000 with 75-$1 scale.

State (Goldberg) (860; 80-$1.10) —"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $4,500. Last week, $7,200.

'Wonders' Wham 20G in Dim St. L.

St. Louis, May 15.

Biz still is in doldrums here as mercury soared to 91 over the weekend, sending thousands outdoors. "Jubal" shapes as best new pic, but it is barely fair at Loew's. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" was disappointing opening week at the Fox. "Serenade" looms nearly as slow at the St. Louis. "Seven Wonders of World" is cashing in on convention delegates and out-of-town patrons to hold socko at Ambassador.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (3d wk). Solid $20,000. Last week, $21,000.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 51-75)— "World Without End" (AA) and "Indestructible Man" (AA). Opened today (Tues.). Last week, "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) and "Crooked Web" (Col), fair $9,500.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 50-85)— "Jubal" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Black Ketchum" (Col), $7,500.

Missouri (F&M) (3,500; 51-75)— "Guys and Dolls" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $5,000 after $6,500 initial stanza.

Orpheum (Loew) (1,460; 50-85)— "Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Hot Blood" (Col) (2d wk). Oke $3,500 following $7,000 first frame.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 50-90)—"Goodbye My Lady" (WB) (2d wk). Nice $2,000 after $3,000 teeoff session.

Richmond (St. L. Amus.) (400; $1.10)—"Aida" (Indie). Good $3,000. Last week, "Sins of Borgias" (UA), $2,000.

St. Louis (St. L. Amus.) (4,000; 51-75)—"Serenade" (WB). Slow $7,000. Last week, "Man Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (3d wk), $7,500.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus.) (800; $1.10) — "Fan-Fan Tulip" (UA). Okay $1,000. Last week, "Umberto D" (Indie), $2,500.

K.C. Light But 'Mamie' Potent 14G; 'Planet' Fair 8G, 'Birds' Mild 6G

Kansas City, May 15.

Boxoffice trend is slow this week, although "Mamie Stover" in four Fox Midwest houses and "Forbidden Planet" at the Midland are making some impression. "Birds and Bees" looms light at the Paramount. "Serenade" is very moderate at the Missouri. Rain has been generous in the past fortnight, after a dry spring, and may help turn the tide.

Estimates for This Week

Glen (Dickinson) (700; 75-$1)— "Unmarried Mothers" (Indie). Playing to sex film followers, good $1,200. Last week, "Too Bad She's Bad" (Indie) (2d wk), $800.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 75-$1)— "Gaby" (M-G) (2d wk). Hearty $2,400, holds. Last week, $3,000.

Midland (Loew) (3,500; 60-80)— "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) and "Timetable" (UA). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Last Hunt" (M-G), and "It's a Dog's Life" (M-G), stayed 10 days but only skimpy $6,500.

Missouri (RKO) (2,585; 65-90)— "Serenade" (WB) and "Cash on Delivery" (RKO). Average $4,500. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Glory" (RKO). First half, and "Kiss Blood Off My Hands" (U) and "Johnny Stool Pigeon" (U) (reissues) second half, split week, got $4,000 with best play coming on oldies.

Paramount (United Par) (1,900; 70-90)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) "Scarlet Hour" (Par). Disappointing $6,000, but may hold. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) (2d wk), $4,500.

Roxy (Durwood) (879; 75-$1)— "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (3d wk). Holding strong at $4,000; goes again. Last week, $5,500.

Tower, Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (2,100; 2,043; 1,217; 700; 65-85) — "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) with "Track the Man Down" (Rep) added at Tower and Granada. Looks for strong $14,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "Day of Fury" (U), $12,000.

'Wonders' Mighty - 25G, Philly Ace

Philadelphia, May 15.

Record heat and Mother's Day threw biz for a loss over the weekend. Despite personals by George Gobel, star of pic, "Birds and Bees" was only passably good at Midtown and is being yanked after one across. "Seven Wonders of World" is city leader, with another smash session in third week at the Boyd.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (526; 99-$1.80)— "Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (16th wk). Okay $3,400. Last week, $3,500.

Boyd (SW) (1,430; $1.25-$2.60)— "Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (3d wk). Sock $25,000. Last week, same.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 75-$1.49)— "Hilda Crane" (20th) (2d wk). Lean $12,500. Last week, $13,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,250; 65-$1.35)—"Joe MacBeth" (Col). Weak $8,500. Last week, "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G), $11,000.

Mastbaum (SW) (4,370; 99-$1.49) —"Alexander Great" (UA) (2d wk). Oke $19,000. Last week, $30,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; 99-$1.49)—"Birds and Bees" (Par). Good $10,000 but more expected.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,250; 75-$1.49)—"Swan" (M-G) (5th wk). Good $11,000. Last week, $13,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 99-$1.49)— "Bold and Brave" (RKO). Timid $9,000. Last week, "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col) (2d wk), $9,200.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.49)— "Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G) (6th wk). Fair $7,500. Last week, $7,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 99-$1.80) —"Rose Tattoo" (Par) (16th wk). Fair $3,700. Last week, $3,800.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 75-$1.49)— "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk). Stout $13,000. Last week, $15,500.

Trans-Lux World (T-L) (604; 98-$1.50)—"Patterns" (UA). Light $3,400. Last week, "Too Bad She's Bad" (Indie) (3d wk), $2,000.

'Mamie' Mighty $20,000 In Frisco; 'Okla.' Great 22½G, 'Serenade' 10G, 2d

San Francisco, May 15.

"Revolt of Mamie Stover" looks brightest of newcomers here this round, with a rousing session at the Fox, giving house one of its best opening weeks in some time. "Oklahoma" spurted to a great total in 12th Coronet session. "Citizen Kane," out on reissue, is rated smart at bandbox Vogue. "Jubal" looks good at Paramount but "Patterns" is only lightweight at United Artists.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 80-$1)—"Tap Roots" (U) and "Kansas Raiders" (U). Oke $8,500. Last week, "Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Brain Machine" (RKO), $14,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)— "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) and "Wetbacks" (Indie). Rousing $20,000 or close. Last week, "Man Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk), $9,500.

Warfield (Loew) (2,656; 65-90)— "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) (2d wk). Okay $9,000. Last week, $18,500.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1)— "Jubal" (Col) and "Apache Ambush" (Col) good $15,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col) (2d wk), $10,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1-$1.25) —"Serenade" (WB) (2d wk). Nice $10,000 in 9 days. Last week, $19,000.

Orpheum (Cinerama Theater Calif.) (1,458; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (41st wk). Good $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 70-$1)—"Patterns" (UA) and "Manfish" (UA). Light $6,000 in

'Mamie' Light $8,000 in Mpls.; 'Planet' Sockeroo 7½G, 'Holiday' Oke 10G

Minneapolis, May 15.

Film houses had tough weekend opposition in the form of long delayed springlike weather and in Elvis Presley's personal appearance engagement which proved a terrific magnet for teenagers. A strong lineup of newcomers that includes "Revolt of Mamie Stover," "Bold and Brave," "Doctor at Sea" and "Forbidden Planet" is coming through moderately well under the circumstances. Holdovers comprise only "Cinerama Holiday" and "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" in their 42nd and third weeks, respectively.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (42nd wk). Okay $10,000. Last week, $9,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1)— "Forbidden Planet" (M-G). Strongest pic this house has had in some time. Great $8,000. Last week, "Female Jungle" (Indie) and "Oklahoma Woman" (Indie), $2,900.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (m.o.). Here after 16 big Radio City days. Still okay at $5,000. Last week, "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U), $3,500 at 65-85c.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-$1)— "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Terrific selling job done on this one but nothing seems to help at wickets with poor $8,000 likely. Last week, "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk), $12,000 in 9 days.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-$1)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO). Light $7,000. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col), $6,000.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,650; 65-85)— "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Vanishing American" (Rep). Not so stout $4,000. Last week, "Killer Is Loose" (UA) and "Broken Star" (UA), $3,500.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-$1)— "Gaby" (M-G). Femmes going for this teer-jerker but only sad $6,000 looms. Last week, "Comanche" (UA), $5,500.

World (Mann) (400; 75-$1.20)— "Doctor at Sea" (Rep). Good $4,000. Last week, "Diabolique" (UMPO) (4th wk), $4,200 in 9 days.

'Mamie' Lusty $25,000, Det.; 'Birds' Meek 15G, 'Alexander' 20th, 2d

Detroit, May 15.

Holdovers are synonymous with slack biz here this week. Of two newcomers, "Revolt of Mamie Stover" looks lusty at the Fox while "Birds and Bees" shapes sluggish at the Michigan. "Alexander the Great" is still socko in second round at the Madison. "Harder They Fall" continues big in second round at the Palms. "World Without End" is only fair at the Broadway-Capitol in second, Marathon holdovers, "Oklahoma" at United Artists, "I'll Cry Tomorrow" at Adams and "Cinerama Holiday" are steady.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; $1-$1.25)—"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) and "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO). Loud $25,000. Last week, "Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep), $14,500.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; $1-$1.25)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) and "Uranium Boom" (Rep). Slow $15,000. Last week, "Serenade" (WB) and "Crime Against Joe" (Indie), $16,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; $1-$1.25)— "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Ghost Train" (Indie) (2d wk). Still solid at $14,000. Last week, $25,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1-$1.25) —"Alexander Great" (UA) (2d wk). Smash $20,000. Last week, $28,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; $1-$1.25)—"World Without End" (AA) (2d wk). Fair $10,000. Last week, $17,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,667; $1.25-$2.75)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (13th wk). Stout $15,000. Last week, same.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; $1-$1.25) —"I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G) (10th wk). Steady $7,500. Last week, same.

Music Hall (Cinerama Productions) (1,194; $1.40-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (66th wk). Trim $15,000. Last week, ditto.

Chi Exhibs Moan Albeit 'Jubal' Hot $36,000, 'Mamie' Rousing 29G, 'Husband' OK 6G, 'Hunt' 18G, 2d

Chicago, May 15.

Chi first-run biz continues dull this frame, with most exhibs asking why and some blaming the product. Usual spring dip seems sharper than usual here, they claim.

"Jubal" leads the new entries with a hot $36,000 in first Woods round. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" heads for a neat $29,000 in same week at Oriental. "A Husband for Anna" and "Love in the City" combo shapes okay $6,000 in opener at the Monroe.

"Serenade" continues dull in second stanza at the Chicago while "Last Hunt" and "Naked Street" combo stays healthy in second Roosevelt round. "Birds and Bees" is disappointing in second at State-Lake.

"Never Say Goodbye" and "River Changes" double bill is rated good in second week at the Grand.

"Meet Me in Las Vegas" is still a winner in fourth Loop week. "The Swan" continues okay in fourth at the United Artists. "Oklahoma" is steady in the 20th at McVickers. "Cinerama Holiday" is sturdy in 48th week at the Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (480; 95)—"Murder in Girls' Dormitory" (Indie). Nice $4,200. Last week, subsequent-run.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB) (2d wk). Dull $21,000. Last week, $34,000.

Grand (Nomikos) (1,200; 98-$1.25)—"Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "River Changes" (WB) (2d wk). Good $6,000. Last week, $8,500.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.25)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (4th wk). Nifty $16,000. Last week, $18,000.

McVickers (JL&S) (1,580; $1.25-$3) — "Oklahoma" (Magna) (20th wk). Staunch $23,500. Last week, $23,000.

Monroe (Indie) (1,000; 67-87)—"A Husband for Anna" (IFE) and "Love in the City" (IFE). Okay $6,000. Last week, "Magic Fire" (Rep) (2d wk), $4,500.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 98-$1.25)—"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Strong $29,000. Last week, "Man Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk), $19,000.

Palace (Eitel) (1,484; $1.25-$3.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (48th wk). Level $23,500. Last week, $24,000.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,400; 65-98)—"Last Hunt" (M-G) and "Naked Street" (UA) (2d wk). Neat $18,000. Last week, $21,000.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,400; 98-$1.25)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) (2d wk). Thin $17,000. Last week, $19,000.

Surf (H&E Balaban) (685; 98)—"Ballet Romeo Juliet" (Tohan) (2d wk). Sock $5,800. Last week, $5,600.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 98-$1.25)—"The Swan" (M-G) (4th wk). Okay $16,000. Last week, $17,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,206; 98-$1.25)—"Jubal" (Col). Hefty $36,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col) (4th wk), $14,000.

World (Indie) (430; 98)—"Hamlet" (Indie) (2d wk). Slow $2,400. Last week, $3,000.

Ziegfeld (Davis) (430; 98)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (21st wk). Nice $3,000. Last week, $3,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Mamie' Fair 9G But Tops Indpls

Indianapolis, May 15.

Biz still is tepid at firstruns here this stanza, with outdoor activities getting the play from the fine spring weather. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" is top money film at the Indiana but it's only fair. "Bold and Brave," at the Circle, "Serenade" at Keith's and "Harder They Fall," at Loew's are all disappointing. However, "Serenade" looks best of lot comparatively.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 50-85)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Paris Follies '56" (AA). Slow $7,000. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Texas Lady" (RKO), $6,500.

'Mamie' Okay 12G, Cincy; 'Alex' 6½G

Cincinnati, May 15.

Total biz on the frontline this week shapes below par with continued obstacles from the weather current change from cool to hot. Winning splurge of Cincy Reds diverted lotsa baseball fans from cinemas to Crosley Field for wind-up of club's home stand. Out in front at firstruns this frame is "Revolt of Mamie Stover," looming okay at the big Albee. "Serenade" is mild at the Palace. "Never Say Goodbye" stacks up oke at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 84-$1.10)—"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Okay $12,000 or near. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA), $13,000.

Capitol (Ohio Cinema Corp) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie). Nearing last week's hefty $18,600.

'Autumn' Smash $20,000, Cleve.; 'Bad Man' Good 9G, 'Planet' Great 11G

Cleveland, May 15.

Pix with name stars are collecting the real coin here this round. Standout is "Autumn Leaves," new Joan Crawford pic, which shapes socko opening week at the Allen. "Tribute to Bad Man," with James Cagney starrer, looms good at the Stillman. "Forbidden Planet," with Walter Pidgeon in male lead, still is hotsy in second stanza at the State. "Body Snatchers" is rated okay at the Hipp.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (3,000; 70-$1)—"Autumn Leaves" (Col). Sock $20,000 or over. Last week, "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col) (2d wk), $8,000.

Hipp (Telem't) (3,700; 70-$1)—"Body Snatchers" (AA) and "Indestructive Man" (AA). Okay $13,000. Last week, "Jubal" (Col) (2d wk), $8,500.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; 70-$1)—"Killer is Loose" (UA). Oke $5,000. Last week, "Top Gun" (UA), same.

Palace (RKO) (3,285; 70-90)—"Viva Zapata" (20th) and "Night and City" (20th) (reissue). Stays only 3 days. Last week, "Hot Blood" (Col), mild $9,500.

Stillman (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1.25)—"Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G). Good $9,000. Last week, "Gaby" (M-G), $6,000.

Heat Melts B'way B.O.; 'Fall' Sock 35G, 'Mamie' Only 26G, 'Gaby' Lofty 14G, 'Wonders' Wham $65,000, 4th

Warmest weekend of year, with mercury getting up near 90 degrees on Sunday (13), is cutting into Broadway film business this stanza. However, some of new entries are doing okay, with additional preems set for later this session counted on to help improve the boxoffice.

Champ newcomer is "Harder They Fall," with a sock $35,000 at the Astor. Biggest disappointment is "Revolt of Mamie Stover" at the Capitol where it will be fortunate to get a slow $26,000 opening week. "Gaby" is heading for a big $14,000 or near in first stanza at the arty Trans-Lux.

"Nightmare" with vaudeville looks to get a good $15,000 this round at the Palace. "Forbidden Planet" likely will hold with a big $12,000 in second session at the Globe.

"The Swan" with stageshow continues to get the most coin with a good $125,000 probable in third week at the Music Hall. Pic stays a fourth week, "Hilda Crane" is off to a light $8,000 in second frame at the Victoria. "Birds and Bees" wound up a 10-day third week at the Paramount with okay $31,000.

"Seven Wonders of World" continues its remarkable pace in fourth stanza with a smash $65,800 at the Warner. It's now in the fifth week. "Oklahoma" is heading for a big $21,800 in current (31st) round at the Rivoli.

"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" with iceshow onstage looks fine $46,000 in present (5th) session at the Roxy. House replaces with "D-Day Sixth of June" and all-circus stageshow headed by Emmett Kelly May 29. "23 Paces to Baker St." with Ralph Slater on stage moves into the State Friday (17). "Godzilla" is winding its third week there with okay $11,500 in prospect.

Paramount Theatre is preeming "Man Who Knew Too Much" today (Wed.) after holding "Birds and Bees" 10 days in third session. This portion of run was comparatively tops of the three with $31,000. "While City Sleeps" is opening the same day at the Criterion after "The Conqueror" enjoyed a big six-week (plus five days) run. "Madame Butterfly" continued solid with $8,700 in third session at the Baronet.

"Jubal" dipped to mild $9,000 in third frame at the Mayfair. The Guild is bringing in "Battle of Gettysburg" and "Wedding in Monaco" tomorrow (Thurs.).

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Harder They Fall" (Col) (2d wk). First round ended last night (Tues.) soared to socko $35,000 or near. In ahead, "Meet Me Las Vegas" (M-G) (8th wk), $11,000.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Naked Night" (Times) (6th wk). Fifth stanza finished Sunday (13) was good $5,600 after $7,200 in fourth.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"Madame Butterfly" (IFE) (4th wk). Third session finished Monday (14) was solid $8,700. Second was $10,700.

Bijou (Lopert) (603; $1.50-$1.80)—"Richard III" (Indie) (10th wk). Ninth round ended Sunday (13) was $4,500 after $5,400 for eighth. The 11th week due to wind up run here.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th). Initial round winding tomorrow (Thurs.) not likely to top mild $26,000, very disappointing for opening week. In ahead, "Alexander Great" (UA) (6th wk-8 days), $18,500, for very big extended-run.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20) — "While City Sleeps" (RKO). Opens today (Wed.). In ahead, "Conqueror" (RKO) (7th wk-5 days), fair $8,500 after $13,000 in sixth full week for sock extended-run.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"French Can-Can" (UMPO) (5th wk). Fourth stanza concluded Monday (14) was fancy $7,800 after $9,000 in third.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Forbidden Planet" (M-G) (2d wk). Initial holdover week finishing up today (Wed.) looks to reach big $12,000. First was $18,500. Stays.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)—"My Seven Little Sins" (Indie) (3d wk). First holdover round ended Monday (14) was modest $3,600. Initial week was $5,000. "Battle of Gettysburg" (M-G) and "Wedding in Monaco" (M-G) combo opens tomorrow (Thurs.).

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Jubal" (Col) (4th wk). Third frame concluded Monday (4) was mild $9,000 after $11,500 for second week.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Lovers and Lollipops" (T-L) (5th wk). Fourth week ended yesterday (Tues.) was fancy $7,800 after $9,200 in third.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Nightmare" (UA) plus vaudeville. Week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like good $15,000. Last week, "Wetbacks" (Indie) and vaude, $14,500.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; $1-$2)—"Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Birds and Bees" (Par) (3d wk-10 days), okay $31,000, with numerous radio and tv personals by George Gobel, star of pic, in N. Y. area helping biz here. Also aided final day by sneak preview. Second week was $25,000.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Ballet Romeo and Juliet" (Tohan) (7th wk). Sixth round ended Sunday (13) was nice $6,200. Fifth was $6,800. "Proud and Beautiful" (Indie) opens May 28.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75) — "The Swan" (M-G) and stageshow (3d wk). Current session ending today (Wed.) is heading for good $125,000. Second was $135,000. Stays fourth. "Bhowani Junction" (M-G) is due to open May 24.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.25-$3)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (31st wk). Present week ending today (Wed.) likely will hit big $21,800. The 30th week was $23,500, being helped by U.S. Naval Air Station take over Wednesday (9) night. Stays through June and July at least.

Plaza (Brecher) (525; $1.25-$1.80)—"A Kid For 2 Farthings" (Lopert) (5th-final wk). Fourth round finished Monday (14) was neat $5,800. Third was $7,800. "Invitation To Dance" (M-G) opens May 22.

Roxy (Nat'l Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit"

Pitt Still Skids; 'City' Blah 8G But 'Comanche' 10G; 'Ladykillers' 4½G

Pittsburgh, May 15.

It's mighty grim all over town again this week, with biz continuing to droop everywhere. Only exceptions are "Seven Wonders of the World" at Warner and holdover of "The Ladykillers" at Guild, art naber. Otherwise, the pickings are slim mourners being the Stanley, where world preem of "While City Sleeps" is a bust, and Harris, which is doing nothing with second stanza of "Harder They Fall." At least "Comache" got enough over the weekend to insure a fairly decent showing.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1) — "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U). Will be lucky to grab $4,000. Last week, "Threshold of Space" (20th), same.

Guild (Green) (500; 65-$1) — "Ladykillers" (Cont) (2d wk). Biggest thing this nabe house has had since it became an arty theatre a year and a half ago. Trade so heavy the management has been using late shows Saturday nights. Big $4,500. Last week, $5,200, new record here.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 65-$1) — "Harder They Fall" (Col) (2d wk-5 days). Doesn't look like even $4,500. Last week, over $9,700 despite glowing notices.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 65-$1) — "Comanche" (UA). Got in a couple of good days before brutal notices were posted. Looks like $10,000, not bad considering state of biz here. Last week, "Birds and Bees" (Par), $9,500.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)—"Diabolique" (UMPO) (6th-final wk). Way off at $2,000 or less. Last week $3,000. No complaints for run's total.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 65-$1) — "While City Sleeps" (RKO). Had a good campaign tied in with world preem and lot of extra exploitation. But sad $8,000 looms. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Glory" (RKO), $4,500.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.25-$2.40) — "Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (4th wk). Holding up very well and advance keeps building, with show trains weekly set now through end of June. Happy $21,500. Last week, $23,000.

3 Major British Circuits, Top Indie Chains Decide to Up Admission Prices

London, May 15.

In a move to compensate for declining admissions, the three major theatre circuits as well as some of the leading independent chains have decided to increase admission prices.

The decision, still officially secret, was first taken on the initiative of Circuits Management Assn., the Rank company, controlling the Odeon and Gaumont circuits, and Associated British Cinemas. These three groups between them control upwards of 1,000 picture theatres.

Their initiative has, it is understood, also received the backing of the Essoldo circuit, which operates a group of more than 190 theatres. Other independent groups are expected to follow suit.

Apart from making good in part the decline in b.o. revenue from the drop in attendances, the projected admission hike will also help to redress the revenue gap created by the failure of the government to alleviate the burden of admission tax. It is understood that theatre prices will be raised by around 5c to 6c.

Argentine Legit Slump So Tough Some Theatres May Switch to Films

Buenos Aires, May 8.

In view of the good business being done by film theatres here, despite a severe polio epidemic, legit impresarios are puzzled by this fall's weak legit business. In all but very few cases, producers have had to change vehicles after only a few weeks. Some theatre leases may be relinquished earlier than planned. There is even talk of reconverting two legit houses, the Astral and Grand Splendid, into film theatres. Latter was converted to legit operation only three years ago.

This legit slump may be caused by less free-spending by the labor classes, who were encouraged to splurge on entertainment under the Peron dictatorship. But now they know they must increase production if the country is to emerge from financial chaos. Abundance of good film fare is another factor, with more and more houses equipped for C'Scope or VistaVision etc. and big spectacles. All this makes the cinema a bigger draw than many humdrum local legiters.

Another cause of the legit decline is reported to be the bad choice of plays by producers. Even the most expert impresarios have made bad gambles. For instance, wafy Giacomo Contento of the Politeama theatre, turned down a bid to lease the house by comedian Adolfo Stray, because the actor wanted 60% of the gross. Contento signed with actor Narciso Ibanez Menta who is only grossing around $6,250 per month, while Stray is bringing in about $12,500 monthly at the Apolo, a smaller theatre. Ibanez Menta is playing in Jean Paul Sartre's "Les Mains Sales."

'Plain and Fancy' Folding

Spanish-language version of "Plain and Fancy" has not proved a good bet for Francisco Gallo at the Astral largely because of poor casting. Show closes soon.

Tennessee Willams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," translated by Maria Luz Regas, and produced by returned exile Francesco Petrone at the Odeon, is one of the season's best legit grossers. The play has stood up on its own merits.

A tense skirmish has been going on at the Patagonia, where buxom leading-lady Malisa Zini has complained volubly for some time that her leading man Lautaro Murua, recruit from Chile, was over-enthusiastic in pushing her around in the course of Sartre's "La Putain Respectueuse." Finally Murua was declared to be suffering from lumbago, and he has been replaced by Fernando Siro.

Delia Garces has now opened in "Anastasia," Alberto de Zavalia's play "The Sword" having lasted only four weeks at the Smart.

"Anniversary Waltz" at the Empire, played by Ana Campoy and Jose Cibrian, is another of the few current successes. "Salzburg Marionettes," a Daniel Concert Management importation, has done sock business at the Casino.

Four Yank Name Acts Set for Cafe de Paris

London, May 8.

Cabaret dates at the Cafe de Paris have been agreed on for Constance Bennett, Nelson Eddy, Jeanette MacDonald and Hildegarde Neff. The negotiations were concluded by Donald Neville-Willing, the Cafe's general manager, on a recent trip to the U. S.

Actual dates of their openings will be determined by the length of Eartha Kitt's run. Miss Kitt opened last week for a regular four-week date with options. If those options are picked up, the other dates will be set accordingly.

Sees 700 British Cinemas Closing

Leeds, May 8.

The British cinema trade faces the prospect of between 700 and 1,000 cinemas having to close down during the next 12 months, according to J. X. Prendergast, a leading exhibitor here. He told the Leeds section of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. that the omission of even a men'ion of Entertainments Tax relief in the recent budget was "the biggest blow to the trade in 40 years."

It seemed to mean nothing to the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, he said, that the situation in the film business generally and the exhibiting side particularly was grimly serious. Yet the cinema industry had provided the national exchequer with millions of dollars in entertainment tax. Present scale of taxation had continued so long and increased so much that the small exhibs had no chance to build up reserves to meet the need for modernizing and improving their shows. They had hardly had a chance to build reserves for the present hard times.

The year 1957, said Prendergast, would be too late for many small and larger exhibs, and too late for the whole industry.

"We should continue to strive to get anything we can out of the committee stage of the budget," he added. "If we get nowhere then, we should remember we have a political voice with our screens. We have got something to lose and we save something to fight for."

Relief to the extent of $6,000,000 to $9,000,000 would save the majority of small cinemas from extinction.

See 'Dead Issue'

London, May 8.

Unanimous trade reaction is that the restoration of distributors' quota in any forthcoming legislation has become a dead issue. And last week the government indicated it was not proposing to seek a revision of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to make such a course possible.

Two of the key trade associations, by coming out firmly against its restoration, apparently have clearly decided the issue once and for all. The Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. surprised the trade by reversing earlier policy and opposing a distrib's quota. Producers had voiced their views a few days earlier. The distribs have yet to give their answer.

The only support for a distrib's quota is likely to come from some of the studio unions who regard its as an expedient for insuring a continuous flow of production. They are unlikely to carry enough weight to sway Board of Trade opinion in drafting new legislation.

PATACHOU MEX TV HIT

Mexico City, May 8.

Patachou made her first and only appearance on Mexican tv on the half-hour "Paris Memories" program over local station XEWTV on May 2 with her accustomed clicko.

She's doing progressively better on her six-week booking for $4,000 per at the swanky Versailles (Hotel del Prado) nitery here. Nitery is also paying her $3,000 travel costs.

Billy Daniels Now Due In Edinburgh July 2

Glasgow, May 8.

Billy Daniels, who cancelled his Scottish appearance because of his N. Y. court case, now will open at the Empire, Edinburgh, July 2, and at the Empire here on July 9.

He was originally skedded to open his current British tour at Glasgow April 23, but was unable to leave the U. S. in time. The Scot dates will now be added to the end of his tour.

4 Cleared of Pix Smuggling in Arg.

Buenos Aires, May 8.

Judge Abel Maria Reyna has now legally cleared film producers Luis and Angel Mentasti and Hugo del Carril on indictments of smuggling their pictures to Uruguay, under the deposed dictatorship. The indictments were drawn up by the National Investigating Committee set up by the Provisional Government to probe corruption under Peron. The Courts also cleared producer Luis Cesar Amadori of similar charges.

Acquittal was mainly due to a statement from the Customs Department as to the manner in which the film moguls exported their product, concluding that they could not be considered guilty of "criminal responsibility." Here is where the investigations are stymied, as the actual instigators of any "criminality," were the corrupt officials who invited citizens to engage with them in all sorts of corruption to defraud the State and the people.

Morally, it is not so easy to clear the indicted men, and there is a doubt as to how far they may be forgiven by the people. A few nights before his acquittal was made public, del Carril's car was stoned on arrival at a Santa Fe film-theatre for the preem of his film theatre for the preem of his latest picture, "Mas Alla del Olvi-

The Society of Motion Picture Directors has published a resolution of "admonition" against Amadori, censuring his conduct under the deposed regime (Amadori and the Mentasti brothers held a monopoly of newsreel production and exhibition under the Peron-Apold regime).

Almost simultaneously with the court verdicts, the Investigating Committee issued its report on the former Presidential Press Bureau, and the gigantic press-radio-film-TV network it set up to dominate public opinion, at a cost of 422 million pesos of public funds (around $10,550,000). A book was found in Press Secretary Apold's private safe describing the setup of Dr. Goebbels' organization. The Investigating Committee's report reveals how he controlled distribution of raw stock and thereby brought all but a few staunchly democratic producers into his net.

It also reveals that the famous Mar del Plata Film Festival in 1953 cost the State around $170,000, with the object of publicizing Peron abroad. The report details the gifts made to guest stars and their cost. Such gifts included free chips to play at the gaming tables, including an extra $5,000 debt run up at the Casino by one Hollywood actor.

AD SHORTS' COMEBACK HELPS ARG. EXHIBS

Buenos Aires, May 8.

Ad shorts, not exceeding 3 minutes of running time, have made a successful comeback in Argentine cinemas. Under the Peron regime Emelco's such shorts were banned, because the dictator and his Entertainment "Zar," Raul Apold, needed to create a monopoly for Argentina Sono-Film's newsreels.

Now these are back, helping cut cinema overhead. Kurt Lowe, who founded Emelco just prior to World War, recently launched his Filmlets in Ferraniacolor, which have gone well with advertisers.

Catrano Catrani is also editing a tinter, News Review, chiefly dealing with sports events. These are rolled in Ferraniacolor by a Kinescope process for exhibition in theatres with curved screens. The field for making documentaries and shorts is now open to everyone since the Sono-Film monopoly is ended.

Scot Equity Chief Sees Increase In Idle Actors as Threat to TV

Perth, May 8.

Rising unemployment among actors in Scot theatres might lead to the collapse of tv, radio and even the cinema, warned Alex McCrindle, Scot secretary of British Actors Equity Assn. He moved a resolution, which was passed, urging the abolishment of the entertainment tax on the living theatre.

McCrindle told delegates at the Scot Trades Union Congress: "It may be argued that people prefer watching television and films, and listening to the radio, to going to the theatre. But creative workers in these mediums are drawn from the theatre where they learn their trade. Without the theatre, it would become impossible to maintain the other branches of the entertainment industry."

He said 15% of British Equity's membership was unemployed for any average week throughout the year "a grave situation."

Of the 12 smaller-type theatres in Scotland operating three years ago, two now are closed, and four are opened for only two nights a week.

The development of the arts and entertainment was essential for the well-being of the people and the preservation of national culture, said McCrindle. It called for greater financial assistance from the Government and local authorities.

The Trades Union Congress here also pressed for the remission of the tax for cinemas employing live entertainment.

1,000 Seats Stolen From Tokyo Cinema

Tokyo, May 8.

Nearly 1,000 seats disappeared overnight from the recently-built Bungei-za cinema one night last week. House is located in one of Tokyo's busiest suburbs.

Workmen approached the night watchman of the house just before he closed after final show and said they had orders to remove the seats for repair. Also, that they would return them the next morning. The next day, owner Kan Misumi learned he was out about $3,000 worth of seats.

Aussie Pix Biz Continues Solid

Sydney, May 8.

Over the initial four months this year, the cinema boxoffice has maintained a smart pace. Circuit toppers see no biz let up as solid product continues to come out for distribution.

"Court Jester" (Par) is a sellout for its second week at the Prince Edward. "Rose Tattoo" (Par) has broken all house records at the Victory. "Richard III" (London) is doing boff biz at the Embassy in fourth stanza.

Others in the sock class are "Battle Cry" (WB), "The Beach" (Indie), "Marty" (UA), "The Swan" (M-G), "Tender Trap" (M-G), "Vanishing Prairie" (RKO). "Star Is Born" (WB) did well on its preem here.

'Thief' Fast in Melbourne

Melbourne, May 8.

Outstanding pic here is "To Catch a Thief" (Par) now in eighth week. Top lineup includes "To Paris With Love" (Rank), "The Bed" (Indie), "The Swan" (M-G), "Love Is Splendored Thing" (20th) and "To Hell and Back" (U).

'Rear Window' Adelaide Ace

Adelaide, May 8.

Paramount's "Rear Window" is the topper here. Other real b.o. draws "Doctor at Sea" (Rank), (Rank), "Marty" (UA) and "Swan" (M-G).

'Tattoo' Tops Brisbane

Brisbane, May 8.

"Rose Tattoo" (Par) had them lined up here. Other strong entries include "Marty" (UA), and "Swan" (M-G).

'Peter' Paces Perth

Perth, May 8.

"Man Called Peter" (20th) is pacing the field here. Others in solid coin include "Swan" (M-G), "Benny Goodman Story" (U) and "Women's Prison" (Col).

Ealing-Metro to Shoot Part of Pic in Aussie

Sydney, May 8.

Ealing-Metro are readying plans to film a portion of Aussie yarn, "Shiralee," here shortly. Producer Leslie Norman planes in this week to set locations while Peter Finch follows later to star in the Darcy Niland opus.

Following "Shiralee," story of an Aussie hobo, Ealing may then go ahead on the long considered "Robbery Under Arms."

British Film Earnings Continue to Decline

London, May 8.

British film earnings are continuing to slide. In the first nine months of the current Eady year since last August, rentals for native product in the domestic market have dipped to just over $11,420,000 compared with around $12,900,000 in the previous year.

Income to the Eady pool in the same nine-month period has amounted to approximately $4,835,000. This coin is being shared out among British production at a rate equivalent to 32% of gross earnings.

Par's Al Deane, On Aussie Holiday, Plugs '10 Commandments'

Although on a five-week vacation and visit to his former home in Australia, Albert Deane, director of Paramount publications with headquarters in N. Y., wound up working as advance man for "The 10 Commandments." He made eight radio broadcasts in Aussie, one in Indonesia and a 10th one in Hong Kong. Latter two were interviews at the airports. Deane had been scheduled for 20 more radio interviews but abandoned them when his wife, who went on the trip, put her foot down.

This was Deane's first trip back to Sydney in many years. He made the trek at this time so as to be home for his mother's birthday. Originally, he intended to spend the bulk of his trip resting but he wound up extolling the latest Cecil B. DeMille opus because asked about it on interviews. The advance bally came naturally since the picture's a forthcoming Paramount release.

Deane returned to N. Y. last week. He made the whole trip by plane.

SCHLESINGER, HARMEL JOIN ASSOC. PICTURES

London, May 8.

John Schlesinger and A. E. Harmel, both of whom are directors of the Schlesinger Organization, have joined the board of Associated Talking Pictures and its subsidiary company, Ealing Studios. The official announcement last week indicated that Barry Wieland would act as alternate director to John Schlesinger on the ATP board.

The Schlesinger Organization was indentified with Ealing in the production of "Ivory Hunters" and "West of Zanzibar." The production outfit recently closed a distribution deal with Metro, and its first picture under this contract is now rolling at the Metro-British Studios at Elstree.

Scot Pipe Band to Norway

Edinburgh, May 8.

A leading group of Scot bagpipers, the City of Edinburgh Police Pipe Band, will play and dance traditional Auld Lang Syne reels during the upcoming two-week Festival of Music and Drama at Bergen, Norway, which opens its fourth season May 25.

Per Aabel, Norwegian comedy actor, also will star in "Jean de France" at the National Theatre, Bergen.

SUGARED FILM 'EDUCATION'

DIETERLE TOUTS 'FACT' MATERIAL

By MIKE KAPLAN

Hollywood, May 15.

Truth is not only stranger than fiction, it's stronger at the box-office. That's the thesis of William Dieterle, veteran director who turned out some of the top fact-films in the latter 1930s when Hollywood first began experimenting with important biopix.

"The public is more interested now than ever," Dieterle believes. "The proof is the way book and magazine publishers have shifted their schedules. Best-selling non-fiction books are bigger than ever and the balance between fiction and non-fiction in most magazines has shifted drastically in the last few years to emphasize real experiences."

Dieterle emphasizes that the trend in the book and magazine field doesn't mean Hollywood should concentrate solely on fact stuff. However, he believes there should be more attention paid to good non-fiction as boxoffice possibilities.

Dieterle recently finished producing and directing "Magic Fire," based on the biography of Richard Wagner, and is currently working on "The Lives of Omar Khayyam" at Paramount. Despite the fact that he has gained considerable fame for top biopix like "Pasteur," "Zola" and "Magic Bullet," he has actually devoted only a small percentage of his directorial career to the non-fiction field. Now, he feels this percentage should be increased.

"There's a realism and an interest in non-fiction," he contends, "that few fiction writers can achieve. Stories like the sinking of the Titanic provide universal appeal and biographies of well-known people have the ingredients that almost guarantee a good reception."

After years of studying the field, Dieterle is convinced that the successful biopic is one which does not attempt to tell an entire life story. Rather, it singles out a dramatic incident toward which a story line is built.

"Zola," he points out, "was a great writer but most of his life was not exceptional. If we had wandered from yea to year in his career, we would have had no dramatic impact. But by concentrating on his involvement in the Dreyfus case, we had the basis for a good film.

"And more and more, Hollywood is realizing that there are incidents in the lives of great men—and events in history—which can provide the springboard for top pictures."

2 HELLINGER REISSUES FATTEN DCA SKED

Distributors Corp. of America, indie outfit headed by Fred Schwartz, has picked up reissue rights to "Brute Force" and "Naked City," both of which were produced by the late Mark Hellinger for Universal release.

"Force," made in 1947, was the first film in which Burt Lancaster had a prominent role.

Clift's Injury Slows Pic

Hollywood, May 15.

With exception of today's (Tuesday's) lensing involving Elizabeth Taylor, further shooting of Metro's "Raintree County" must be postponed two to three weeks pending Montgomery Clift's recovery from injuries in automobile crash Sunday morning. His eye injury is not as serious as first suggested by X-ray.

Pic, with $5,000,000 budget, has been shooting since April 2 with Clift in virtually every shot.

Actor was returning from dinner party at home of Miss Taylor and her husband Michael Wilding when his car struck pole on steep canyon downgrade.

PERLMUTTER'S 4TH DRIVE-IN

Hardtop Operator Expands in Outdoor Exhibition

Albany, May 15.

Jules Perlmutter has taken over a fourth drive-in, the Star-Lite near Watertown. He assumed the lease from Joseph G. Agresta, who still conducts the Orvis and Rialto conventional houses in Massena.

Perlmutter, now making physical changes at the Star-Lite, will reopen it May 25. A resident of Albany, he now operates the Ft. George Drive-in at Lake George Village, the Spar, outside Saratoga, and the Richmondville, near Cobleskill, plus hardtops in Albany, Watervliet, Mechanicville, Ballston Spa, Lake George Village and Whitehall.

Exclude Pre-1949 Antitrust Actions

Actions taking place prior to Dec. 30, 1949 were barred from a Buffalo theatre operator's antitrust suit against four Paramount-named corporations by Judge Thomas F. Murphy in N.Y. Federal Court last week. On the basis of the statute of limitations, claims prior to 1949 were omitted against Paramount Pictures, Buffalo-Paramount Corp., Paramount Film Distributing Corp., and American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres.

The Paramount-named firms are part of the action against eight majors filed by Konczakowski Theatres of Buffalo asking for damages totaling $31,200,000 for alleged antitrust violations against four theatres. In an action filed by a fifth Konczakowski theatre, Paramount Pictures and Paramount Film Distributing Corp. were completel dismisysed as defendants in a $900,000 suit.

Regal Becomes Hub Sales Rep for Trans-Lux Pix

Boston, May 15.

Regal Pictures Inc. of Boston was appointed this week to handle release of current Trans-Lux films. Negotiating for Trans-Lux were Richard Brandt, prexy, and George Roth. Regal Pictures was represented by Edward Ruff and Mack Farber.

Now ready for release is "Dance Little Lady," Technicolor film with Mai Zetterling and the Sadler Wells Ballet, and "Lovers and Lollipops" produced-directed by Morris Engel-Ruth Orkin.

Skedded for early July is "La Strada," Federico Fellini's film starring Anthony Quinn and Richard Basehart.

Ballyhooligans

Swinging 'Trapeze'

For its promotion of Hecht-Lancaster's "Trapeze," United Artists will advertise the Ed Sullivan show telecast of the picture's premiere with newspaper insertions in the 17 Trendex cities. It'll also plug the preem telecast with 75 tv spot announcements.

The 32 ad insertions will range from 100 to 225 lines. The 75 spots will run in prime adjacencies on the day of the show and the day before in CBS outlets in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago.

'Away All Boats'

Universal's promotional contribution is described as "the first global magazine advertising campaign ever launched for a motion picture." It consists of full-page, two-color ads in both the domestic and international editions of "Reader's Digest" for "Away All Boats." According to U's pub-ad chief David A. Lipton, these are the first film ads ever to appear in the domestic and overseas editions of the magazine.

Ads will run in 29 separate editions for distribution in 65 countries. Combined editions have a circulation of more than 18,000,000 and an estimated readership of 65,000,000.

'56 First Quarter Dividends Ahead

Washington, May 15.

Film industry dividends for the first quarter of 1956 ran slightly ahead of those for the first three months of last year. The March 1956 totals were also a little over those for March 1955.

During the first quarter of this year, the aggregrate melon cut for industry stockholders amounted to $7,033,000, compared with $6,860,000 for the same period of last year. This year's March distribution was $3,842,000; a year earlier, the figure was $3,796,000.

Loew's Inc. paid its stockholders $1,286,000 in March of both years. Paramount Pictures paid $1,094,000 this March and $1,108,000 last year. Fox cut its stockholders in for $1,058,000 both times. Consolidated Amusements, which paid nothing last year, divided $55,000 among its stockholders this March. The Roxy Theatre, in New York, paid $6,000 both times.

Stockholders of Universal Pix received $314,000 this March, a slight hike over last year's $309,000. The Allied Artists dividend was $21,000 each year; United Artists Theatres paid $8,000 each year.

'RICHARD III' STYLE

Canada's 'Oedipus Rex' Hopes For U. S. Video & Theatres

Toronto, May 15.

Film version of "Oedipus Rex" is budgeted at $400,000, according to David Coplan, managing director of Canadian Film Industries Ltd. here.—He's also a director of Oedipus Rex Productions Ltd., formed to make and market this film. Stratford Shakespearian Festival cast is headed by Douglas Campbell, Eleanor Stuart and Robert Goodier.

Coplan hopes to sell the film, both in Canada and the U. S., as a tv spectacular, a la "Richard III," while art-housing it generally.

PRODUCER-PUBLICISTS

Sheldon Reynolds, Nicole Milinaire On UA Exploitation Visit

Indie producer Sheldon Reynolds came in from Europe last week for a 10-day exploitation stint on his first theatrical picture, "Foreign Intrigue" based on tv series of same title. Feature stars Robert Mitchum. Filmed entirely in Europe, Reynolds wrote, directed and produced. United Artists will release.

Reynolds is accompanied by Nicole Milinaire, his associate producer. Following the New York stay, pair will hit the road on May 21 for a series of personal appearances.

Boxtop Admission Scheme Enlarges

The New York and Brooklyn Paramount Theatres have joined the "Movie-Tix" promotion whereby boxtops or labels of advertised products can be used for obtaining reduced theatre admissions.

Under the plan, developed by Cinema Diorama Advertisers Inc., a consumer can present labels or boxtops from the participating brands to signed-up theatres and receive in return $2 worth of admissions for $1.50.

In addition to the key Paramount houses, theatre participants include the following chains: Randforce, Prudential, Skouras, Stanley Warner and Walter Reade. The program is now centered around New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, but the sponsors are making plans to expand nationally in the next few weeks.

Brand products signed as accounts include Borden's Instant Coffee, Borden's Starlac, Good Luck Margarine, Hoffman's Beverages, Ipana Toothpaste, Scott's Facial Tissues, and Consolidated Cigar Sales Corp.

Friends, Yes, But U.S. and Britain Film Businesses Don't Work at It; Sir Tom O'Brien's Warning

Unless ways and means are found to discuss and work out mutual problems, Anglo-American film relations may, one day, "blow up." If this should happen, it'll be too late to attempt to reconcile differences between the two industries.

Opinion was expressed in New York by Sir Tom O'Brien, British M.P. and an influential labor leader who heads up Britain National Assn. of Theatrical & Kinematographic Employees. O'Brien was here primarily to attend last week's Variety Clubs International powwow at Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y.

O'Brien, always considered a friend of the U.S. film biz, deplored the lack of planned and continuous contact between the two industries and strongly plugged for the establishment of an Anglo-American Films Council through which, he felt, mounting problems could be discussed and - possibly-ironed out.

"There are so many areas of friction between us," O'Brien noted. "Right now, we're not really getting down to the problem. Individual American industry executives come to London, but they are interested primarily in their own company problems and not in the overall picture."

The big issues will have to be argued about, O'Brien observed. "even though it may hurt us. If this isn't done, we may wake up one day to find that, instead of having a quota on British films, we'll have one on American pictures. That stage may not have been reached yet, but a lot of pressures are at work, not only from within the industry but also from the Government side."

What Anglo-American film relations need is some "permanent order," O'Brien held. He disclosed that he planned to return in June or in the early autumn to meet with IATSE prexy Richard F. Walsh and Motion Picture Assn. of America topper Eric Johnston on a host of "mutual problems," ranging from American complaints about runaway production to British concerns over the sale of U.S. features to British tv. Council idea will be taken up again at that time.

"I warn the producers and distributors of English-language films that, if these pictures are to continue to be made and to maintain themselves in the world market, this can't be done with present methods. We need a council to examine our problems and, if necessary, to reeducate one another. It's either that, or the results will be harmful to all, and particularly to Britain."

O'Brien, who during his visit to the U. S. had spoken out strongly against a one-way trade between Britain and this country (with Hollywood getting the best of it), said that, as far as he could perceive, there hadn't been much progress made in accomplishing reciprocity, "but, on the other hand, things aren't any worse either."

He stressed his disagreement with those, both in the British industry and in Parliament, who'd legislate such reciprocity or would accomplish it possibly via a new Anglo-American film agreement. "Reciprocity can't be via state action," he emphasized.

NATURE WIDENS '7 BASIC PLOTS'

By FRED HIFT

Has Hollywood run out of variations on the seven basic plots?

Indie Irwin Allen, who releases through Warner Bros., thinks maybe the time is at hand, and he knows just what to do about it. He started solving the problem with "The Sea Around Us" and he's now following up with the as yet unreleased "The Animal World," which traces animal history and the animal world's relationship to man.

In Gotham last week, Allen said it was his aim to entertain and educate. "If we can sugarcoat a piece of information, and get them to like it, we've accomplished something," he maintained. In addition to that, he stressed the foreign sales potential of a film such as "The Animal World," in which no human appears.

"We are going to 'translate' the picture into 17 languages, even though there won't be any subtitles," Allen said. "It'll be understood everywhere. In an ordinary Hollywood picture, you have always the problem of getting overseas audiences to adjust to American relationships. Here we have a common language, an international langauge."

"Animal World," which runs featurelength and is in Technicolor, was three years in the making and is set for release at the end of June. Allen said he had insisted on a summer release, partly because of potential drive-in bookings and partly because school's out. His film, he said, was guaranteed to give audiences something that they couldn't get on tv.

His next project is "The Story of Mankind," based on the Hendrik Van Loon classic. It'll again be done in partnership with WB, even though Allen made it plain he considered it nobody's business just what his relationship with the company was. Nor did he think it pertinent to reveal the budget on his pictures.

Shooting "Animal World" was a tedious process. Prehistoric animal scenes, filmed with miniatures, consumed much time. For instance, it took 73 days to shoot a 14 minute sequence with the stop-frame cameras. Authenticity of the animals shown is vouched for by Dr. Charles Camp, a leading paleontologist.

Allen, who's reluctant to tag his feature a documentary, said he thought Hollywood's accent on authenticity—though costly—was well worth it. "People sense whether something is accurate or not," he said. "It adds to their enjoyment of a picture."

Since Hollywood is having such trouble finding proper stories, his new apporach was virtually foolproof, Allen thought. "This kind of film is virtually endless," he said, adding he might explore space in one of his upcoming pic. "This type picture creates an entirely new and different word-of-mouth," Allen emphasized.

NEIGHBORS OPPOSING LOEW TEXAS DRIVE-IN

Houston, May 15.

Loew's Inc. and Frank Sharp, developer of Sharpstown, are faced with a petition protesting the construction of a proposed 1,200-car capacity ozoner costing an estimated $250,000.

Sharpstown Civic Club is behind the protest which claims that such an "amusement center will destroy the residential character and lower property values."

troubled as the captain and Nader is convincing as his assured assistant. There is an especially standout bit by George Dunn as a Will Stockdale ("No Time For Sergeants") type of hillbilly character oblivious to the rules of Navy discipline.

"Away All Boats" does a good public relations job for the Navy, although it occasionally lapses into cliche heroics and embarrassing sentimentality. Holl.

Invitation to the Dance
(COLOR)

Tardy release of offbeat but interesting all-dance (no dialog) feature with Gene Kelly and group of ballet names. Good art house entry but nervous boxoffice bet generally.

Metro release of Arthur Freed production. Stars Gene Kelly, Tamara Toumanova, Igor Youskevitch, Claire Sombert, Carol Haney, Diana Adams, Belita. Direction and choreography by Kelly. Camera (Technicolor), F. A. Young and Joseph Ruttenberg; music, Andre Previn. Jacques Ibert, and Roger Eden adaptation of Rimsky-Korsokov; cartoon sequences by Fred Quimby, William Hanna and Joseph Barbera; editors, Raymond Poulton, Robert Watts, and Adrienne Fazan; music conducted by Previn, John Hollingsworth, and Johnny Green. Previewed in N.Y., May 2, '56. Running time, 93 MINS.

The Lover ..... Igor Youskevitch
The Loved ..... Claire Sombert
The Clown ..... Gene Kelly
"Ring Around the Rosy"
Gene Kelly, Igor Youskevitch, Tommy Rall, David Paltenghi, Claude Bessy, Tamara Toumanova, Diana Adams, Belita, Daphne Dale, Irving Davies.
"Sinbad the Sailor"
Scheherazade ..... Carol Haney
The Genie ..... David Kasday
Sinbad ..... Gene Kelly

"Invitation to the Dance," a full-length dance feature, is a bold and imaginative experiment in film-making. Through the medium of the dance alone, producer Arthur Freed and director-choreographer-performer Gene Kelly tell three separate stories. There is no dialog. Just ballet music, colorful costumes, and skillful photography. Admitting (1) some dull stretches and (2) that as a whole "Invication to the Dance" is a credit to the art of motion pictures the question remains, is it boxoffice?

M-Gs waiting almost a year before placing the picture in release indicates that is a "nervous" film. It'll attract the balletomanes and other devotees of the art houses, but its chances in general situations are slim. It'll take hard selling even in the specialized houses. The word-of-mouth comment will be favorable but not ecstatic. Broken up into separate units, individual sections of "Invitation" might prove appealing to general audiences as two-reelers.

Kelly has assembled a crew of outstanding hoofers, including such experts as Tamara Toumanova, Claire Sombert, Carol Haney, Diana Adams, Igor Youskevitch, and Belita. Standout sequence is the middle entry, "Ring Around the Rosy." Using the children's song and game as the teeoff, the dance story to Andre Previn's music follows in the fashion of "La Ronde" the career of a bracelet as it changes hands from husband to wife to artist to model to crooner and to others in the perennial game of love. The bracelet finally gets back to the wife, but the interim is sparked by fascinating dancing and imaginative photography.

The opening number is similar to the Pagliacci theme as the clown, played by Kelly, is frustrated in his unrequited love for the beautiful ballerina (Miss Sombert) who only has eyes for the fearless tightrope walker, played by Youskevitch. The final sequence is a combination of live action and animations, the cartoon sequences being provided by Fred Quimby, William Hanna and Joseph Barbera. Carol Haney is seen only briefly as Scheherazade in this number, titled "Sinbad the Sailor."

It follows the adventures of an American sailor who buys a magic lantern at an exotic bazaar. The genie in the person of moppet David Kasday guides the American tar through strange experiences. There are a number of sparkling dance routines as Kelly, as the American sailor, terps away with the cartoon characters, including dragons, a fairy princess, and menacing Arabian Night guards. Although outwardly the most creative of the three numbers, "Sinbad" tends to be overlong and repetitous.

Kelly appears in all three of the dance stories and he, along with the other terpers, come off excellently in the dance-pantomime offerings. The musical accompaniments by Jacques Ibert, Previn, and Roger Eden's adaptation of Rimsky-Korsakov contribute to the overall effect of the picture. The photography by F. A. Young and Joseph Ruttenberg are especially outstanding.

"Invitation to the Dance" is offbeat and questionable boxoffice, but Metro and Messrs. Kelly and Freed deserve considerable credit for attempting something unique and challenging. Holl.

23 Paces to Baker Street
(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Good suspense against colorful London background as blind playwright solves kidnapping, murder.

Hollywood, May 14.

20th-Fox release of Henry Ephron production. Stars Van Johnson, Vera Miles, Cecil Parker; features Patricia Laffan, Maurice Denham, Estelle Winwood, Liam Redmond, Isobel Elsom, Martin Benson, Natalie Norwick, Terence de Marney. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Screenplay, Nigel Balchin; based on novel "Warrant for X" by Philip MacDonald; camera (De Luxe Color), Milton Krasner; editor, James B. Clark; music, Leigh Harline. Previewed May 9, '56. Running time, 103 MINS.

Bell Boy ..... Robin Alaouf
Cabby ..... Yorke Sherwood

A Sherlock Holmes flavor and a London setting blend well with the suspense and melodramatics in "23 Paces to Baker Street." Albeit a bit long at 103 minutes, the film still stands up favorably as entertainment. It's a good bill-topper for regular runs, where the name of Van Johnson, coupled with Vera Miles' upcoming one, should bolster bookings.

Philip MacDonald's novel, "Warrant for X," has been put into excellent screen form by Nigel Balchin and the writing gives Henry Hathaway's direction a solid basis from which to develop a taut, suspenseful thriller. He manages plot situations and players ably. Producer Henry Ephron uses the London setting to advantage in staging the film. The o.o. given viewers of the Thames, fog-misted streets and buildings, etc., via sterling CinemaScope lensing in De Luxe Color by Milton Krasner, is a decided asset.

Johnson appears as a blind playwright who inadvertently overhears what to his dramatist mind is a dastardly kidnap plot. When the police give him a polite brush he sets out on his own, aided by Miss Miles, ex-fiancee he has refused to marry since his blindness, and Cecil Parker, his secretary-handyman. Suspense constantly mounts in the situations that ensue, climaxing with Johnson's finale fight in a dark room with the kidnapper-murderess.

Footage isn't all jangled nerves, since considerable humor is introduced through the bumblingly efficient character done to a fare-the-well by Parker. Johnson puts plenty of conviction into his blindman role, scoring strongly, and Miss Miles adds a refreshing charm as well as some sound histrionics. Seen favorably as assorted British characters are Patricia Laffan, Maurice Denham, Estelle Winwood, Liam Redmond, Isobel Elsom, Martin Benson, Natalie Norwick, Terence de Marney and others.

One of the suspense assets is the Leigh Harline music, conducted by Lionel Newman. It complements, instead of dominating, and as a result plays a strong part in furthering the pic's mood. All the technical credits are firstrate. Brog.

The Wedding in Monaco
(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Metro release of Cital Monaco with cooperation of Compagnie Francaise De Films production. A motion picture documentary by Jean Masson. Music, Daniel White. Previewed in N.Y., May 10, '56. Running time, 30 MINS.

Now that the hoopla and sideshow atmosphere has died down, Metro is offering a serious and dignified account of the "The Wedding in Monaco." The 30-minute short, produced by Cital Monaco with the cooperation of Compagnie Francaise de Films, has the blessings (and financial participation?) of Prince Ralnier III and is therefore the only "official" filmed account of the Ralnier-Grace Kelly nuptials.

The CinemaScope offering effectively captures the pomp of the occasion. It should make a good extra attraction for theatres which can fit the 30-minute running time into their schedules.

Film opens with an aerial tour of the tiny kingdom, focuses on the behind-the-scenes preparations for the wedding, the arrival and reception of Miss Kelly in Monaco, rehearsals and performances of stars of the Opera de Paris, the London Festival Ballet, and Tamara Toumanova and the chorus and orchestra of the Opera of Monte-Carlo, all on hand to provide special entertainment for the wedding guests. The C'Scope color lensing stands out in capturing Miss Kelly wandering about the castle and in recording the civil and religious wedding ceremonies. Camera follows the couple down to the Prince yacht as they take off on their honeymoon trip.

Jean Masson is credited with the production and Daniel White provided the music. Holl.

A prelude to the War Between States is fought out in this tinted actioner. The entertainment that results is sufficient to fit the not-too-demanding requirements of the general outdoor market. Toplining of Virginia Mayo, Robert Stack, Ruth Roman and Alex Nicol provides the Edmund Grainger production with some familiar names.

Under Jacques Tourneur's direction, the Lesser Samuels script based on the Robert Hardy Andrews novel unfolds at a regulation, but not always fast, pace. Performancewise, Stack and Miss Roman come off the best; she with a characterization that projects plenty of s.a. and he with a portrayal that gives the hero a showy, but not too much so, derring-do flavor. Miss Mayo isn't able to best script and directional handicaps to her character. Nicol, with not as much footage, comes off okay, as do Raymond Burr, flamboyant heavy, and Leo Gordon, rabid northern sympathizer.

Northern and Southern partisans are drawing up sides in early Denver and violence flares frequently while Stack, from the deep South, is making up his mind whether or not to aid Dixie in the abortive war that is to come. Meantime, he has a couple of lovelies to provide attractive distraction, as well as a going saloon, won handily at poker from Burr. Miss Mayo is an eastern lady who has set up a gown shop in frontier Denver and Miss Roman is the saloon entertainer who went along with the chips in the poker game. Windup finds Stack losing both gals, but saving his own skin when Nicol is revealed as a Union man on a secret mission. Sidebar issues of the plot sometimes cloud the main points and slow the pace occasionally.

Exteriors have pictorial value as lensed by William Snyder in Super-Scope with print by Technicolor and Leith Stevens' music plays its part well in the story-telling. Other technical effects are okay, too. Brog.

Rita Hayworth to Trinidad First Feature in 3 Years

Rita Hayworth returned from Europe yesterday (Tues.) aboard the Queen Elizabeth. She remains in New York until tomorrow (Thurs.) when she leave for Trinidad to appear in her first picture in three years, "Fire Down Below."

Warwick production for Columbia release also stars Robert Mitchum and Jack Lemmon. Mitchum and Lemmon left for Trinidad Friday (11).

Par-Troopers Battle-Cry: 'Weltner!'

Paramount's next sales drive is calendared for July 1 and a half-year run. The quota charts will operate in two 13-week spans, including two Paramount Weeks in the first and a "Booker-Salesman Month" in the second. Hugh Owen and Sidney Deneau, eastern and western sales chiefs, respectively, are tuning up to justify the designation "all-out."

Tag for the 26-weeks is "Paramount's Salute to George Weltner." That would be the world sales mogul of the company. It's being stressed that Weltner has 34 years on the time clock at Par.

Fabian Waits On Uncle Sam

possibility of taking over production reins at Warner Bros.

Brief statement put out by the Warners following signing of the deal said the Semenenko group planned to "continue to operate the company actively and aggressively under strong and competent management."

It's no secret that the plan is to have Fabian move in to run Warner Brothers, partly because of his feeling that the theatres generally, and Stanley-Warner particularly, need more and better product if they are to survive. Question is under what conditions the Justice Dept. will allow him to make the switch.

While he could divest himself of his holdings in Stanley-Warner (which also owns the Cinerama production-exhibition rights), the plan may still come a-cropper via his tieup with Fabian Enterprises, a corporation founded by Jacob H. Fabian, Fabian's father, who turned it over to his family.

It's been pointed out that, in the instance of the Skouras and National Theatres, the Government okayed the brothers to split up, with Spyros P. heading 20th-Fox and Charles taking over National Theatres. Should Fabian move into Warner Bros., it's expected that Sam Rosen, his brother-in-law, will take charge at Stanley-Warner.

Baird's Matching Coin

It's understood that Stanley-Warner is part of the Warner purchasing group, underwriting $6,000,000. Another $6,000,000 came from Semenenko and the amount was matched by David H. Baird, Wall Street broker and chairman of the finance committee of Stanley-Warner.

To complete the $22,000,000 figure, Fabian has loaned $3,000,000 of his personal money, with an option to purchase his respective shares provided the Justice Dept. approves his participation.

Semenenko has made it plain that, even if Fabian is out of the picture via Justice Dept. dictum, his group will obtain additional financing and run the company.

Apart from the investment angle, considerable speculation centers around the extent to which Washington will authorize a rapprochement between Stanley-Warner and the production company SW obtained a court okay to show its Cinerama productions exclusively in its own theatres in limited spots, but this situation isn't typical.

Faster Warners Seen

It's felt that, if Fabian gets the nod, he'll step up the Warner production pace considerably. Fabian has been in the forefront of those who have pressured for more films. He was one of the prime participants in Distributors Corp of America (in which he is said to have sunk — and partially lost — $1,000,000). There is speculation that Fabian may plead with the Justice Dept. for some sort of exclusive relationship with Warners that would favor the circuit, but it's generally felt that the Department wouldn't go for such an arrangement.

Stanley-Warner some time ago went to Washington asking permission to go into production. It's said to have gotten the green light from the antitrust division which did, however, say it wanted to see how this would work out in practice. Similar permission was granted to National Theatres for its Cinema-Miracle process.

The Warner deal came close on the heels of the earlier $21,000,000 deal which saw Lou Chesler's PRM Inc. purchase the negative rights to all the Warner features made prior to 1948. PRM, fronted by Eliot Hyman, will reissue the product to the theatres and sell it to tv. Semenenko group is planning to reinvest the resultant $21,000,000 in production. It may also divest itself of the Warner Bros. music publishing subid and the company's 37½% interest in the Associated British Pictures Corp. outfit which also operates a large chain of theatres in England:

Semenenko syndicate also may offer to buy out other Wanner shareholders at the same $27.50 price at which it purchased the Warner brothers' shares.

Latter deal involved a downpayment of $10,000,000. The Justice Dept. has until September to come up with its ruling re the Fabian status and the whole propriety of Stanley-Warner's relationship with the production company. This would include the Stanley-Warner $6,000,000 investment in Warner Bros., which would give the circuit directors on the board.

The Stanley-Warner circuit, having dropped a number of "bad" spots, has been operating profitably. Fabian management has gone for diversification, buying into International Latex Corp. among other things. Outfit also is said to be working on the acquisition of paper mills.

It's understood that, for the moment, the Warner setup will continue to operate without change. One report said Ben Kalmenson, WB sales v.p., might be upped to a top administrative spot, but this is now considered extremely unlikely and he may be affected by a later reorganization when the legalities are settled. Mort Blumenstock, WB ad-pub v.p., left the company two weeks ago, prior to the Semenenko takeover, and his spot hasn't been filled.

Lapkin on Rise

have to relinquish its hold on SW to free Fabian for the WB post. Should Fabian Enterprises so move, it rules out Rosen as a possibility for the top SW job.

That's where Lapkin enters the picture. Reports among sources close to the SW operation say that Lapkin may emerge as the president of Stanley Warner should Fabian decide to move to Warners by having Fabian Enterprises divest itself of its Stanley Warner holdings. However, if Fabian decides to maintain the Fabian Enterprises-Stanley Warner status quo, it's said that Lapkin may take on an important post with WB. Fabian may remain an investor in WB as long as he does not have operational control.

Lapkin, who has been involved in all the important Stanley Warner deals, holds the title of v.p. in charge of Cinerama production.

iginally produced by Kleinerman himself between 1910 and 1917, are completely owned by Kleinerman. Chaplin has no financial stake in the films and gets no benefits by virtue of their being sold. Joseph Smith, prez of Cinema-Vue, has been selling the shorts to television overseas but hasn't yet started selling them in the U. S. Some months ago, he was dickering a network deal when an anti-U. S. statement by Chaplin fouled that up. Since then, he's kept the pix on the shelf but is readying a new sales effort. Meanwhile, he's sold the pix for tv in all of Mexico, Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Cuba and Colombia and has a cable agreement for purchase of the pix for British television by English programmer Maurice Winnick.

Par Ups Ben Schectman

Benjamin Shectman, heretofore head of the contract department at the Paramount homeoffice, has been appointed head of the now-combined contract and playdate h.o. operations. Martin Friedman resigned recently as playdate supervisor.

Shectman has been with Par the past eight years.

Limit Honorary Variety Members; Broaden Staff, Plan Two Years Ahead on Conventions; Okay Short

By HY HOLLINGER

The 20th annual Variety Clubs International convention, a four-day affair of business and social meetings, came to a close Saturday (12) at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., with the presentation of the organization's Annual Humanitarian Award to Henry Ford II.

Convention, departing from its usual procedure, selected the site for its convention meetings for the next two years, picking New Orleans for 1957 and London for 1958.

Another highlight of the closing day's session was the naming of the annual Heart Award winners. For the first time in its history, the Variety Clubs International named two winners—the Las Vegas, Nev., and London, England, Tents sharing the award which is given annually to the Variety Tent which has done the best charitable work of the year. Special mention went to the Atlanta, Ga., Tent.

John H. Rowley, of Dallas, president of Rowley United Theatres, was elected chief barker. At 39, Rowley is the youngest man ever to be elected to the highest fraternal post in show business. He succeeds George Hoover, South Miami, Fla., who has been chief barker for the past two years. Hoover was made executive director of the organization. George Eby, Pittsburgh, was elected as first assistant chief barker. He now holds the post of second assistant chief barker. Eby is a financial officer of the John Harris Enterprises and also holds a financial post with WENS-TV, Pittsburgh, and with United Television.

Exhibitor (and tradepaper publisher) Edward Emanuel, Philadelphia, was elected second assistant chief barker; San Francisco theatreowner Rotus Harvey was named property master (secretary) and J. B. Dumestre Jr., Atlanta, president of Southeastern Theatre Equipment Co., dough guy (treasurer).

The award to Henry Ford II was presented to Dr. Robert Schmid of the Ford Foundation. Ford, unaware of the honor voted to him by newspaper editors throughout the country, was on the Coast attending to prior commitments. Sir Tom O'Brien, England's labor leader and a member of Parliament, made the presentation.

Some 1,300 show business delegates from Ireland, England, Canada and Mexico (Italy not represented at convention) as well as from the principal cities of the United States attended.

Nathan D. Golden, Washington, D. C., International Heart Chairman, reported during the convention that the Variety Clubs has spent about $2,700,000 during 1955 to aid underprivileged children. It was reported that 250,000 individuals were directly benefited and that since its inception in 1928 approximately $36,000,000 in charitable endeavors had been spent throughout the world where Variety Clubs are located.

The convention okayed an allotment of an additional $12,566 to shorts producer Ralph Staub to complete "Heart of Show Business," one-hour documentary film depicting the work of the Variety Clubs. Entire budget of the film will run about $30,000. Staub has completed most of it.

Upon completion, a major release will be sought, with Variety Clubs to get 50% of the profits after distribution and print costs, with 25% going to the International and 25% to be spread among the various Tents. Paramount, which holds the rights to the Variety Clubs story (having paid $50,000 for the rights some years ago) is down for 25% of the profits. However, Robert J. O'Donnell told the convention that he felt sure Par would waive these rights and that the coin rightfully belonged to Staub for his "tireless" efforts. Showmen gathered at the meeting assured Staub that efforts would be made to give the film widespread distribution.

The convention placed a limitation on honorary memberships, the consensus being that an unlimited policy might lead to the raising of the assessments of the individual Tents. No formal action was taken on limiting Variety Club membership to showmen, but the intent prevailed that the primary requisite for regular membership remain that a majority of annual income be derived from the amusement industry.

'WORLD' STURDY 6½G, L'VILLE; 'SUIT' 10G, 2D

Louisville, May 15.

Summer temperatures, and possibly the modest lure of the races at Churchill Downs, are factors in generally slow pace evident at downtown houses this week. "Man In Gray Flannel Suit" at the Rialto is holding up well in second round. Fresh dual bill "World Without End" and "Atomic Man" at the Mary Anderson looks strong. "Comanche" is sluggish at the State.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.) (United Artists) (1,000; 55-85) — "Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Houston Story" (Col) (2d wk). Mildish $3,500. First week, $8,000 in 8 days.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,100; 55-85) —"Killer Is Loose" (UA) and "Three Bad Sisters" (UA). Sluggish $3,500. Last week, "Birds and Bees" (Par) and "Toughest Man Alive" (Par), $5,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 55-85)—"World Without End" (AA) and "Atomic Man" (AA). Strong $6,500. Last week, "Goodbye, My Lady" (WB), $6,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 75c-$1)—"Man In Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (2d wk). Stout $10,000 after first week's $13,500.

State (United Artists) (3,000; 55-85)—"Comanche" (UA) and "Manfish" (UA). Medium $7,000. Last week, "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Uranium Boom" (Col), about same.

BOSTON

"Birds and Bees" (Par) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep). Mild $4,000. Last week, "Godzilla" (Indie) and "Stranger at Door" (Rep), $5,000.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; 85-$1.25) —"Ladykillers" (Cont) (5th wk). Rousing $7,000. Last week, $8,000.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Never Say Goodbye" (U) and "Day of Fury" (U). Placid $13,000. Last week, "Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Brain Machine" (RKO), $11,000.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,357; 75-$1.25)—"Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) and "Kettles in Ozarks" (UI). Tepid $13,000. Last week, "Serenade" (W) and "Scarlet Hour" (Par) (2d wk-6 days), $6,500.

Pilgrim (ATC) (2,100; 65-95)—Back to second-runs. Last week, "Over-Exposed" (Col) and "Hot Blood" (Col), $8,000.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 60-$1) —"Birds and Bees" (Par) and "When Gangland Strikes" (Rep). Tame $10,000. Last week, "Godzilla" (Indie) and "Stranger at Door" (Rep), $17,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,000; 65-$1) —"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $12,000. Last week, $17,000.

State (Loew) (3,000; 60-$1)—"Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (2d wk). Oke $6,000. Last week, $11,000 over hopes.

Rydge to London For Confabs With Rank

Sydney, May 8.

Norman B. Rydge, chairman of directors Greater Union Theatres, airs to London May 11 for confabs with J. Arthur Rank. Rydge will probably visit the U.S. on his return to his home base.

Greater Union Theatres, apart from the circuit operation, also runs the British Empire Films, distributors of Rank product here, National Theatres Supplies, a 16m division, Cinesound Productions and is also associated in a major tv setup here.

Code Revisers Meet

Code revision committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America held its second meeting in New York Monday night (14) under the chairmanship of MPAA prexy Eric Johnston.

Also attending the session was Geoffrey Shurlock, the Code Administrator. Shurlock yesterday (Tues.) addressed the Catholic Alumni group which acts as reviewer body for the Legion of Decency.

According to the MPAA, the Code committee had no set agenda and "just went over the various questions involved." No firm decisions were made, and none are expected for some time.

Committee includes, besides Johnston, Daniel T. O'Shea of RKO, Barney Balaban of Paramount and Abe Schneider of Columbia.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75) —"Godzilla" (Indie) (3d wk). Current frame finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for okay $11,500. Second was $15,000. "23 Paces To Baker St." (20th) with Ralph Slater onstage opens Friday (17).

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80)—"Ladykillers" (Cont) (13th wk). The 12th week ended Monday (14) was solid $6,400. The 11th week was $6,700. Continues on.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50)—"Gaby" (M-G). Initial session winding up today (Wed.) likely will hit big $14,500. Pic preemed Wednesday (9) night. In ahead, "Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (10th wk-5 days), $2,200 but finishing a very solid longrun.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$2) —"Hilda Crane" (20th) (3d wk). Second stanza finished last night (Tues.) was light $8,000 or near after $14,000, below hopes for first week.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) (1,600; $1.20-$3.50) — "7 Wonders of World" (Indie) (5th wk). Fourth session concluded Saturday (12) night was smash $56,800. The third was $57,600. Still selling out virtually every performance.

World (Times Films) (385; $1-$1.50)—"Last 10 Days" (Col) (6th wk). Fifth stanza ended yesterday (Tues.) was okay $3,000. Fourth was $3,200.

'Jubal' NSG at $9,000, Balto; 'Vegas' Fair 8G

Baltimore, May 15.

Lure of outdoors is outweighing the lure of the films here this week. "Jubal" is bright at the Hipp. "Birds and Bees" looks slim at the New. Fourth week of "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" is big at the Century. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" shapes sturdy at the Town.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,000; 50-$1.25)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (4th wk). Holding big at $10,500 after $14,000 for third.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1) —"Night Number Came Up" (Indie) (3d wk). Okay $2,000 following $2,500 in second.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; $1.24-$2.50)—"Oklahoma" (Magna) (11th wk). Still potent at $15,000 after $16,000 for 10th week.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,100; 50-$1)—"Jubal" (Col). NSG at $9,000. Last week, "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G), $7,000.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 50-$1.25) —"Conqueror" (RKO) (7th wk). Still pleasing at $4,000 after $4,500 for sixth.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 50-$1) —"Birds and Bees" (Par). Dull $5,500. Last week, "Threshold of Space" (20th), $5,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (410; 50-$1)—"Doctor at Sea" (Rep) (5th-final wk). Mild $3,000 after $3,500 in fourth.

Stanley (WB) (3,200; 35-$1)—"Backlash" (U). Modest $5,000. Last week, "Bold and Brave" (RKO), same.

Town (Rappaport) (1,400; 50-$1.25—"Meet Me In Las Vegas" (M-G). Fair at $8,000. Last week, "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col), $7,000.

Delivery" (RKO) (2d wk), $3,200 in 6 days.

Music Box (Hamrick) (850; 90-$1.25)—"Ladykillers" (Cont). Trim $5,000 or near. Last week, "Diabolique" (UMPO) (4th wk), $2,800.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; 90-$1.25)—"Serenade" (WB) and "Day of Fury" (U). Blah $6,000 or less. Last week, "Alexander Great" (UA) (2d wk-4 days), $4,000.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,700; 90-$1.25)—"Bold and Brave" (RKO) and "Terror at Midnight" (Rep). Dim $5,000. Last week, "Tribute To Bad Man" (M-G) and "Steel Jungle" (WB), $5,300.

Paramount (Evergreen) (3,039; 90-$1.25)—"Birds and Bees" (Par) and "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO). Poor $7,000. Last week, "Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk-4 days), $3,600.

'Fall' Okay $10,500 In Buff.; 'Mamie' Fat 12G

Buffalo, May 15.

Not much exciting here this week which is marked by disappointing showings by several new entries. However, "Harder They Fall" at Lafayette shapes okay and "Revolt of Mamie Stover" is heading for a snappy session at Century. "Birds and Bees" looms moderate at Paramount while "Patterns" is dull at the Buffalo.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)—"Patterns" (UA) and "Killer is Loose" (UA). Drab $7,500 in 6 days. Last week, "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) and "Manfish" (UA), $11,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 60-80)—"Birds and Bees" (Par). Fair $10,500. Last week, "Maverick Queen" (Rep) and "Scarlet Hour" (Par), ditto.

Center (Par) (2,000; 50-80)—"Distant Drums" (WB) and "Dallas" (WB) (reissues). So-so $8,000. Last week, "Hilda Crane" (20th) and "Forbidden Cargo" (Indie), $10,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 50-80) —"Harder They Fall" (Col). Okay $10,500. Last week, "Rock Round Clock" (Col) and "Ketcham Desperado" (Col), $11,000.

Century (Buhawk) (2,000; 60-85) —"Revolt Mamie Stover" (20th). Snappy $12,000. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Brain Machine" (RKO), $6,800.

Teck (Cinema Products) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40) "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (15th wk). Big $14,000. Last week, same.

LOS ANGELES

M-G-M, THE HOTTEST COMPANY

Recent Ratings By N. Y. Critics; Zinsser Out-Toughs Bos Crowther; Mirror's Justin Gilbert Curbs Joy

New York critics, who frequently tend to set the tone of film reception throughout the country, weren't particularly kind to the product during the past month nor, on the other hand, were they unduly tough.

Survey of 15 of the features released by the majors in recent weeks showed the scribes on the seven metropolitan morning and afternoon papers inclined to rate most of the product either good or fair. At the same time, a surprisingly large number of reviews—18 in all—fell in o the "poor" category.

Breakdown shows that of the total number of reviews, there were 12 "excellent" and eight "good to excellent" notices; total of 26 said the pictures were "good" and five "fair to good." There were 25 that drew just "fair" notices.

Among the pictures reviewed in the period were "Man in the Gray Flannel Suit," "Hilda Crane," "The Swan," "The Harder They Fall," "Star of India," "Revolt of Mamie Stover," etc.

Toughest reviewer around these days appears to be Bill Zinsser on the Herald Tribune who, of the 15, wrote nine reviews that rated pix poor, fair or poor-to-fair. Next comes the Times' Bosley Crowther with four "poor" reviews (against Zinsser's five) and six "fair" or "poor-to-fair" (against Zinsser's four). Mirror reviewer, Justin Gilbert, also has been curbing his praises. He rated two poor and four fair. Telegram's Alton Cook came up with four poor and an equal number of "fair" reviews.

Unquestionably the kindest reviewer around is Rose Pelswick on the Journal-American, who rarely does more than synopsize. She found eight of the 15 "good" and another three "Excellent" or "Good-to-excellent." None were "poor" in her book. Post's Archer Winston also couldn't find any "poor" pix out of the batch, but called seven "fair" or just "poor-to-fair" in addition to four "good" reviews and three "excellent" or just below it.

Daily News' Kate Cameron spread her reviews evenly over all categories, but seems to have toughened up some. She rated five "poor" or "fair" but found six "good" or just below. Another three films got four stars and one drew three-and-a-half.

On the two top papers, the Times and Tribune, the reviewers could find only two of the 15 that were "excellent" and the Trib threw in another that fell into the "good-to-excellent" class. Times found one picture "good" and the Trib two.

On the Mirror, Gilbert only found one picture excellent and one "good-to-excellent." Three reviewers were "good." Tele rated two "excellent," one "good-to-excellent" and another four "good."

Be calm, Friend

A good friend and customer of ours likes mystery novels. He wrote us about reading a gripping high-society one whose gentleman-sleuth hero, dressing himself carefully for the denouement, "selected his favorite Princess Mara tie." Our friend was disturbed by the novelist's reluctance to give us our right name, while eager to establish his hero's good taste. We are not a whit disturbed. Countess Mara Cravats are distinguished by more than a famed name that every gentleman knows and never forgets. $7.50, $8.50, $10.00, $15.00, and more. Bow ties (clips, and to tie) $2.50 to $5.00. The Spring tie for you waits for you at 338 Park Avenue, and PLaza 9-2488.

Gotham Reaction: Cannes Films Dull, Awards So What?

Independent distribs in New York last week expressed disappointment over the comparative lack of interesting films at the Cannes festival and the scarcity of information emanating from the fest.

At the major companies, handing out of a single prize to the Americans—to Susan Hayward for "I'll Cry Tomorrow"—also wasn't greeted with much enthusiasm, even though the companies with entries at Cannes at least have the consolation of an extra permit.

Under the International festival rules, quota countries issue an extra license for each picture officially participating at the event. Earnings from such films also are supposed to be freely remittable.

It had been expected that 20th-Fox's "The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit," for which Cannes fest authorities had made a big pitch, would garner some sort of prize. Not only were a number of 20th top execs on the spot, but 20th had refused to make the film available for nomination by the Motion Picture Export Assn. and had wrangled its own invite from Cannes.

This year's Cannes winner, "The Silent World," an underwater adventure picture with documentary overtones, probably will be released in the U. S. by Columbia. Deal is said to be in the closing stages.

Indies said they couldn't understand that the French Film Office in New York hadn't done more to keep the press informed of the goings-on at Cannes. Newspaper coverage of the event—short of the arrival of the American stars, etc.—this year has been scantier than ever. Joseph Maternati, head of the French film center, is in Cannes. There hasn't been a word from him. In fact, the office has yet to send out a regular news release.

"This would have been an occasion where this French service might have been of use to us," commented an importer.

Up Berding at Info Agenc

Washington, May 15.

Andrew H. Berding last week was promoted to deputy director (for policy and plans) of the U.S. Information Agency under Theodore G. Streibert.

Streibert revealed that Abbott Washburn will continue as senior deputy director of USIA.

Other UFA Angles

Berlin, May 15.

Following sale of the Bavaria and the UFA compoments, the UFA liquidation committee still has some work to do. Latter consists of the sale of the studios at Wiesbaden (U. S. Zone of Germany), the branch-establishments "Terra" and "Tobis," Berlin's Boheme-Verlag (a music publishing firm), a film credit bank as well as some minor enterprises.

Capital of the former UFA-Treu Gefolgschaftshilfe (a social organization of former UFA employees) reportedly will face a devaluation of 1:10, which means that this organization will have only a fund of DM 3,500,000 (about $850,000) at its disposal.

Germans Dream Of Restored Prestige Via Hypoed UFA

Berlin, May 15.

Sale of the UFA studios at Berlin-Templehof has aroused hopes here that Berlin will become Germany's film metropolis again as before 1945 when about 80% of all German features were made locally.

It's expected a new and modern UFA town will arise at Marienfelde, outside the city but still in the US sector since the old UFA towns is at Babelsbergs in the Soviet Zone. Some 40,000,000 Deutschmarks, nearly $10,000,000, is earmarked for the new enterprise.

It's also hoped that the forthcoming features under the new banner will register a general quality upbeat and be able to compete internationally; this should help restore Germany's wilted prestige as a film producer.

Position of the German film in foreign lands has "slightly improved" during the past couple of years. As to statistics concerning the year 1954 and revealed just now by the Assn. of German (West) film producers, W-German films grossed DM 12,117,000 (about $2,900,000) during that period and scored another upbeat of about 25% during the next (1955) year.

Austria continues the best foreign outlet for German films with DM 3,915,000 ($950,000), followed by the Saar (DM 2,047,000 or $500,000); Switzerland (DM 1,570,000 or $400,000); France (DM 1,152,000 or $400,000; the Netherlands, Belgium, etc.

Shea Estate Executors Awarded Counsel Fees For Defending Selves

Two executors of the estate of the late M. A. Shea who successfully defended charges of mismanagement have been awarded counsel fees by Bronx, N. Y., Surrogate Christopher McGrath. Charges were brought by Gerald Shea against executors Edward C. Raftery and Edmund C. Grainger. M. A. Shea founded the circuit bearing his name.

Surrogate McGrath signed an order allowing O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, attorneys for Edward C. Raftery, the sum of $24,000 for representing Raftery and Grainger before the N. Y. Appellate Division and Court of Appeals. McGrath also granted Raftery costs amounting to $512 and Grainger $560.

O'Brien's Slant on TV Characters for Theatres

Hollywood, May 15.

As long as they're cast in good films, tv characters should have no qualms about making the transition to the big screen, says actor Hugh O'Brien, tv's "Wyatt Earp," who's crystal-balling his own future.

O'Brien has a piece of his first feature starrer, "Brass Legend," produced by Herman Cohen and Robert Goldstein for United Artists release. He'll do extensive p.a.s with the pic. Also, some 150 000 persons who sent him fan mail on the tv show will get post cards.

Picture 'Diary' as Text Book

Hollywood, May 15.

Metro is mapping deal for an invasion of schoolrooms as exploitation for film. Deal with Culver City Board of Education calls for text book on making of motion pix to be prepared by Julia Fenderson of Culver City school system for use on junior high level.

Illustrated text will deal with making of "Raintree County," lot's most expensive picture which carries budget of around $5,000,000. Each chapter in book will treat a different Metro studio department, tracing making of film from conception to completion.

Bob O'Donnell Sanguine on Tax

Expects Favorable Committee Report—But Industry Must Fight—No Walk-In

Robert J. O'Donnell, head of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations' tax committee, expects the House Ways and Means Committee to report favorably on the industry's plea for elimination of the federal admissions tax. Tax bill, which among other revenue recommendations provides for theatres, is expected to emerge from the committee on May. 21, according to O'Donnell.

The Interstate topper, in from his Texas headquarters for the Variety Clubs convention in New York, is generally optimistic about the industry's chances of gaining tax relief. He appears to feel that the picture business is "in a strong position in Congress" and that if the bill surmounts the Senate Finance Committee and the Senate "the President will treat it kindly." O'Donnell bases his view on the anticipated presidential action on President Eisenhower's recent statement that unquestionably there are many industries carrying a burden from which they should have relief.

The industry has already hurdled the Forand Committee, the House group which investigates and approves tax bills. In the House Ways & Means Committee, which studies the Forand Committee's recommendations, 20 out of 25 members are said to be in favor of granting relief to theatres. O'Donnell said that he expected a favorable vote in the House once the bill emerges from the Ways and Means Committee.

He warned, however, that the industry still faced a tough fight and that the cooperation of all exhibitors was needed to contact home state senators.

O'Donnell conferred yesterday (Tues.) with Robert Coyne, COMPO's general counsel. He will be in Washington next week when the Senate Small Business Committee hears distribution executives tell their side of the story in the exhib-distrib trade practices battle. When the exhibitors testified early in April, O'Donnell made a pitch for tax relief.

Kahn-Arnstein B.R. for Ratoff's 20th-Fox Indie

Stanley Kahn, Wall Street broker, and Dan Arnstein, the taxicab tycoon who is associated with Kahn in his brokerage, are Gregory Ratoff's bankrollers in the latter's indie production of "The 5th Season" which will mark Eddie Cantor's comeback in pictures. Cantor will do the Menasha Skulnik Broadway original role.

Ratoff takes off in June with leading man Dan Dailey and a femme star yet to be selected (Rita Gam had to bow out because of physical exhaustion) to do 10 days of shooting in Paris. Locale has been shifted there, from the original Florida background of one of the scenes. The haut couture house of Pierre Balmain is being tied into the film.

Major portion of the comedian's segment revolving around Cantor will be shot in New York in mid-July. Ratoff has set up a 20th-Fox release.

$6,000,000 Billings Up For Grabs

Billings involving the two major Kudner agency tv accounts are up for grabs as result of Buick's agreement to call it quits on the Jackie Gleason "Honeymooners" despite the fact that the auto company still had another one-year firm contract on the show. (See story on Page 27.)

Only several weeks ago Texaco, also out of the Kudner shop, decided to drop Jimmy Durante at the expiration of the current cycle. Time and talent, the two-way Gleason-Durante spread approximated $6,000,000 a year. In both instances, too, the Kudner clients are relinquishing their respective Saturday night time periods on CBS and NBC, with possibility that Buick may pour all the tv coin into spot buying.

Swezey to Buckley & McGrath: 'Boys, Catch Up On Your Trends'

New Orleans.

Editor, VARIETY:

Away with all these personal quips and quibbles. Had my friends Messrs. Buckley and McGrath taken the trouble to analyze a full text, the real import of my remarks in Boston might not have eluded them.

I am deeply concerned as I hope every one is who has any sincere interest in radio with the quite apparent diminution in the variety, quality and audience appeal of radio programming at both the local and network level.

If the "open sesame" to public acceptance and prosperous operation has dwindled to an exclusive news and music pattern, why should any station labor to diversify its program formats or attempt to accommodate—at a sacrifice of ratings and revenue — religious, educational, discussion and various types of programs which have historically been regarded as a radio station's good citizen contribution to the community?

No, let's be smart. Let us—all 3,000 of us—give 'em news and music till it comes out of their ears. Or instead, gentlemen, should we just give radio a double dose of strychnine and put it gently to rest?

I suppose that one of our real problems is that so many able broadcasters like Messrs. Buckley and McGrath are so completely engrossed in running their own businesses that they are honestly unaware of the trends in the industry. One would think they might heed at least a few of its sincere and knowledgeable critics like Jack Gould, who in a feature article entitled "Remember Radio?" which appeared in the New York Times

NBC Woos Welk

Hollywood, May 15.

NBC would like to have Lawrence Welk over on its network, and has started moving in on Dodge, the bandman's ABC-TV sponsor. Pat Weaver is now in Detroit, with speculation abroad he's talking to Dodge about Welk.

Weaver would like to have both Welk shows on the net, but would settle for one. Understand Weaver is prepared to clear as many stations as Dodge would want, more than are now available on ABC.

ABC-TV 'Gee Whiz' Sat. Night Status, Tops Spec & CBS

ABC-TV for the first time topped all the competition for the entire 90-minute run of a spectacular playing against it. Happened Saturday night (12), when the ABC Lawrence Welk-"Chance of a Lifetime" combo outpointed the Max Liebman "Music of Gershwin" spec on NBC and the combined "Two for the Money"-"It's Always Jan"-"Gunsmoke" outings on CBS. ABC average for the 90 minutes was 15.2 on the overnight Trendex, CBS had a 13.6 and Liebman a 13.1. Breakdown showed 17.4 for Welk, 13.3 for Liebman and 13.1 for "Money" at 9; 19.5 for Welk, 13.0 Liebman and 11.4 "Jan" at 9:30; and 8.7 for "Chance," 12.9 Liebman and 16.2 "Gunsmoke" at 10.

Earlier, Perry Como topped Jackie Gleason's "The Honeymooners" for the first time since Gleason switched from 8:30 to 8 p.m. to get an even start with Como. Singer's-17.9 topped "Honeymooners'" 16.6, while it did a runaway on the 8:30 "Stage Show," 24.6 to 11.5. Hour averaged out to 21.3 for Como, 14.1 for Gleason Enterprises. ABC's "Ozark Jubilee" averaged 3.6 on the hour. Leading in, "Big Surprise" at 7:30 had a 12.3 for NBC, compared with "Beat the Clock's" 8.8 on Columbia and "Ozark's" 2.2 on ABC.

Godfrey's 'I Shall Return'

With Arthur Godfrey having finally settled his in-again-out-again Wednesday night status on CBS-TV with an imperious "I shall return," the network is faced with a flock of problems, none of them as yet solved. First is the matter of a new format for next fall, since Godfrey has indicated he won't bring his morning "Godfrey Time" cast back with him and wants to take it easy on rehearsals as well. Second is the matter of sponsorship for the fall showcaser. Third is a summer replacement.

Matter of a format is way up in the air. Sponsorwise, the web thinks all four of Godfrey's current 8-9 p.m. "Friends" will return, though nothing has been signed. Quartet currently comprises Toni, CBS-Columbia, Kellogg and Pillsbury. As to a summer replacement, this would be an eight-week stand, starting in July, and nothing's been set yet.

Eastman Kodak Rides With 'Ozzie'

Eastman Kodak, which over the past two seasons has tried its television hand at new properties and stumbled with both, is now pencilled in for a tried-and-tested show. It's bought full sponsorship of "Ozzie & Harriet" for next fall in its ABC-TV Wednesday night slot at 9. Deal gives the EK agency, J. Walter Thompson, the full Wednesday 9-10 hour on ABC, since JWT also locked up "Ford Theatre" in the 9:30 time, shifting that from NBC. The agency conflict is now in full bloom, since Thompson produces its own "Kraft Theatre" Wednesdays from 9 to 10 on NBC.

Deal gives "Ozzie" a new lease on life, since it had been ankled by its three current bankrollers, Hotpoint, Quaker Oats and Norwich Pharmacal, and had already been dislocated from its Friday at 8 post to make way for "The Adventures of Jim Bowie." As to the Ford switchover, dictated by the slotting of Tennessee Ernie Ford in the longtime NBC Thursday-at-9:30 "Ford Theatre" slot, ABC wrapped up its deal for the switch at the same time it set "Ozzie" with Kodak. Film company, in its two outings on NBC, flopped with "Norby" and "Screen Directors Playhouse."

MONEY ISN'T THE ANSWER IN TV

By GEORGE ROSEN

An inkling as to the astronomical figures being kicked around in television these days can be gleaned from the fact that, over the course of the past five years, more than $25,000,000 has been poured into the Sunday night 8 to 9 slot on NBC-TV in a futile attempt to topple Ed Sullivan from his lofty Trendex-Nielsen perch on CBS. And today, on the eve of the network tossing in the sponge on its "Comedy Hour" and prepping Steve Allen for its newest onslaught vs. Sullivan, the NBC 8 to 9 hour is probably at its lowest ebb since Sullivan started to get "real hot" and move up and up to rule the Sabbath roost.

It's estimated that Colgate spent in the neighborhood of $20,000,000 in time and talent over a four-year course, with even a financial assist from NBC, in the effort to dethrone Sullivan with its successive series of "Colgate Comedy Hour" and "Colgate Variety Hour," only to desert the sinking ship last year as Sullivan's dominance asserted itself more and more on the rating returns. At least another $5,000,000 in sponsorship coin went into this season's participation segments in a return to the "Comedy Hour" format (now being scrapped) plus the one-a-month spec series slotted opposite the columnist-emcee. As with the regular 8 to 9 show, the 90-minute Sunday specs, as far as Nielsen and Trendex are concerned, have rated strictly as "also rans."

True, there were periodic segments over the five-year course, as when Martin & Lewis went into the firing line, when the Colgate showcases moved back into the bigtime, but by and large the Sunday 8 to 9 story goes down as perhaps the biggest coin drainage in tv annals in an attempt to take the play away from a rival network.

Whether Steve Allen can turn the trick where the others failed is considered highly problematical by the trade, particularly since Sullivan is now riding the crest. But, all things considered, since nobody's regarded as invulnerable, once the rival network hits the correct formula, it's just a question how many more millions in sponsorship and network coin it will take before NCB can turn the trick.

Closely approximating the Sunday 8 to 9 story, but this time in reverse, was the Milton Berle Tuesday 8 to 9 saga. Over a period of seven or eight years, as Berle became king of all he surveyed, CBS poured good money after bad, in a desperate but futile try at making a dent in the Berle ratings. However, few sponsors were willing to risk such competition with result that CBS was obliged to take the rap and play it as sustaining time. Even so, it's estimated that the years of the Berle reign cost CBS an approximate $15,000,000 in programming costs and in unrealized sponsorship coin. It wasn't until Phil Silvers showed up with his "You'll Never Get Rich" series that CBS moved in as the new champion.

ALL-STAR GRIDCAST TO GET PABST COIN

Chicago, May 15.

Pabst Brewing has latched onto the television rights to the All-Star football game staged each August in Soldiers Field by Chicago Tribune Charities Inc. This year's contest between the Cleveland Browns pro champs and the collegiate stars to be held Aug. 10 will be televised via ABC-TV, it's understood.

Pabst will share the game down the middle with one or more other bankrollers. Standard Oil of Indiana and Standard of Ohio are likely candidates.

Miner-Schaffner-Cook-Hill's New TV Production Outfit Sets Unique Pattern; Initial Series for Kaiser

Davis, Mathews Co.

In swing with the new trend of tv producers-directors teaming up for their own independent production companies, Donald Davis and Dorothy Mathews are checking off NBC-TV's "Producers' Showcase" at the end of the current season to set up their own production outfit.

Couple were identified this past season with such "Showcase" entries as "Dodsworth," "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Sadler's Wells Ballet" with status of production supervisions. A few years back they helmed CBS-TV's "Studio One."

With Worthington L. (Tony) Miner at the helm as overall executive producer, a new tv production company comprised of four of the medium's top producer-directors, in which all share as stockholders, has been organized. It's a unique-for-tv pattern, somewhat paralleling the ambitiousness of the film industry's top producers who set up independent companies and then make deals with major studios, except in this tv instance it's a foursome operation. A motivating force in incepting the new production operation is Ted Ashley, of the Ashley-Steiner agency, who reps the four principals involved.

In addition to Miner, the company owners and stockholders comprise Frank Schaffner, who is exiting his "Studio One" berth and as a CBS-TV pactee; George Roy Hill, who has just left J. Walter Thompson (he was responsible for the twice-showcased "Night to Remember" on "Kraft Television Theatre"), and Fielder Cook, who initially made his "tv mark" with "Patterns," also a Kraft entry.

New production company's initial venture for the '56-'57 season will involve taking over the production masterminding on the NBC-TV full-hour dramatic showcaser slotted for Tuesday night 9:30. Kaiser Aluminum, via Young & Rubicam, signed on a couple weeks back to underwrite the slot on an alternating basis (with Pontiac's "Playwrights '56" kayoed) starting in July.

Miner himself in his status as exec producer won't be doing any of the individual producer-directorial chores, with Schaffner, Cook and Hill alternating as the producers and directors, each responsible for a minimum of eight shows in the series, and each assuming a status on his individual showcases somewhat paralleling, for example, a John Huston or a William Wyler film production.

Aside from the Tuesday series, the producing company will be free to operate in other network areas as well.

Miner's identity with the new company in no way involves his current four-year deal with NBC, for which he's committed to bring in 22 spec attractions. He's currently repped on the NBC lanes by "Medic" and "Frontier."

Miner, Liebman, Coe to Rotate On Fri. Nite TV Specs

If NBC-TV's blueprint is any indication, Friday would be lifted from its "worst night of the week" status to a groove that can compare favorably with the other nights in next season's programming. As per the system applying to the network's stepped-up Tuesday night agenda, the eve-of-weekend scheduling will have rotating production auspices in a series of every-fourth week 90-minute specs, the first such outsizers to prevail on Friday.

Playing the rotation route will be Max Liebman, Fred Coe and Tony Miner, the latter keyed as overall producer of the Tuesday night series with production-direction units under him. They'll handle straight dramatics, musicals, and kindred legit-type fare in the realigned 8:30 to 10 o'clock slotting. Such scheduling apparently cuts across Hallmark Cards' "Hall of Fame" intentions, Hallmark having eyed Friday in a switch from its Sunday once-a-month specolas. However, there may still be room for the Hallmark shows sandwiched between the three-way specs.

In order to provide that the William Bendix starring "Life of Riley" will not be preempted every month or so, the Gulf-sponsored vidpix situationer will be moved up to 8 in an exchange with Old Gold's "Truth or Consequences," though the latter moves out of the picture with Lennen & Newell hanging onto the 8:30 time for its ciggie client and looking over properties for the fill. Down the line will follow "Big Story" at 9; Campbell's new show for "Star Stage" at 9:30 and the longrunning Gillette Fights" at 10.

For Liebman, the Friday spot is an added chore, though he might be in on several Sunday night hour and a half shows, in addition to his upcoming Monday night at 8:30 "Stanley" series fronting Buddy Hackett, who will buck Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts."

CAMEL, QUAKER OATS EYE CAESAR TV HOUR

Two more sponsors are on the verge of completing negotiations with NBC-TV to give the Sid Caesar "Hour" sellout status in the comedian's shift to the 9 to 10 Saturday night slot next season. R. J. Reynolds (Camel) and Quaker Oats would each take one-third of the segmentation pie on a weekly basis, should the deal jell.

Already in are Knomark Mfg. and Bab-O for the other third on an alternating basis.

Bill Goodheart's NBC Program Spot

William H. (Billy) Goodheart, who helped found the Music Corp. of America with Jules C. Stein and the late William H. (Bill) Stein, is coming out of retirement to join NBC on July 1. He was forefended from entering into any deals where talent negotiations were involved but he did serve with Officials Films Inc. for a spell last year.

Goodheart and RCA-NBC veepee Manie Sacks were longtime associates when the latter was at MCA and was brought into NBC by Sacks to engage in the talent negotiations aspects of the operation under tv chieftain Tom McAvity. Sacks, who incepts most NBC-RCA deals, is now in a general roving administrative chore with company prexy Bobby Sarnoff, hence hasn't the time now for the day-to-day operations on contract negotiations.

UAW'S NETWORK TIME BUY

The United Auto Workers has reserved a half-hour of tv time on NBC for June 10 (Sunday). Slot is 5 o'clock.

Union will devote the stanza to its 50th anniversary hoopla.

Godfrey's Toni Plug Gets Into K & E Prexy Bill Lewis' Hair & Fur Flies

The head of a major ad agency has taken the unusual if perhaps not unprecedented action of complaining to his opposite number at another commission house about the manner in which a competitive commercial was pitched recently. The villain in the piece is CBS-TV's Arthur Godfrey, or at least that's the view of William B. Lewis, prexy of Kenyon & Eckhardt, in the case of Richard Hudnut's New Quick permanent, a K&E client, versus the Toni Co.'s Tip Toni.

Prexy Lewis let loose a barrage in a letter to prexy Don Paul Nathanson, head of North Advertising in Chicago, repping Toni, with copies of the letter sent to R. N. W. Harris, the Toni topper, and J. P. Spang, prez of Gillette, of which Toni is a division. K&E was reported supporting its attack on Godfrey with a press conference scheduled for today (Wed.) at New York's Biltmore Hotel.

Says Lewis:

"I have before me a transcript of a commercial made by Arthur Godfrey for Tip Toni in his television program on Wednesday, May 2. In this commercial, he implies, in the following language, that claims being made for the New Quick product of our client, Richard Hudnut, are false:

"Now, because of this new trend in hair styles, some companies may start trying to tell you that their full size permanents take only half the winding, but don't let anybody fool you. There is a gimmick. They really want you to buy a full-size permanent and use half of it and save the left-over lotion for the next time. But you know left-over lotion is for the birds. That's no good! No matter what kind it is it tends to weaken. It gives weak, washed-out waves.'

The Shoe Fits

"This is obviously an attack upon Richard Hudnut, as no other home permanent possesses the described properties or is being advertised in the described manner. The plain import of this commercial is that unused wave lotion left in the bottle of our client may not be used for another wave.

"Mr. Godfrey's remarks followed by only a few days the appearance of advertising on behalf of Tip Toni which is extrordinarily similar to that of Richard Hudnut's New Quick. The first trade showing of New Quick advertisements appeared early in March. In these advertisements, the chief copy points covered certain advantages of the new product such as the fact that it eliminates 'half the work, half the winding.' And on April 24, Tip Toni ads appeared in the New York Daily News and the New York Journal-American, using the identical words used by New Quick. Incidentally, these print advertisements also include the words: 'Left-over lotions . . . give weak, washed-out waves.'

"It has been demonstrated to the

Benny Sets Chevalier For 'Made in Europe' Shows for Next Season

Jack Benny is the latest of the comics to place the "made in Europe" stamp on some of his CBS-TV programs for next fall. Benny planes for England today (Wed.) with plans to shoot at least four of his half-hours abroad, with interiors to be filmed in England and exteriors on the Continent. He's already set Maurice Chevalier to appear in one show, and is dickering with Kim Novak, currently abroad, and Sir Laurence Olivier, for two other shows.

Benny left N. Y. today, accompanied by Mary Livingstone and Irving Fein, new prez of Benny's J&M Productions, along with a production crew. Benny and Miss Livingstone will stay in Europe till mid-July; Fein returns after a week. While in England, Benny will do a one-hour variety show for British television.

Adlai, Estes TV Debate

First national television debate between the two most active contenders for the Democratic Presidential nomination, Adlai Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver, takes place on ABC-TV May 21 from 10 to 11. Debate will originate in Miami, where the two aspirants are fighting a Florida primary battle, with an undesignated ABC commentator to serve as moderator.

Debate was set up by ABC prez Bob Kintner, who last month extended invitations to both to debate the issues free of charge on the web. Okays came back last week.

Bond Ankles WABD News

Bond clothiers is ankling its 11 p.m. news strip on WABD, N.Y., in a fortnight. Mike Wallace, who has fronted this news show for Bond for past several months, will continue in the 7 p.m. quarter-hour for the haberdasher.

Bond, among the last bankrollers to quit the dissolved Blow agency, has no plans for the time to quit the early Wallace stanza, though switching agencies.

'CBS Cartoon Theatre' Vs. 'Disneyland' Case of Fighting Fire With Fire

With the Wednesday night "Brave Eagle" series having drawn a sponsorship blank throughout the year in CBS-TV's 7:30-8 kidstrip venture, the network is turning to cartoons as a more likely lure for sponsor interest. As of June 13, the network is installing "CBS Cartoon Theatre," comprising cartoons from the vast Paul Terry library which the web bought out recently, with Dick Van Dyke as the host.

Slotting, which is definite for the summer and is on the "hopeful" list for the fall, is a case of fighting fire with fire. 'Twasn't that "Brave Eagle" got an adverse reception, but that it was opposite "Disneyland" that caused the client blank, so CBS is now going to compete on Disney's own terms, that is, with the animated stuff. Characters listed for the display are "Heckle & Jeckle," "Gandy Goose," "Sour Puss," "Dinky Duck" and "Little Roquefort." Dyke's role will be integrated so the emcee can appear to converse with the animated characters.

CBS-TV has a library of 1,100 cartoons from which to choose, less a group of 156 turned over to its CBS Television Film Sales subsid for station sales and those used on the Saturday morning "Mighty Mouse Playhouse." Network bought up all the assets of Terrytoons Inc. in a $5,000,000 deal this winter. New show will be produced by Michel M. Grilikhes, directed by Howard T. Magwood and scripted by Bill Gammie.

Dundes' Advance 0.0.

Jules Dundes, newly-appointed v.p. over sales promotion, advertising and promotion for CBS Radio, planed in and out of N. Y. last week for a quickie look at the operation and homeoffice huddles with CBS Radio prez Arthur Hull Hayes.

He flew back to San Francisco, where he's been general manager of KCBS, the Columbia o&o, on Friday (11), and returns to N. Y. June 18 to take over the v.p. slot.

How the New Nielsens Shape Up

CBS copped seven out of 10 in the Total Audience category and eight out of 10 in the Average Audience standings in the national Nielsen report for the second half of April. Only NBC reps in the TA were Perry Como and "Dragnet," while the latter soloed in the AA lineup. ABC's "Disneyland" was represented in both. Ratings cover the two weeks ended April 21.

GENE AUTRY ANKLES CBS

Winds Up 16-Year Association With Web & Wrigley

Hollywood, May 15.

Gene Autry will no longer be a-lopin' down the CBS Radio trail at the end of this season, winding up an association with the net and with sponsoring Wrigley gum that has lasted over 16 years. Dissatisfaction with recent shows was said to be the reason for the cancellation, capped by rejection by CBS of the May 6 program. A repeat show was substituted.

Ed Simmons of Ruthrauff & Ryan Agency (for Wrigley) and Frank Atlas of CBS widwest division are in town winding up the details of the washup.

Wesson & Polk's Guest Shot on CBS-TV Paves Way for NBC Contract

NBC has signed the new comedy team of Wesson & Polk to a long-term pact, and will spot the pair in guest shots throughout the summer with an eye toward a buildup for a show of their own next year. Pair, who wound up at Le Ruban Bleu, N. Y., comprises Gene Wesson (brother of comic Dick Wesson) and Gordon Polk, ex-Benny Goodman band vocalist.

Strangely enough, the team was brought to the attention of Tom McAvity, v.p. in charge of NBC-TV, through a guest shot on CBS-TV. Pair was appearing on the Garry Moore show, when McAvity, tipped by their agent, tuned in for an o.o. He then arranged to sign them on a one-year deal with options for seven years, on a yearly guarantee basis. NBC has also signed George Gobel via an appearance on the Moore show. Wesson & Polk deal was set by Sy Fisher of the Frank Cooper agency, which itself had only signed on the comics a couple of weeks ago.

Ed Sullivan Named Chairman in Acad Bid For TV Stature

Ed Sullivan was elected chairman by the board of governors of the newly-founded Academy of Television Arts & Sciences at the Stork Club Monday (14) night. The board also elected four other officers and laid the groundwork to meet with the officers of the West Coast chapter, probably in some centrally situated spot such as Chicago or St. Louis.

Max Liebman was elected 1st vice-chairman; Mark Goodson, second vice-chairman; Lawrence Langner, who is abroad at present, treasurer; William Bratter, secretary. This group and Sullivan will be the ones who meet with Johnny Mercer, new Coast topper, and his officers, to pick the national prexy. At the central meeting, it is also expected that both chapters will iron out the differences in their constitutions and by-laws.

Elected chairman of standing committees were: Tex McCrary, membership; Royal Blakemen, legal; Syd Eiges, publicity; Marlo Lewis and Robert Lewine, awards; Faye Emerson and Henry White, activities. These committee heads will sit on the board of governors, along with the officers. Bratter, McCrary, Langner and Blakemen, who were not elected to the original board a week ago, bring the total board of governor members to 44.

The initial board of governors of the ATLAS eastern branch were elected by 300 members at the first meeting a week ago. The session also witnessed several N. Y. videoites take a rap at the Emmy award structure. Five changes in the way they will be given next season were recommended.

A proposal by Screen Gems of ficer Henry White was establishment of a tv actors' studio to train video thesps, a long-range proposition. Of more immediate nature were the recommendations on the awards:

(1) Mark Goodson suggested the 42 categories be streamlined to 25. Goodson, finding "many faults," said that theatrical performances which ultimately hit tv should be eliminated from voting. He cited

NBC Woos GF For Bolger; 140G Per

General Foods may be brought into the NBC-TV camp to take over all or part of the 16 Ray Bolger "Washington Square" all-live shows headed for next season's Tuesday 8 to 9 slot (in a rotation with Dinah Shore, Bob Hope, et al.). The network has been pitching the Bolger show at GF for $140,000 (net), parlaying this with a foursome of Martin & Lewis stanzas. The latter are said to be tabbed at $250,000 each, however, so General Foods isn't exactly enthusiastic. For that matter, the comedy team has been reported snubbing the "also-ran" Tuesday position, although the quarter-million figure might change their thinking.

Bolger show is a William Morris Agency-William A. Bacher package, latter producing.

General Foods is understood set for the network's 7 p.m. Sunday slot being vacated by Chrysler's "It's a Great Life." No format set.

Inter-American B'casters Carry On Fight Against The 'Little Tyrants'

By ART WOODSTONE

A relatively microscopic group of men, who met in N. Y. last week, figure prominently in maintaining the free-enterprise broadcast system on two continents. Recognizing the extent of their influence and that the work they're doing can have far reaching economic effects on the U. S. radio and tv system, the group was feted grandly by some of this country's own influential organizations and corporations.

Though he's not the head of the group, one of its major sparkplugs is Don Emilio Azcarraga, "Mr. Big" in Mexican broadcasting. The group is the Inter-American Assn. of Broadcasters, a 10-year-old body with members repping radio-tv interests in about 10 countries, including the U. S. Azcarraga portrayed the job of Assosiacion Interamericana de Radio Defusion, as it is also known, as one consisting almost entirely of "fighting little tyrants."

A man in his middle years and vibrant for all his bulk, Azcarraga explained that IAAB members travel from one country to another throughout Central and South America at their own expense to convince the powers-that-be that radio and tv should operate as free commercial enterprises. He believes that despite its slow start, if IAAB wasn't begun, "I don't think that five years later the United States wouldn't have had trouble."

Blasts State-owned Setups

The kind of trouble he's talking about is the kind he feels comes from too much government control. Of course, there were and still are the Latin dictators, who give him and his cause a stiff pain, but he also went on record against the likes of Canadian Broadcasting Corp., the government-run body north of our own border, and British Broadcasting System, and Italy. He had a question: "Where would we be if we were all state-owned?"

"Look at commercial tv in six months in England—beating the veteran (BBC). An individual business man will take a chance and maybe make a damned fool of himself, but he's no worse off than if he hadn't tried. By trying you find new and good things," Azcarraga remarked triumphantly. He went on: "But a group of mediocre schoolteachers and politicians, in their bureaucracy, are afraid."

Azcarraga firmly maintains that some government regulation is good, but he's as firm in maintaining that it mustn't get out of hand.

While it's true North American business interests visualize the economic advantages in the system advocated by IAAB, Azcarraga and his cronies state they're fighting a battle of principle, though they are aware of the economics involved too. "We have been vaccinated with the principle of defending free radio and free tv throughout the world."

At the bottom of the whole blueprint is the idea that excessive government control limits the number of radio and tv stations, and with this tight numerical restriction comes the lack of freedom of expression. Azcarraga believes that the U. S. firms which threw bashes in IAAB's behalf last week "mostly had nothing to sell; they were interested in our principles." Even if he is right about the principles part, it's still considered possible in some quarters that companies like United Press, Associated Press, Broadcast Music Inc. can foresee the opening up of broadcasting in all of South and Central America as a new source of revenue.

Azcarraga said that during the conclaves last week, both NBC and ABC promised full support to the organization. Nonetheless, there are still some U. S. companies in broadcasting and affiliated lines which go mute about offering support. Azcarraga pointedly mentioned that set and equipment manufacturers, asked for their aid as long as two years ago, are still withholding it. And that's a mistake, he feels, since support from them might help develop more sta-

NBC-TV's Politico Package Near SRO

NBC-TV is now near SRO status on its political convention-election night coverage with the pacting of Oldsmobile for one-third sponsorship. With RCA and Sunbeam already in for a quarter each, this brings the five-sixths-sold mark. Network is now trying to convince Sunbeam and RCA to expand their stake to one-third each, so as to put the final wraps on the deal.

Oldsmobile contract, via D. P. Brother agency, restores some of the coin lost in the automaker's cutback in its Saturday night spec schedule next season. Instead of continuing on a one-a-month schedule as in the past, Olds will buy a special events type of coverage, calling for intermittent Saturday night sponsorship of awards ceremonies (Oscar, Emmy, etc.) plus certain "specials" such as the Esther Williams aquacade which NBC will tour this summer.

FBI SPREADS ITS TV WINGS

TV Monopoly on Scenery, Too?

Washington, May 15.

Testimony that the NBC and CBS networks have squeezed out the indie suppliers of scenery for tv productions was given to the committee by Peter J. Rotondo of New York, David Steinberg of Imperial Scenic Studios of Fort Lee, N. J., and Mrs. Lucille Ashworth of Chester Rakeman Scenic Studios of New York.

Rotondo charged that the nets "don't want any independent factors in the production, directing, designing or staging of shows to be seen over their networks." The webs, he said, "want to control all these factors so that they will have a complete monopoly over both exhibition and production of everything that will be televized over their facilities."

He said that the "monopoly evils" which were eliminated from the legitimate theatre and the motion pictures now threaten tv. He urged that the webs be divorced from the producion of tv except for sustaining shows.

Steinberg testified his gross declined from $345,000 in 1953 to $71,000 last year as the networks got into the production business. He charged the nets with utilizing "every unfair tactic possible" to extend control. Elimination of the indies in tv production, he predicted, will result in "a completely monolithic industry with sponsors allowed to pay for and the set owners allowed to watch what tv network bigwigs decree."

Mrs. Ashworth testified her company's business with CBS dwindled from $276,000 in 1951 to $3,200 in 1954 as the network went into scenery operations on a large scale. She said the same has happened with NBC.

Red China Captive a Summer Sub

Father Rigney Gets Bishop Sheen's Chi Slot in Bid To Free Others

Chicago, May 15.

Father Harold Rigney, Catholic priest who spent four years in Communist China prisons before being released last September, is set for a 13-week public service program on WBKB, occupying the Thursday night slot held by Bishop Fulton J. Sheen's ABC-TV show during the regular season.

Father Rigney will use the series, to start June 7, to backstop the "Freedom Crusade" he's launched to secure the release of the 13 American clerics and businessmen still held in Red China jails.

According to the U. S. State Department, which unsuccessfully interceded in behalf of the jailed Americans, the prelate's own release was a result of Chicago newspaper publicity and the flood of letters sent by midwesterners direct to China's Mao Tse-Tung in Pekin. In addition to describing his own prison experiences with the accompanying torture and brainwashing, Father Rigney will ask viewers to send personal appeals to Mao asking him to implement his earlier promise to free the 13 U. S. citizens.

Father Rigney is shooting for at least 200,000 letters from the WBKB series, but his goal is over 20,000,000 on a national basis. There is talk of putting him on the network to give his "Crusade" cross-country exposure, but it's understood John Daly, ABC's news and special events veep, is hesitant about slotting another priest in the Bishop Sheen hiatus period.

However, WBKB v.p. Sterling (Red) Quinlan said he'd make kine-

'SRO' Panel Show Gets CBS Audition

CBS-TV on Sunday night (13) auditioned a show biz panel program titled "SRO" which, if it wins the favor of the network program brass, will show up on the web's new fall roster. It's a Lester Lewis package with Henry Morgan as the moderator.

Permanent panelists include Mary Healy, Skitch Henderson, Georgie Price, Nancy Walker and June Lockhart. Cornelia Otis Skinner appeared as the guest on the teletranscription runoff for network approval. If show goes on, it will originate as a live New York entry.

"SRO" has a strictly show biz format and integrated into the inevitable q&a pattern of panel shows will be vignette performances by weekly guest celebs.

Most Happy Pappy

At the 11th hour, Mort Hochstein, NBC-TV publicity writer, had to relinquish a pair of hard-won seats for "Most Happy Fella," the Broadway musical, to fill another engagement last week (9).

His wife gave birth to a boy.

Westinghouse Pulls a Switch, Buys NBC Time

Westinghouse, which has been "going steady" with CBS-TV since the medium got into the bigtime—with one limited exception — has turncoated by turning over some business to NBC-TV. The electronics outfit, thrown for millions in losses as result of its recent long strike, has launched an institutional campaign on NBC's "Today" and "Tonight" participating shows. Altogether, there will be 14 Westinghouse plugs on the twosome—starting last week and staggered to early August.

The "no sell" pitches—some of them live—are calculated to recruit technical personnel, accenting engineers, into the Westinghouse camp. One of the live spots fronts engineers from the company's schools waxing enthusiastic about "how great" it is to work at Westinghouse and how the company carries out its educational program.

Westinghouse, long on CBS with "Studio One" and specials and sponsor of the $5,000,000 Demo-GOP Chi & Frisco conventions this year, as it was for the 1952 Presidential candidate fuss, has been repped on NBC before; but that was in "ancient tv," back in 1951 when it underwrote the 10 games on the NCAA grid schedule. The Westinghouse "Today" and "Tonight" institutionals come out of a Baltitmore ad agency, H. W. Buddemeier. McCann-Erickson is the regular commission house in tv.

ABC-TV's Summer Polka

Chicago, May 15.

"It's Polka Time," WBKB's newest pride and joy, has gotten the nod to do summer duty on the parent ABC-TV web come July 13.

Polka display, which has been garnering mounting ratings since its local debut a couple months ago, is to get a 13-week exposure in the Friday night 9 to 9:30 slot currently held down by "Ethel & Albert."

SLEUTHS CASING MADISON AVE.

Network apprehension has been mounting over the alleged "program monopoly" rap as FBI agents over the past week swooped down in earnest on the Madison Ave. ad agency and talent agency boys to ferret out whatever info they can get. Apparently the sleuths with the FBI calling cards are all over the lot these days, determined to "get the facts" in the Justice Dept. phase of the cumulative investigations aimed at the tv networks.

If the FBI men aren't getting 100% cooperation around the agencies and the package houses—even though the agencies and the package impresarios would benefit from any network divestment of power—it doesn't come as too much of a surprise. They have to live with the networks, day after day after day, and obviously they don't want to be put in any compromising position which might some day embarrass them with the webs, despite all the "secret info" assurances.

But this hasn't blinded the networks to the fact that, as with any investigation, there are always enough guys around who are willing to talk and make a case for the Justice Dept.

If there were any doubts that the D. C. inquisitors mean business, they've long since been removed. In some informed quarters they're laying odds that the networks are going to get the works—call it divorcement or what else. The high web echelons makes no bones as to the seriousness of their plight, and it's considered more than accidental that the network program factotums are exercising meticulous care in preparing next season's rosters, buying up outside shows wherever possible. The networks' excuse that "we find our own projected series wanting compared to these outside packages" is considered a lame excuse at best.

Bealle Moves Up To TV-Radio Slot at K&E As Crider's Successor

Kenyon & Eckhardt moved up James S. Bealle to the key post of v.p. in charge of radio-tv to fill the vacancy created by the departure of Wick Crider from the agency. Bealle, who had been assistant director of the radio-tv department under Crider since September of 1954, prior to which he had been in program development with BBD&O.

At the same time, agency named Clinton F. Wheeler associate director of the department. Wheeler is already a v.p., having been with K&E since 1953 as an account exec and been elected a veep last September. He was formerly with WGN, Chicago.

KNIGHT'S 'PEPPY POWWOW'

Governor Wants TV Views to Get Real Zingy GOP Convention

Washington, May 15.

California's Gov. Goodwin Knight wants to see the G.O.P. National Convention, which will be held in Frisco in late August, livened up so as to present the best possible program to television viewers.

Knight, in Washington last week to testify on flood control legislation affecting his state, discussed the convention with Leonard Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee. Knight told newsmen later that he wants it to be a peppy convention. Within the next few weeks, he added, he expects to talk the matter over some more with Hall, who will be in San Francisco on arrangements.

Wilbur Havens Sez NBC Made 'Object Lesson' of Him in Richmond Roughing; Cites Rival's RCA Equipment Purchase

Washington, May 15.

Wilbur M. Havens, prexy of WTVR (TV) in Richmond, Va., told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee today (Tues.) that NBC "dropped us like a hot potato" without explanation last June when the second tv station, WXEX-TV, got its permit. But the reason for the shift, Havens testified, was "clear enough." The network, he said, "terminated our affiliation as an object lesson to show all its other affiliates what happens to a station that stands up to the network."

Just two weeks before the shift in affiliations, Havens said, WXEX switched its purchase of $700,000 worth of station equipment from DuMont to RCA. Havens urged the Committee or the Dept. of Justice to investigate this "coincidence."

Even after its affiliation agreement expired, Havens testified, NBC tried to force WTVR to carry its programs until WXEX was ready for operation. The network, he said, refused to permit any CBS programs to go over the telephone loop it controlled and it became necessary to construct a duplicate loop to the studios which was finished only hours before the deadline.

"But NBC was not through with us yet," Havens said. The network attempted to prevent the sponsors of "Life of Riley" to continue the show on WTVR until WXEX went on the air. Finally, he said, the show was shifted through the "must buy" route. Sponsors of other shows, he said, were compelled to shift to WXEX under the "must buy" policy as a condition of purchasing time on NBC affiliations in 50 other markets.

Prior to the loss of its affiliation, Havens said, WTVR used 21 NBC shows out of 28 network shows during prime evening hours. But NBC, he said, insisted that all its programs be carried despite the fact WTVR was the only station in the Richmond area.

The loss of affiliation, he said, came six months after WTVR refused to drop the "Voice of Firestone" when it was shifted to ABC and substitute Sid Caesar live in

32-Month-Old Has Been

Boston, May 15.

A two-year, eight-month-old femme cutie who "outgrew" her part on WBZ-TV's "Swan Boat" morning show has been turned down by the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security for unemployment benefits.

Little Deborah Anne Huse of Chelmsford, who played "Miss Nancy" in a playpen Monday through Fridays for 21 weeks on tv grew so fast that the station canceled her and auditioned a new crop of moppets.

Her mother, Mrs. Robert C. Huse, says she intends to continue the battle to get unemployment pay, through the courts. The case may well set a precedent for young tv performers who suddenly find themselves out of work.

Deborah Anne was the youngest applicant on record in this state for unemployment benefits.

Colgate in Mass Daytime Walkout; NBC Takes Rap

Mass walkaway from its NBC-TV daytime investments by Colgate-Palmolive spells the end of one of the network's segments and means a probable axe for another. Damage had already been done on a third. "Modern Romances" and "Feather Your Nest," on which Colgate had been the sole sponsor, look to be on their way out, while "Howdy Doody" had already been slated to shift to a half-hour Saturday mornings and the Colgate cancellation won't hit it too badly.

Specifically, Colgate dropped three quarter-hours on "Nest," three a week on "Romances," one on "Howdy." All cancellations are effective at the end of June, which means the shows will ride till the summer. "Nest" looks like it's on the way out, but no replacement set yet. As for "Romances," the network, happy with its success on the 4:30-5 "Queen for a Day," will probably expand "Queen" to embrace 45 minutes, including the 15 from Romances." Not certain is whether "Queen" will then run from 4 to 4:45 or 4:15-5 p.m. "Howdy," having been cut back from five half-hours a week to one (Saturday 10-10:30, starting June 16), will be in good commercial shape, with Consolidated Baking having renewed for a quarter-hour weekly, Standard Brands taking a hiatus on its alternate-week quarter-hour but expressing interest in returning in the fall, and-Bauer & Black not sure yet about its alternate-week quarter hour. If B&B and Standard Brands return, it will be SRO.

Colgate dropped the daytimers to spend some more coin in evening tv. It's currently represented only by "The Millionaire" on CBS-TV, but makes wide use of spot announcements. As for fall nighttime plans, it has an option out on half-sponsorship of "Wire Service" on ABC-TV.

Paar's NBC Huddles

Jack Paar has been huddling with NBC-TV execs during the past week with an eye toward a new network allegiance. There's no decision yet.

Paar's daytime tv show was recently axed by CBS, along with that of Robert Q. Lewis, whose future plans are unresolved.

Russ Morgan New P&G Entry for Sat.

Hollywood, May 15.

P&G has bought "The Russ Morgan Show" to go into the CBS-TV time slot currently occupied by the Janis Paige series, "It's Always Jan." "Jan" is exiting the web, to be replaced next season by "Jeannie," Jeannie Carson starrer filmed by Four Star Productions.

Morgan half-hour, which will originate from N. Y., will be on at 9:30 p. m. Saturday nights, and seen on 104 CBS channels. Prell Shampoo will be plugged on the show.
